My Faith

By CHARLES POOLE CLEAVES

No pyramid, no pile
Of block on block above the street
No secret hoard shall mark my life complete
Nor daily record, penned beyond the skies
By a just hand that measures a just fee:

But what I do the while
I follow in the pathway of Christ's feet—
His human life my daily judgment seat;
What better I may make the world, His life
Singing through mine amid the toil and strife
And what, His life in mine, I yet may be Such life is living! This God trusts to me.

And if in afternoon
Or evening I may look upon
Some fruit of what my heart and hands have done
And happier ways in human life may see;

And if there lies
Something beyond our ken (like Earth's dear June,
When birches whisper and the redstart flits
Above the secret where his matron sits
And finches trail their song across the skies,)
Where with the flesh the ill and evil dies
And life still flowers and fruits above the sod;
I shall be living! This I trust to God.

OUR REIGN OF TERROR

By HENRY GEKELER

O brothers, Briton, Teuton, Frank and Slav,
We other Christian nations wonder now,
If we are Christian deeper than our skin,
Is this a new Crusade that leads you forth
To rescue, not Christ's unknown, empty tomb,
But ripened culture of the Christian years?
And do ye ply your task with fire and sword?
Will ye serve Christ with outworn Moslem tools?
If ye sow hate, shall ye not harvest hate,
The wind of hate swollen to whirlwind blast?
Beware! lest war bring forth yet other wars;
"Who takes the sword shall perish by the sword."
The age-long fear of war still drives to war,
The peoples are suspicious, each fears each;
This constant Reign of Terror, shall it never end?
Are our statesmen bankrupt? Or are they mad with pride?
Oh! much we've suffered in behalf of war;
When shall we learn to sacrifice for peace?

A NEW OFFER

The American Friend will be sent to new subscribers until January 1, 1918, for the price of a year's subscription, which is $1.50. Pastors, young Friends' organizations, C. E. societies and others interested will please take note of this splendid offer.

There are many meetings which failed to take advantage of the last offer, which will find a good many Friends' families interested in this offer if only a canvass of the congregation can be made. We have every reason to believe that if all Friends' meetings will take advantage of the opportunity afforded by this offer, not fewer than a thousand new subscribers can be added to our lists during September and October.

The canvass should be begun now, however, so that subscribers will get the benefit of a longer time during which to receive the paper. We will be glad to send sample copies upon request to be used in making the canvass. We are satisfied that there are some families in every neighborhood whose subscriptions can be secured under this offer with the proper effort. The American Friend, which is the property of the Five Years Meeting, cannot afford to keep an agent in the field continuously and must, therefore, trust to the loving service of interested Friends in every meeting.

ODDS AND ENDS

Remember that the Committee on Arrangements for the Five Years Meeting next year solicits suggestions about the subjects to be considered and the manner of their consideration. Send suggestions to the Secretary, L. Hollingsworth Wood, 20 Nassau Street, New York City.

Remember that a new subscription to The American Friend for one year, together with Charles M. Woodman's book, "The Present Day Message of Quakerism," can be secured for $2.00. Address The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

A number of people are neglecting to send in their orders for the printed proceedings of the Men's Conference, held at Richmond, Indiana, last October. A copy of these proceedings ought to be in every Friend's home. Price, paper cover, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Address The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

Friends throughout America should not forget the burdens which are upon English Friends in caring for the war sufferers. This need increases rather than diminishes and English Friends are feeling the burden of the work more than ever. The American Friend will gladly receive and forward any contributions for this purpose. Address The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

Canada Yearly Meeting is in session this week at Newmarket. Western Yearly Meeting will be in session at Plainfield, Indiana, September 12-18. Indiana Yearly Meeting will be in session at Richmond September 18-24. Kansas Yearly Meeting will be in session at Wichita October 3-9. Baltimore Yearly Meeting will be in session at Baltimore, Md., November 17-22.

All Friends' meetings in Indiana are asked to observe the state centennial day on October 8. It is hoped that every meeting will respond by using the program printed in this week's American Friend.

SOUL CONFIDENCE

A young man, distressed about his soul, confided in a friend. The friend said: "Did you ever learn to float?" "Yes, I did," was the surprised reply. "And did you find it easy to learn?" "Not at first," he answered. "What was the difficulty?" his friend pursued. "Well, the fact was I could not lie still; I could not believe or realize that the water would hold me up without any effort of my own, so I always began to struggle, and, of course, down I went at once." "And then?"

"Then I found out that I must give up the struggle, and just rest on the strength of the water to bear me up. It was easy enough after that; I was able to lie back in the fullest confidence that I should never sink." "And is not God's word more worthy of your trust than the changeable sea? He does not bid you wait for feelings; He commands you to rest in Him, to believe His word, and accept His gift."—Selected.

Dare We Be Christians?

Man's first responsibility, both to God and to man, demands that he shall be positively, constructively Christian. The potentiality of Paul's appeal to the beloved Gentile churches lay in the quality of his own life. With utter abandon he gave himself over both to live and to minister according to the ideals of his risen Lord. He himself shrank from none of the consequences of declaring the whole counsel of God, and so fully did he meet the personal obligations involved in the full-orbed gospel of his ministry that he could say, "I am pure from the blood of all men." The jingle of the guinea had never swerved him from the path of gospel rectitude, nor had the probabilities of being misunderstood and maligned turned him a hair's breadth from declaring "anything that was profitable." To both Jews and Greeks the Apostle was an ensample of the manifold grace of God, as typifying the practical incorporation of gospel truth in human life.

The call of the gospel is first for a clean soul as the prerequisite of a clean life. Good morals are not an end in themselves, except as they are the fruit of good character. The Christian leaven in society is the Godly quality of its saints. The redemptive element for human delinquency everywhere is salvation through Jesus Christ, operating upon life and making it a new creation. The new birth is not a doctrine but an experience, and when exemplified in personality speaks with power both in word and in deed. Of such stock were the martyrs, who, rather than give up their faith in God and their communion with him, went smilingly to death with songs upon their lips and melody in their hearts. The germ of a new-born internationalism is a new-born personality, the multiplication of which will inevitably work a revolution in every department of the social order of the world. A purified soul, revealing itself in purified life, is God's best agency for making this old world better.

The supreme need of the world is a higher standard of Christian living as the basis of a more efficient ministry and service. The church is thrusting itself into bondage through its meager acceptance of the whole teachings of Jesus as binding upon human society. As a writer has put it, the church is not an accessory of the state, but is the body of Christ. At a time when the popular appeal is for Americanism, the church should show its leadership and power by flinging to the breeze its banner of a Christianized Americanism. The church can never consent to the doctrine, "my country, right or wrong," for it can no more fellowship with evil collectively than individually. The church cannot concern itself with quality and holiness in personality, so long as it selects men for deacons and elders whose business or professional or social life belies their professions in the sanctuary.

Walter Rauschenbusch has challenged the world by the query, "Dare We Be Christians?" It is in no captious spirit that we raise the question whether or not the church itself dare to be Christian in the fullest sense of the term, not alone in its ideals; but in its practice. All too frequently the world sets the standards of the church and the church acquiesces all too readily upon the grounds of seeming expediency. But the church, which has to do with the moral and spiritual values of men, cannot subject itself to the rule of expediency, except that in the long run the rule of right is always the most expedient. With what frequency does the church refuse to fellowship with men and women whose delinquencies in the business or political or social world are known to many, although veiled by their professions of probity as members of the church? By so much as the church condones delinquency in life and deportment by so much does it forge the chains of its own bondage to un-Christian ideals, and thereby pauperizes itself beyond the hope of a remedy.

Not alone the world, but the church needs to heed these words of Rauschenbusch: "Every man can profit by the historical influences of Christianity and be a passive pensioner on its vested funds. But it clearly needs active personal agents who will incarnate its vitalities, propagate its principles, liberate its undeveloped forces, purify its doctrine, and extend the sway of its faith in love over new realms of social life. Dare we be such men? Dare we be Christians? Those who take up the propaganda of love and substitute freedom and fraternity for coercion and class differences in social life are the pioneers of the kingdom of God; for the reign of the God of love will be fulfilled in a life of humanity organized on the basis of solidarity and love."

The Next Step

By WILBUR K. THOMAS

A number of people who say they believe in absolute non-resistance are actively supporting the League to Enforce Peace, because, they claim, it offers the "next step" toward universal Peace. They assert that at present man is a fighting animal and until a different spirit is created within him, any regulation of his fighting is a step in advance. Support is given the League, "as the compromise measure best adapted, at present, to unite people of many minds in opposition to war," and "the probable next public step forward." This claim is made very generally by the members of the League and, therefore, should receive careful consideration.

The "Next Step" must be a step forward and in harmony with our religious faith. Does the league offer a real step forward or is it a conscience salve? The first, second and fourth proposals have to do with the question of arbitration (See American Friend 8/10th, p. 614). These are very good. The point to note here, however, is that they offer nothing new. Nations have been stepping in this direction for several years. The Hague tribunal and other International Courts have settled a number of disputes by arbitration. The Council of Conciliation is a slight change for the better, but as the signatory powers recognize that there are non-justiciable questions, and in the end each nation is left to decide for itself just what it will do, even this is of a doubtful benefit. There is no ground for calling these three proposals the "next step."

The real claim to originality lies in the third proposal. Here the signatory powers bind themselves to use their military and economic forces against any one of their number that engages in war against another member without having first submitted its case to the International Court. Is this a "next step"? If so, the "next step" is a pooling of the military and naval interests of a larger or smaller group of nations for mutual protection against twenty-four-hour ultimatums. It would be good for nations to think things over before going to war, but the plan, instead of disapproving of the military and naval policies of the various nations, assumes that such can be used in the cause of righteousness. In other words, the league gives moral support to war. Is this a step forward? It is no more than proclaiming that certain wars can be just. Many a man in the trenches of Europe is fighting a "holy war" or "for a righteous cause," but hellish war is not made sacred by calling it holy. It is no step forward for a "non-resistant" to sanction war under certain circumstances.

First thought suggests that this pooling of interests would result in a decrease of armaments, but the League makes no such suggestion. Pres. Lowell, chairman of the Executive Committee of the League, says that the United States, for instance, would need "a larger force of men trained for arms, more munitions of war on hand, and better means of producing them rapidly." If the League's proposals met with such favor that England, France, Russia, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Servia and the rest of the present Allies and the United States became signatory powers, it is quite evident that there could be no decrease in the armaments of the several nations. It would only increase the armaments of the world. That commercial interests and fear will prevent war has been forever exploded by this war. Many a prophet said such things could never be. Such a scheme is only a proposal to play with the fire on a more gigantic scale and if such is the next step, we should begin immediately to prepare for the next conflagration. The compromise non-resistant would not have to step far to get into the war, for, according to his scheme, it would be a righteous war.

One other thing must be noted. The League to Enforce Peace, as an organization, has stood by without one word of protest and has seen our Congress put through the greatest military bill ever known in the history of the world. They have blinded the eyes of many people who are pacifists at heart, and played directly into the hands of the military party. The action of the League, as an official body, certainly implies that peace depends upon armaments.

What is the "Next Step"? From the pacifist point of view, it is not the plan of the League to Enforce Peace. The next step must be in harmony with our religious faith. We are Christians, professing to be followers of the lowly and powerful Nazarene. We are Friends, representing a Society which has borne an uncompromising testimony against war for over two hundred and fifty years. Our first concern is not what the munition maker is going to do, or what the man whose living depends upon the continuance of the military system is going to do, or what the non-Christian officials in our governments are going to do, for "what is that to thee?" The next step must be in complete harmony with our faith and the one sure means of bringing permanent peace. The compromise measure of the League does not meet this need.

The "next step," negatively, is by engaging in such work as will do away with our entire military system, the sooner the better. The horses and chariots of Egypt or Syria are no more effective today than they were in the day of Isaiah. We cannot propose peace to other nations, until we show by our actions that we believe in it ourselves. Of course we would suffer as a nation. But what of it? Are we destined to found another world Empire in the western world to rise and fall as Rome of old, or, as the foremost representative of the new world, show a new way to the old world?

Positively, the "next step" is to live in that spirit and power, as George Fox said, "that taketh away the occasion of all war." Naturally this will keep us out of dirty politics, but it will give us power. Such power will be the fulfillment of the wonderful promises of Scripture. For, unless we can accept at their face value Psalms 23 and 91, we should close up our Bibles and confess that we have been duped. This kind of a life is the only effective means of bringing peace to the earth. Guns will not do it. It is the only way to bring about such a change in our social and industrial life that the causes of war will be eradicated.

Such a course is not popular and will not "unite people of many minds." It would be more pleasant to stand with the Pharises and be well thought of by men, but in the meantime the workers of evil would grow stronger. The kingdom of heaven comes only by the way of the cross. It is a slow process, like the seed and the yeast, but sure. Men get impatient and wish for a bomb or a sixteen-inch gun or fire from heaven in order to rid the world of evil all at once. Such a process, however, destroys both wheat and tares. A few, like in the days of Sodom and Gomorrah, can still save the world from destruction. They will lose their lives in doing it, but what of it? When we ask our Master concerning our own personal health, wealth, home, wife, children, friends or country, he invariably answers, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me."

THE SPIRIT OF TEACHING

By HOMER J. COPPOCK

In view of the fact that many Friends are interested in teaching and a number of our members are soon to take up again, or for the first time, the duties of instructor, it may be of some value to consider what may enter into the true spirit of teaching. It is not the writer's purpose to discuss methods, but only to call attention to some things that have been said about the profession which throw into bold relief the motives and principles that determine the spirit of the teacher.

The first is a quotation from an article by Dr. Frank Crane which was published in answer to a letter asking him to express his opinion on the teaching profession. Among other things he said: "Of all the professions in the world, undoubtedly the greatest is teaching, whether reckoned by the results upon others or the results upon yourself. The most valuable property a man can have is what Bushnell has called 'the property right in souls.' All forceful men are creators. The business man creates one kind of values, the artist another, but the best kind of all are those values created by the teachers; they consist in character, training, thought-power and soul-strength. To clear up the ideas of others, to awaken high enthusiasms in them, to equip their minds against false reasoning and clap-trap, and to render them vigorous and skillful, is the very best business known. If you like that sort of thing, if it makes you content, if you realize the wonder and nobleness of it, then teach * * *. But it takes a superior mind to feel this. And unless you belong to the real aristocracy of souls you had better let teaching alone, and go into the great North American game of money-making."

Dr. Crane seems to have sounded the key note. A teacher has found the very essence of the spirit of teaching if he can count all other results secondary to that of creating "thought-power and soul-strength."

It is well also to think upon the teacher's sphere of activity. There is a fine statement regarding this in a bulletin issued by the United States Bureau of Education in which it quotes from a publication of the Georgia Club. It is in part as follows: "The Georgia Club holds as an ideal the teacher who reads and thinks, observes and serves his community far beyond the walls of his school-room; who claims and exercises part and lot in the life of his community as a citizen as well as a teacher; who owns his own home, drives his tent pegs down deep and shares in the task of community upkeep and upbuilding."

This high standard is not beyond us and along this line many of us are failing. We plead lack of time but too often it is an excuse rather than a reason. The Kingdom of God is weak and faltering in some communities largely because the teachers of those communities have not taken an active interest especially in religious and civic affairs.

It may be that the failure to create right values and fill the whole sphere of usefulness is due to a lack of education,—education partly along scholastic lines, but mainly of the heart. It leads us to inquire what are the true marks of an education? A Chicago man has prepared a list of questions which one may put to himself and he says that if you find you can answer all in the affirmative you may consider yourself an educated person. From that list the following have been selected: "Has education given you sympathy with all good causes and made you eager to espouse them? Has it made you brother to the weak? Have you learned how to make friends and keep them? Can you look an honest man or pure woman straight in the eye? Can you be high minded and happy in the meaner drudgeries of life? Can you be happy alone? Can you look into the sky at night and see beyond the stars? Can your soul claim relationship with the Creator?"

This is a good test for any teacher. If we can give a ready affirmative response so we are in a fair way to lead others in seeing and feeling and in mounting upward in a manner that permanent values of mind and soul will result.

AN OPEN LETTER AND APPEAL

To the Editors of the Daily and Periodical Press of the United States:

Realizing the paramount influence the press of our country has had, and will have in forming public opinion on the relations of the United States and Mexico, we appeal to all editors to use their power in the interest of truth, sincerity and constructive statesmanship.

The popular conception of the Mexican situation is based on misinformation and ignorance. Very recently agitation and false ideas of the personality and aims of the Mexican leaders might have forced a war with a people oppressed, impoverished and exploited, who should have only patient sympathy, and wise and disinterested help from the government and citizens of our country.

There is great need for the press to place the facts before our people and to interpret them in a broad and enlightened spirit. The people can learn the truth only through the press.

The occasion requires reporters trained by experience and study to observe and record the events and movements of real significance. There is equally great need for constructive editorial service to interpret the facts in the generous spirit of the true statesman and patriot.

The fundamental facts of the situation are, we believe, as follows:—

Mexico suffers from the misgovernment of centuries. The land has been, and is, held in vast tracts by private owners, of whom many are foreigners. While there are exceptions, nearly all these landholders have for generations reduced their tenants to peonage or practical serfdom, and have forced them into ignorance and depraved conditions of life.

The vast natural resources of Mexico, in oil and minerals, have been made over by concessions to English, German, French, Dutch and American owners on such terms that the national wealth flows to other lands, and the native Mexican labor is exploited so that the workers continue impoverished and unenlightened.

The dictatorial and autocratic power of earlier presidents crushed out the democratic spirit and imposed throughout Mexico the rule of unscrupulous and all-powerful local political agents, who manipulated elections, administered the laws to suit the interests in power, and ruled with ruthless military authority.

Education, marriage and other social institutions have been church monopolies, and there have resulted ignorance and general neglect of what we consider common duties of decent living. Insurrection, revolution and local anarchy have prevailed for a period of years.

From the chaos some order is gradually appearing. In the judgment of men competent to form an intelligent and fair opinion, the so-called First Chief and his assistants are endeavoring honestly and with a fair measure of success to restore government and redress the age-old wrongs of the Mexican people.

A large number of the states are at peace. As rapidly and justly as possible land is allotted to small holders on terms that guarantee continued cultivation of the soil and the independence of the workers. The local political autocrats of the earlier regime are being gradually supplanted by duly constituted civil officers, who represent the best element in their communities. The Church monopolies are abridged and education and other important matters are placed under civil authority. In a number of states traffic in alcoholic drinks has been abolished with immediate good results.

There has developed an intense rivalry among the different states to see which can organize the greatest number of schools. Already there are said to be twenty times as many schools as in the last epoch of President Diaz, and under the influence of Carranza five hundred teachers have been sent to the United States to study modern pedagogy and school administration.

Several of the states, chiefly in the north, near the United States border, are unsettled and in insurrection. Roving bands of outlaws are abroad and lawless leaders are making trouble.

For a time such men will make raids and commit depredations not only in Mexico, but occasionally over the border in the United States.

The boundary between the United States and Mexico is 1756 miles long, as far as from New York to Denver. Most of this distance is wild mountain and desert country, without roads and with very little water. For hundreds of miles there is no railroad on the Mexican side, and troops of either country must be transported on the United States railroad. Such a border cannot be patrolled so as to prevent occasional incursions by outlaw bands, and it is more criminal than foolish for the press to urge such chance acts of outlawry as a cause of war.

These in briefest form are some of the facts the people of the United States are entitled to know. If properly presented and supplemented, they will revolutionize public opinion.

Although there is need of co-operation with Mexico for police and patrol duty, our country does not need a large force of young and inexperienced troops on the border.

The army needed is a force of educators, teachers, doctors, sanitary engineers, farmers and agricultural experts, who will volunteer for terms of two or three years in the spirit of service, such as we rendered Cuba at her time of crisis. It would be legislation worthy of our country for the government to make a liberal appropriation for such co-operation. It could be done by a slight curtailment of the proposed naval program.

In conclusion we again appeal to the press of our country not only to exert its power in supplying (in larger measure) trustworthy information about Mexico, but also to take its true place in guiding the thought of America and the world along constructive lines of international service and good will. Such an editorial policy, widespread and consistent, will raise a discussion that has presented many unworthy and ignoble elements, to a place of enlightened, fraternal service worthy the press of a great democracy.

SOME MORE FACTS ABOUT PREPAREDNESS

General Nelson A. Miles has told the House Committee on Military Affairs that he is utterly opposed to conscription and to a continental army. He is convinced that our coast defenses are equal to any in the world, and that the present war has demonstrated the inability of battleships to overcome land fortifications. He added that an army of 140,000 men on a peace basis is sufficient, and that in case of necessity we could develop the army to more than a million men out of the material already at hand. Rear Admiral Victor Blue, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, considers the present American navy fit to meet any possible enemy. Admiral George Dewey said a year ago:

"Our ships and guns are as good as any in the world; our officers are as good as any; and our enlisted men are superior in training, education, physical development, and devotion to duty, to those of any other navy. * * * I can say with absolute confidence that the efficiency of the fleet has steadily progressed and has never been so high as it is today."

Within a year our Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels, has pointed out that there are now in active service, fully commissioned, 225 vessels of all characters, which is 36 more than were fully commissioned when he became Secretary. There are 101 vessels of various types in reserve capable of rendering service in war. We have under construction and authorized 77 vessels, 9 of which are dreadnaughts, 23 destroyers, 38 submarines, and 7 auxiliaries, as compared with 54 vessels under construction two years ago. Secretary Daniels is careful also to say that all these vessels are fully supplied with munitions of war. The number of mines on hand and in process of manufacture has been increased during the year by 244 per cent, and torpedoes during two years 90 per cent. By the enlargement of the naval-power factory the Government will soon be able to double its former capacity. The navy is today recruited to the maximum strength allowed. "There exists today no more efficient institution than the United States Navy." Stated in dollars, the Wilson administration in its first two years authorized

$70,000,000 to be spent on the chief fighting force of the navy, as against $26,000,000 authorized during the last two years of the Taft administration. "Stated in numbers, it authorized five dreadnaughts instead of two; and stated in effectiveness, the five dreadnaughts authorized under Wilson will mount 36 more 14-inch guns than the two authorized under Taft." * * *

"The Bureau of Ordnance has developed a 14-inch gun that will shoot farther, shoot straighter, and hit harder than any gun now in use or known to be designed by a foreign country." Secretary Daniels says flatly that the navy of 1916 is larger and better equipped and in better condition than in any previous year.

In the light of these facts there ought to be no room for hysteria in the council chambers of the nation. Furthermore, there should be no room for the Augustus P. Gardner school of statesmen. Admiral Fletcher, contradicting the statements of Gardner, says that the scores recently recorded by our gunners at sea are higher than any made before in the open sea. People who know are authority for the statement that the scores also show an increase in rapidity of fire as well as accuracy.

Politicians and other misguided pyromaniacs insist, however, upon playing with the fire. The rising wave of fear is advancing still. Ignoring our real defenses at home, and that the vast European enmities will for many years protect this nation from attack, the artful game of party chicane goes on. The situation in America is too complex and too near to each of us for analysis and explanation. Why we are asked to arm, beyond the dreams of militarists heretofore, against a crippled and disintegrating Europe, more than we have thought of arming when the European States were at the height of their military power, we cannot say. The crime against America, against Europe, against the world, is the apparent inability of our leaders to conceive of any way of attaining unto their ends other than by war.

The above statement of facts is to be relied on. Readers of The Friend can have no sympathy with the feeling that underlies the foregoing, but it is well for all of us to know the truth and to be in a position to correct false statements that are every day passed current as facts.—Philadelphia Friend.

FAITH AND OBEDIENCE

The life of faith follows the life of obedience; it is a step within and a step higher towards the celestial state. It is characterized by the recognized presence of the Lord in all that one thinks and feels and does. To describe it, therefore, is not so much to describe certain acts either done or not done in the outer life as to describe an interior state which comes from the recognition of the Lord's presence. This is the life of faith.—The Helper.

INDIANA CENTENNIAL

The following letter is being sent to all Friends Meetings in the State of Indiana, and is self-explanatory.)

To the Local Friends Meetings in Indiana:

A state-wide observance of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Indiana into the Union is now in progress. A climax of this observance will be had in the state celebration which is to take place at Indianapolis, October 2 to 15. October 8 will be known as Centennial Sunday, to be observed not only at the capital but through the state as well.

In view of the large place which the Friends have had in the history of our state, it seems highly fitting that the day be set apart in our meetings as one of commemoration. Toward this end committees appointed by Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings have outlined a tentative program, which is herewith presented with the recommendation that it be followed as far as feasible. It has been arranged with the idea of a morning and an afternoon service, with dinner together and social hour at noon. If but one service can be held, an adaptation of this program may be made:

Morning Service

The Beginnings of Indiana	(10 minutes)
The Quaker Settlement of Indiana— Sources and Causes	(10 minutes)
What the Quakers have Contributed toward the making of Indiana	(30 minutes)
Short Sermon	(15 minutes)

Afternoon Service

The History of the Local Meeting
1. Its founding.
2. Historical Sketch of its activities.
3. Prominent workers in its history.
4. Men and Women whom it has sent out to service.
5. Reminiscences.

It is desired that all the material prepared relative to the history of local meetings be preserved, with a view to its being collected by the respective Yearly Meetings as an integral part of the history of Quakerism in Indiana.

HARLOW LINDLEY,

Chairman of Committee for Indiana Yearly Meeting.

C. M. HOBBS,

Chairman of Committee for Western Yearly Meeting.

LYDIA TAYLOR PAINTER,

Secretary of Committee for Western Yearly Meeting.

FRIENDS IMPRISONED IN GREAT BRITAIN

Rachel Knight writes, saying that A. Barratt Brown, one of the group of young Friends who visited this country in 1912, and a lecturer at Woodbrooke, went to prison on July 18th, with four other young men of the National Committee of the No-Conscription Fellowship, to serve two months' imprisonment for refusing to pay the fine of £100 and £10 costs for having published a pamphlet called "Repeal the Act." A local newspaper reported that a great group of young men and women were at the prison gates to say farewell to these young men.

Percy Fletcher, who had already suffered similarly in Australia for his work there against the Defence Act, before the war began, is among those thus imprisoned. The fines of Edward Grubb and the other senior members of the committee were paid.

Earlier in the summer Rosa Hobhouse, wife of Stephen Hobhouse, who was in America with A. Barratt Brown, was similarly imprisoned for distributing peace literature and speaking in the public streets a spiritual message of peace. She refused to allow anyone to pay the fine, which she personally was not able to pay.

"These young Friends of England," adds Rachel Knight, "are thus suffering for doing only such work as we who have been sent out by the Joint Peace Committee of the two Philadelphia Yearly Meetings have done during the last few weeks in New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania."—Friends' Intelligencer.

OTHERS AGAINST WAR

The number of Christians outside the Society of Friends who share the views of Friends in regard to war has been a noteworthy feature of these present days. Upwards of twenty Wesleyan Methodist ministers, together with a few other members, including two doctors and several ladies, have issued an address to their own people declaring it to be their duty, as disciples of our Lord, to utter their "united protest against the wickedness and futility of war. It is our deep conviction that war, at all times and under all circumstances, is utterly contrary to the teaching, the example, and the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. As his followers, we believe that, if need be, we must be wronged rather than wrong others, and in the last resort, be killed rather than kill. * * *

"We believe that wars will continue until the Church of God realizes that it is a melancholy apostasy for Christians to engage in the slaughter of men, who are their brethren, and for whom Christ died. If every Christian man refused to bear arms, there would soon be no armies and no wars. We feel it to be unspeakably sad that today thousands of English, French and German Methodists are trying to kill each other. We fear that the Christian religion will be greatly prejudiced in the future by the fact that almost every Church in Europe gave its blessing to those who went forth to slay."

We believe that the letter is being sent to all Wesleyan Methodist ministers and to other leaders in that Church.—Philadelphia Friend.

The best evidence of the inspiration of the Word of God is found in the Word itself; when studied, loved, obeyed and trusted it never disappoints, never misleads, never fails.—J. Hudson Taylor.

THE HIGHER LIFE

BELLS ABOVE THE BATTLE

During one of the former wars of the Netherlands, while a battle was raging in Antwerp, the bells in the cathedral tower, high above the scene of carnage, were kept ringing. Their sweet notes of peace and purity were distinctly heard above the roar of cannon, the rattle of musketry, the rush of cavalry, the shouts of the victor, and the groans of the dying. This peculiar and impressive incident has a lesson for our day. The onlooker, as he gazed upon this bloody picture, felt that God had ceased to rule over the world, and turned it over to the hands of men. But this was not true. And we to-day are liable to make the same mistake. War, the most furious and deadly ever known, now rages across the sea, and men are asking, as they asked of old when David was fleeing from his foes: "Where is thy God?" But if they would look above instead of below, and listen for the music of heaven instead of the discords of earth, they would see that Jehovah still rules and reigns among the children of men, and that He will yet bring peace out of strife, and light from this dark night of bitter gloom. God is not a man that He should be dethroned and give up the reins of the universe because puny men have for the moment gone mad.—M. M. Davis, in Christian Standard.

THE SECRET OF THE LORD

Archbishop Benson said, "We are hearing a great deal today about high churchmen and broad churchmen, but I am convinced that what we need most is deep churchmen." We need men who know the secret of the Lord; who, like the canny old Scotchman, know that they are converted because they "were there."

So much of our hurried modern life and thought are merely on the surface. We do not get down into the depths. And because this is true we fail to gather the treasures of the "riches in Christ" which might be ours. In his Paracelsus, Browning makes his hero say, in speaking of the Eastern pearl diver, "There are two points in the adventure of a diver. One when, a beggar, he plunges into the depths. And the other, when a prince, he comes up with a priceless pearl in his hand. But they can be found only in the deep places."

And this is true of the best things—the splendid truths—of Christian experience. There is no get-rich-quick device for expediting this matter. There are certain phases of experience—of travail—through which each soul must pass ere results are won. There must be a personal entrance into the secret place of the Most High, if we would truly abide under the shadow of the almighty.—Ex.

HIS MOTHER'S VERSION

A Bible class teacher was telling of the various translations of the Bible and their different excellences. The class was much interested, and one of the young men that evening was talking to a friend about it.

"I think I prefer the King James version for my part," he said; "though, of course, the revised is more scholarly."

His friend smiled. "I prefer my mother's translation of the Bible myself to any other version," he said.

"Your mother's?" cried the first young man, thinking his companion had suddenly gone crazy. "What do you mean, Fred?"

"I mean that my mother has translated the Bible into the language of daily life for me ever since I was old enough to understand it. She translates it straight, too, and gives its full meaning. There has never been any obscurity about her version. Whatever printed version of the Bible I may study, my mother's is always the one that clears up my difficulties."—Exchange.

MAKE FAST

In these days there is a wide-spread regret that so few young men are identified with the Church. Aside from the religion of the church, which ought to be the primary motive for being in it, the church furnishes the best reference a young man can have; it provides the safest associates; it brings him quickly into pleasing social relations where he would otherwise be a stranger, and it gives him a standing he will be very slow to reach outside of the church.

An old sea captain was riding in the cars, and a young man sat down by his side. He said:

"Young man, where are you going?"

"I am going to Chicago, to live."

"Have you letters of introduction?"

"Yes," said the young man, and he pulled some of them out.

"Well," said the old sea captain, "have you a church certificate?"

"Oh, yes," replied the young man.

"Well, as soon as you reach Chicago, hunt up your church and present that. I am an old sailor and have been up and down in the world; and it is my rule, as soon as I get into port, to fasten my ship fore and aft to the wharf, although it may cost a little wharfage, rather than have it lie out in the stream, floating hither and thither with the tide."—Pittsburgh Chr. Advocate.

Take life like a man. Take it as though it was—as it is—an earnest, vital, essential affair. Take it just as though you were born to the task of performing a merry part in it, as though the world had waited your coming. Take it as though it were a grand opportunity to achieve, to carry forward great and good schemes, to hold and to cheer a suffering, weary, it may be a heart-broken brother. —Charles H. Spurgeon.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING

Wilmington Yearly Meeting convened for its twenty-fifth gathering August 16. Next year will be the twenty-fifth anniversary of the setting up of the Yearly Meeting and plans for the celebration of that event were adopted. Appropriate exercises will be held at the three sessions on Sixth Day of the Yearly Meeting in 1917. Other Yearly Meetings will be asked to send representatives, and an effort will be made to secure the attendance of the committee appointed by Indiana Yearly Meeting and of the Friends who have acted as clerks.

The meeting was reminded at its first session that, although nothing unique or unusual marked the occasion this year, its sessions were to be held in the midst of a great moral crisis which is world wide, and facing a challenge to Christianity to which the faithfulness or unfaithfulness of that body would be, according to the measure of its possible influence an answer.

The keen consciousness of threatening materialism caused the meeting to feel that something more must be done to emphasize the importance of the spiritual life. Plans were made to secure a careful survey of the vicinity of each meeting and to systematically encourage the observance of family worship.

The following were appointed to serve as clerks: Mary Mills, Presiding Clerk; W. Rufus Kersey, Recording Clerk; Clayton Terrell, Reading Clerk; Reuben B. Peelle, Announcing Clerk.

The meeting expressed its appreciation of the efficient services of Albert J. Brown, recently removed from the limits of the Yearly Meeting, who served as presiding clerk for nine years.

The visiting Friends from other Yearly Meetings were: Lettice Jowett, London Yearly Meeting; Willard O. Trueblood and E. Howard and Ruth P. Brown, Western Yearly Meeting; S. Edgar Nicholson, Robert L. Kelly, Milo Hinckle, Edna Goodwin, Albert J. and Cora Furstenberger, Charles Carey and John Shawley, Indiana Yearly Meeting; John Pennington, Ohio Yearly Meeting; Edgar T. Hole, British East Africa Mission; and Emma Lopez, Puerto Padre Mission Station, Cuba.

In several addresses and conferences, Lettice Jowett brought before us the relief work of English and Irish Friends. A committee was appointed to work in conjunction with the Young Friends Activities Committee in bringing the matter before our meetings and the public generally, and in securing contributions to that work.

Interesting reports were given by the different standing committees, indicating activity in all departments of work.

The Bible School work has been pushed with zeal. Sixty-eight have been enrolled in teacher training classes and eleven schools report an increase of 10 per cent in average attendance. Alexander Purdy delivered an address on "The Bible School and the Kingdom of God," in which he emphasized the importance of the Bible School in gripping the imagination of the young and in the development of Christian workers.

At the Home Mission session, I. Lindley Jones, of Knoxville, Tenn., gave an interesting account of the religious spirit of the mountaineers, and the work of David Sanders in this field, and Milo Hinckle delivered a stirring address. Scholars from Ada Chapel (Wilmington Friends Mission Chapel) Bible School sang several hymns at this session.

E. Howard Brown gave strong addresses on Peace and Temperance at the sessions when these departments were reported. A large number of young people have helped in the campaign against preparedness and for peace.

The Foreign Mission Committee was fortunate in having the help of Edgar Hole, who gave two strong addresses which set forth vividly the work of Friends, not only in Africa, but also in other fields. At the public W. F. M. S. meeting Harriet Hiatt and Harriet W. Purdy, delegates to the Winona School of Missions, gave a report; and Willard O. Trueblood gave an impressive message. The Foreign Mission forces are pressing the Every Member Canvass with some success.

The report of Wilmington College by the Secretary and by President Jay revealed the fact that a very interesting and important milestone in the progress of the college has been reached. There was a large increase in the attendance last year; the grade of the college has been raised a full year, a department of education added; land purchased for work in agriculture; and other provisions for efficient work indicate a decided strengthening of the institution.

An interesting report of the work at Friendsville Academy was given. Robert L. Kelly, in the educational address, made a fervent and convincing plea for the emphasis of religion in education.

Amos Cook was reappointed Superintendent of Evangelistic and Pastoral work for another year. The Evangelistic Committee has done much work and there have been good results. Milo Hinckle, in his address at this session, urged the importance of aggressive evangelism. The statistics show a loss of 101 members, leaving the membership 47 larger than two years ago. Grant Fairley was reappointed statistical secretary.

The young people maintained again this year a Quakerism class each day, at which Willard O. Trueblood gave a series of lectures on "The Fundamentals of Quakerism." He also spoke at the young people's session on "The Charm of the Impossible Task." All of these addresses were much appreciated. A number of delegates to the Young Friends Conference at Cedar Lake reported to the Yearly Meeting; and four delegates, one from each Quarterly Meeting, with alternates, were appointed to attend next year. During the year, fourteen conferences of young Friends have been held in this yearly Meeting. Ethel Hawkins was reappointed as Field Secretary.

Isaac T. Johnson gave a report for the delegates to the Men's Conference held at Richmond, Indiana, last October. Nearly a hundred attended from Wilmington Yearly Meeting. It was decided not to appoint delegates to the Five Years Meeting until next year.

The usual large crowd gathered on First Day. The first session was a sun-rise prayer meeting by the young people, followed by a large Bible School at 8:30. Sermons were preached through the day by Edgar T. Hole, Willard O. Trueblood, Alexander Purdy, E. Howard Brown and Milo Hinckle. The open-air meeting on the grounds was conducted by a company of railroad men from Xenia, under the direction of Homer Biddlecum, pastor of the Friends Church there. At the close of the First Day evening service, Lettice Jowett gave a description of the relief work of British Friends, to a large and interested company.

Among others who through the week gave helpful messages, were John Pennington, John Shawley, Albert and Cora Furstenberger and Ruth P. Brown.

An interesting and inspiring feature of the Yearly Meeting was the singing, which was under the direction of the music committee. A large chorus from the Wilmington Meeting was present at all the afternoon and evening sessions, and rendered beautiful and appropriate selections. On the evening of Seventh Day the choir from the Jamestown Meeting contributed the music, which was greatly appreciated. On other occasions soloists from other parts of the Yearly Meeting were present and made use of their gifts.

At the last session on Third Day afternoon four hundred and fifty were present, and a Yearly Meeting which was pronounced by many the best of all, closed at full tide, under a very solemn and impressive covering.

YOUNG FRIENDS ASSEMBLY

The Young Friends Assembly for North Carolina Yearly Meeting was held at Guilford College, August 14 to 21, and was under the care of the Bible School, Missionary and Young Friends Departments of the Yearly Meeting. The Assembly fully met the expectations and hopes of the joint committee having it in charge.

A glance at the program will reveal something of the good things enjoyed by those who availed themselves of the opportunity to attend. The Assembly opened Monday night August 14, with an address by Lewis W. McFarland on The Call to the Ministry. On Tuesday morning the regular work of the Assembly was taken up. At 9 o'clock Edgar T. Hole conducted the Missionary Hour, giving a graphic account of the work in Africa. From 10 to 11 was observed as the Bible School hour, at which time the Assembly divided into three groups:—Bible study, led by Dr. Sylvester Newlin; Teen age conference led by Miss Martha Dozier; Primary conference conducted by Mrs. E. R. Michaux. At 11 o'clock Elbert Russell spoke on the Parables of Jesus, the whole Assembly uniting for this period. At 2 P. M. Thomas E. Jones conducted a Young People's conference, taking up various phases of Christian Endeavor work. As Thomas Jones did not arrive until Wednesday, President Thomas Newlin conducted the period on Tuesday. At night Elbert Russell lectured on Loyalty to the Society of Friends.

A similar schedule as outlined above was carried out on Wednesday and Thursday. On Friday and Saturday in place of the Missionary Hour a conference on the Church and Community was led by George Welker, and in place of Bible Study Julia S. White and Prof. J. F. Davis gave lectures on Friends History and Doctrine. Elbert Russell spoke every morning, save Saturday, on the Parables of Jesus, and delivered inspirational addresses at night, closing the series on Friday night. President Newlin delivered a lecture on Bible School Methods Saturday morning, and Dr. Hobbs gave an address Saturday night on Peace.

The presence and addresses of Elbert Russell, Thomas Jones and Edgar T. Hole were greatly appreciated and brought inspiration and renewed interest in the Bible and the work of the Church. The home folks who had part on the program were also appreciated.

Each morning at 8:30 a devotional half hour was observed based on silence. These were very precious periods. At 7:15 in the evening a vesper service was held on the campus. Every afternoon from 3 to 5 was occupied with recreation or rest. The local recreation committee planned and executed many delightful forms of amusement. Friday afternoon a number of stunts, some altogether laughable, others of historic character, were presented. Saturday afternoon a gold medal peace contest was held, the participants being young people from Springfield, Archdale and Deep River communities. Thomas Jones remained over Sunday, preaching in the morning and at night and having a conference in the afternoon.

107 persons registered and a much larger number were in irregular attendance. There were representatives from every Quarterly Meeting. We feel that the Assembly was a success in every particular and that it has meant much toward the spiritual development of many young people in the Yearly Meeting.

We are very pleased that Thomas E. Jones is to remain in the Yearly Meeting until September 5th, visiting a number of meetings in the interests of Christian Endeavor and Young Friends work. He has meetings scheduled in all save one of the eight Quarterly Meetings in the Yearly Meeting.

CLARA I. COX.

CHURCH AT WORK

Fountain City, Indiana—The church and Sabbath School at Fountain City are prospering and are doing splendid work. The prayer meetings are large.

Leanah Hobson will remain the fourth year as pastor of the meeting. She and her husband have a minute to attend Western Yearly Meeting.

Ludlow Falls, Ohio—West Branch Quarterly Meeting was held here August 19 and 20. J. Edgar Williams was with us through all the sessions and preached three very interesting and helpful sermons. Enos Pember-ton, Elwood Hinshaw and Ann McCain were all present and took part in the services. All superintendents of departments were ready with their reports.

Muncie, Indiana—William J. Sayers and family motored through to Rochester, N. Y. a few weeks ago where they visited the mother of Mr. Sayers. On August 12 they returned from the Conference at Cedar Lake, where he delivered an address at the Young Friends Conference. He was with his own congregation again on that day at the morning service and in the evening delivered the baccalaureate sermon at the Muncie Normal Institute before a class of one hundred graduates. President Robert L. Kelly of Earlham College was with us on July 31 and in the afternoon gave a strong sermon at the McCulloch Park meeting.

Van Wert, Ohio—An all day gospel meeting was held on August 13. Arrangements were made to take everyone in autos to the fair grounds. The attendance was good and at the noon hour about two hundred and seventy-five sat down around the tables in the dining room. After dinner many came out from other churches of the city. The speakers for the occasion were J. W. Nicodemus who spoke on "The City Church Problem", and F. H. Tormohlen, who followed with a sermon. In the afternoon F. L. Webster, cashier of the First National Bank, gave a stirring address. This was followed by a strong prohibition address by Aaron Watkins.

At a recent meeting of the ministerial association of the city it was decided to hold a tent meeting, beginning September 13. F. H. Tormohlen was put in full charge and has been asked to do the preaching, while all other churches have pledged their support. Recently a committee of some fifteen persons of our congregation, mostly young people, took a community survey that is proving a real revelation to all.

Haviland, Kansas—Friends Quarterly Meeting convened here on the 12th inst. The sessions were very interesting. Rufus P. King of High Point, N. C., preached an excellent sermon on Saturday. He has been a prominent figure in church services during the cycles of many years, and a high esteem for his Christian counsel and advice is cherished by the church membership. He also preached at Hopewell and Pleasant Plains. He went from this vicinity to Liberal Quarterly Meeting. Charles Townsend, a very promising young minister of Rose Valley, Kansas, was in attendance and spoke during the business session on Saturday very warmly in favor of the Haviland Academy, alluding to the benefit it had been to him in turning his course of action in life. He graduated from the academy as also did Carl Byrd, pastor at Hopewell. These young ministers have a high regard for denominational schools. Miss Minnie Fankhauser, president of the alumni, also spoke earnestly in favor of the academy. Recently we had some splendid lectures by President Robert L. Kelly of Earlham College, at Haviland, Pleasant Plains and Hopewell, in favor of denominational schools. His lectures were very much liked by those who heard him. The future outlook for the academy is bright. They will commence the erection of the new building soon. They intend to make the academy second to none.

Stafford, Kansas—About nineteen persons from here attended Quarterly Meeting at Haviland on August 11-13. Our pastor, Abel J. Bond, and wife have returned from their trip in western Kansas, Colorado and Oklahoma. They report a successful trip and Mrs. Bond's health improved.

Poplar Ridge, N. Y.—Mr. and Mrs. Painter of Spiceland, Ind., have been visiting their children, Levinus and Margaret Painter, who have recently located in Poplar Ridge Meeting, Poplar Ridge, New York.

"A War Against War" exhibit is being conducted at the Moravia fair by the Friends of Poplar Ridge Meeting. Emily Howland, who has given her long active life to interests of education and reform, is financing the work. The exhibit will be used in neighboring communities after the fair.

Starksboro, Vt.—At the close of the year 1915 our meeting showed the most prosperous year of its existence. Mr. and Mrs. McCarty, who have been so faithful and tireless in the work here for the past two years, are expected to remain another year. At present they are enjoying a vacation and much needed rest visiting their parents and friends in Ohio and Pennsylvania, while the church is being so ably and satisfactorily supplied by a Friends Minister from Brooklyn, Mrs. Elizabeth Underhill.

During the past year several new members have been added, one of whom, Miss Helen Orvis, became a member Easter Morning, one week after the death of her great-grandmother, aged ninety-seven, who was a member.

As to the financial part of the work during the year, the church has paid for foreign missions, $44.79; home missions, $70.60; other expenses, $70.00; minister's salary, $600.00. The church also received a fresh coat of paint. This added to other repairs the year before, makes it in first-class condition. Mrs. McCarty has organized a Mission Band among the children which has shown great interest in the work, by raising quite a sum of money for Foreign Missions.

The church enters upon the new year with great faith and courage, and expects to surpass this year's work the coming year.

Union Springs, N. Y.—On account of the serious continued illness of his own people, Harold Marshall has been forced to resign his position as preceptor of the Boys' Hall at Oakwood Seminary. Louis Fulton, a graduate of Hamilton College, who has about completed work for his Master's Degree in Cornell University, has been chosen for the position. Louis Fulton is a good student, an active Christian gentleman, who comes highly recommended for the work to which he has been called.

The opening of Oakwood Seminary has been postponed from September 12 to September 26. This action was taken at the suggestion of the Health Board of the village. Dangers of travel seem too great, until there is a marked decrease in the spread of infantile paralysis.

Mrs. Ida T. Parker preached at the Presbyterian Church in Union Springs Sunday, August 27.

Mt. Airy, N. C.—Miles Reece and wife, who have been in charge of the church here during the summer, leave this week for Brevard, where they take up their school work for the winter. We have enjoyed their stay among us so much for they have been such a help and inspiration.

Henry McKinley, of Ohio, who has accepted the call as pastor of our church, will arrive in about three weeks to take charge of the work

Our S. S. is in good condition. Thursday evening the Sunday School gave an ice cream supper on the lawn at the church, which was very much enjoyed by all present.

The C. E. Society sent a delegate to Young Friends Assembly at Guilford College, which was held Aug. 14-21. She reports a splendid meeting. Among the prominent speakers were, Elbert Russell, Edgar T. Hole, and Thomas E. Jones. We hope that several of our young people can go next year.

We were glad to have Samuel R. Pickett, of Greensboro, at our last Monthly Meeting.

Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of Young Friends Movement, will be with us next Sunday. In the afternoon he will hold a meeting for young people and will hold a night service either here or at White Plains.

Several of our young people leave for school next week. Byron Gentry, William Beasley, Susan Gentry, Una Seal, and Walter Dobbins will all enter Guilford College. We will miss them very much in our church work, but hope they will be a help in the meeting there.

On Sunday the church presented to Susan Gentry a beautiful gift as a token of appreciation of her work as pianist.

NEWS NOTES

Charles S. Dudley of Jonesboro, Indiana, will serve the meeting at West Milton, Ohio, as pastor the coming year.

South Eighth Street Friends meeting at Richmond, Indiana, recently held a decision day in connection with the Bible School. Very gratifying results were accomplished, thirty young people deciding for Christ.

John L. Kittrell of West Milton, Ohio, attended North Carolina Yearly Meeting early in August and also the Young Friends Assembly which followed. Since then he has been engaged in evangelistic work and will be in North Carolina for some weeks, returning in time for Indiana Yearly Meeting. He and his wife will continue to make their home at West Milton.

We talk about God's remembering us as if it were a special effort. But if we could only know how truly we belong to God, it would be different. God's remembrance of us is the natural claiming of our life by him as true part of his own.—Phillips Brooks.

THE IOWA PAGE

PENN COLLEGE

Professor W. I. Kelsey is attending the Haverford School of Religious History, which is being held at Swampscott, Massachusetts. Professor Kelsey will be one of the lecturers and will be absent the first week of college, returning ready for duty the beginning of the second week.

Miss Lillian Eves has been secured to teach in the Department of Modern Languages and will have charge of the German.

Mrs. Ethel Rosenberger Berry will serve as instructor in French for the coming year. Mrs. Berry was, for a number of years, Professor of Modern Languages, and takes the work, this year, on account of the absence of Miss Ethel Jones, who is spending the year in Columbia University.

Professor Homer L. Morris has been granted an extension of time on his leave of absence and will continue his work for another year in Columbia University. Professor Morris is working towards his Doctor's Degree and will return to his place on the Faculty of Penn College at the completion of his work.

Miss Alma G. Madden will be in charge of the Department of Expression and will also care for the interests of the girls' physical education. Miss Madden is a graduate of Earlham College and also of one of the leading colleges of expression and physical culture. Miss Madden is a reader of excellent ability and is an author of some note, having had productions accepted by some of the leading magazines.

Dr. and Mrs. Case, who spent the summer in California, have returned and will be in attendance at sessions of Yearly Meeting. Dr. Case will make one of the principal addresses at Yearly Meeting time.

On September 4th, the four cities, Oskaloosa, Ottumwa, Albia and Centerville will celebrate Labor Day at Oskaloosa. Dr. Case will give one of the addresses on this occasion.

The old college building has been almost wholly removed. The material has been pretty largely disposed of and the site of the building will soon be levelled off. Work on the new building will commence just as soon as contracts are let and will probably be well under way by cold weather. This building will be located 184 feet north of College Avenue, centering on C Street. Many express the opinion that it will be the best college building in the state of Iowa outside of the state supported schools.

The Yearly Meeting House has been put in excellent condition for the accommodation of the class room work for the college year and will afford ample room for all except the laboratory work. The main auditorium will be used for Chapel purposes.

FIELD NOTES

Des Moines, Iowa—Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held in Des Moines on August 19 and 20. Taylor Guthrie and Isaac Cook, ministers, who live in the Quarter, attended on Saturday. Harry R. Keates, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present during all the sessions, and at both meetings for worship preached very helpful sermons. The usual amount of business was transacted. A lunch was served in the dining room of the church.

At the First Friends' Church in Des Moines on August 24 at eight o'clock in the evening, a reception was held for Harry R. Keates and family, who are intending to leave the city soon. They will be missed by the congregation for they have resided here for the last seven years. He was pastor of the church until he became Yearly Meeting Superintendent.

THE NEBRASKA PAGE

PLATT VALLEY QUARTER

Platt Valley Quarterly Meeting was held at North Loup, Nebraska, August 18-20. Representatives were in attendance from Central City, Alda, Highland View and Pleasant Hill Monthly Meetings. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight was one of real benefit to those present. The special thoughts given were in regard to the duties of the elders and overseers. Saturday morning, Professor Homer J. Coppock, of New York, who has accepted a position as teacher in Nebraska Central College, brought a strong message from the life and work of Jonah.

The business session was one of interest and profit to those who were present. Tristram Dillon, our Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, and Ray Lewis, field secretary for the College and Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Boards, each brought to us helpful and inspiring messages on the Sabbath.

The Central City Men's Gospel Team had charge of the Sabbath afternoon service. Two thoughts were especially emphasized by the speakers, first, the influence that Christian training by earnest Christian parents had had upon their lives, and second, the spiritual help that had come to some through their associations while students at Central College.

We praise God for the spiritual atmosphere at our college and we believe that it will be enhanced by the coming of Homer J. Coppock among us.

ALDA, NEBRASKA

Our pastor, Tristram Dillon, and family have just returned from their trip through Iowa and Minnesota. Alda Monthly Meeting will soon be able to sit by its own hearth stone and eat at its own board in the new basement that is nearing completion. Along with the basement, equipped with furnace, kitchen, dining room and Sunday School room, there will be other improvements upstairs in the way of class rooms, new pulpit platform, new entrance way and fresh interior paint and paper. We expect to have the dedication services some time next month. The exact date of which we will inform you later. We are thanking God daily for the spiritual strength and union that make these things possible.

Seven weeks of conducting the Sunday and midweek services have taught us laymen to have a great deal of respect for the size of our pastor's job.

Alda meeting is being directed by pastor and evangelistic committee in preparatory arrangements for our fall revival meetings.

C. E. Ellis, our up-to-the-minute Sunday School superintendent, is getting some fine work out of the temperance and mission superintendents and their departments.

FIELD NOTES

Tristram Dillon, who has served the church at Alda as pastor for some time, has resigned his position and will enter the evangelistic field about October 1.

MEXICAN NOTES

A little more evidence of an improvement in conditions at Matamoros has reached the Board of Missions. A recent letter from Nancy L. Lee states that better protection from thieves is being given to citizens, as the authorities are "rounding up" robbers who have been very troublesome for several months. The mission buildings were entered on several occasions during the spring and summer, but fortunately nothing of value was taken. The more effective police protection which is beginning to prevail may make it unnecessary to reinforce the heavy iron bars which already guard the windows.

Solomon Tice reached the border safely on August 18th after spending nine or ten days at Victoria. He believes it will be possible to take up a part of the work at Victoria this year but has not sent his full recommendations nor has his report been considered as yet by the Mexico Field Committee. The Field Committee was called to meet in Indianapolis on the 6th instant and we hope either next week or the week following to give in these columns as full a statement as possible of the prospects for work in Mexico during the next few months.

MAHALA JAY

In the passing over of Mahala Jay, there has gone from our midst one who perhaps more than any other has been instrumental in bringing about the organized foreign mission work of the Friends' church. Mahala Jay was identified with mission interests from the very first of Indiana Yearly Meeting's work in Mexico; at the organization of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions she was chosen as its General Secretary. During the years from 1894 to 1908 she most efficiently filled that position, devoting such attention to it as she could in connection with her household duties. Before that time she had spent some time in Mexico, getting better acquainted with the field and its work. She was intensely interested in the inauguration of the work in Cuba. The church owes her a great debt of gratitude for the splendid ability that she devoted to this cause in the early period of its organization. For some years her health has not been such that she could devote her time and strength to the work. She was a woman of remarkable executive ability and this ability was devoted to the interests of the church, not only in the foreign mission department but in all phases of its church interests. No other individual has more ably served the church than has she, and this is especially true of our mission interests.

She had the thing she would—
Lord, if I dip my cup into the sea,
It rises full. Such cup each soul may be,
Such ocean is thy good.

—Christina Rosetti.

TOPICS FOR PRAYER

Our Mission Schools. Those in Mexico, Jamaica, and Cuba, re-open at this time after the Summer vacation.

The Annual Meeting of the American Friend's Board of Foreign Missions, to be held on the 17th and 18th of October.

Missionary Contributions. The Board's year closes September thirtieth. Many thousand dollars must be secured. A deficit would be a calamity.

Work in Mexico—that Mexican church members, pastors and teachers may have wisdom and courage in the trying experiences they are facing; that missionaries and the members and secretaries of Board and Field Committee may plan and work with discretion and a clear sense of the Divine Presence and Power.

THREE CRITICAL WEEKS

FOR THE WORK OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS

The Board's year closes Ninth month 30th.

All obligations at home and abroad must be met.

About one-third of the year's expenses remains yet to be raised.

A deficit would cripple the work of our fifty-six missionaries.

Other denominations are increasing their missionary gifts—for Friends to fall short would be disheartening.

To fulfill God's command we must advance.

How Meet the Crisis

Let Friends everywhere make personal gifts through local treasurers or direct to the Board.

Let officers of particular meetings give every member a chance to contribute at once.

Let every treasurer forward missionary funds now in his hands.

Let all Friends pray for the Board and for our missionaries.

Let everyone do his part.

ALTERNATIVE SERVICE FOR CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

The Peace Association of Friends in America through its President has been in correspondence with some Friends in different parts of the country concerning the attitude which Friends and others who hold similar views, should take toward the subject of compulsory military service.

The laws recently enacted in New York, together with the agitation for similar laws in other states, suggest that Friends may soon be brought into a position where a definite course of action must be decided upon. A merely negative position is admitted by all to be less satisfactory than a positive, constructive one. The correspondence so far seems to indicate that Friends have not yet gone very far in considering just what constructive policy can be adopted. It is clear, however, that there is some serious consideration being given to the subject as indicated by the following extract from a Friend in Pennsylvania:

"Some of us are considering the situation of the Quaker students in state universities and other institutions where military drill is required and where the requirement will probably be more strictly enforced now than in the past.

"Heretofore the official statement that a young man was a Friend and asked to be excused from military drill has usually been all that was necessary, and gymnastic drill or some similar substitute has been found.

"It is likely now that in some if not many institutions the authorities will be less willing to accept substitute exercises, and Red Cross work (about which many Friends hesitate) will probably be suggested instead of military drill.

"We do not wish our boys to be or to appear to be 'slackers' and it is desirable that some real substitute be found that will plainly include a preparation for serving one's country, in time of peace (and possibly war), and thus indicate some now unemphasized aspect of patriotism."

It also appears from correspondence received that there does not seem to be much prospect that the rules concerning military service in colleges and universities will be enforced any more strictly than heretofore, but even if this be true it would certainly be of advantage to Friends and others who are desirous of adopting the best means to promote lasting peace if the subject of alternative service might be fully considered. The Peace Association of Friends in America will welcome an expression of views from anyone willing and ready to contribute anything which may aid in the formation of a constructive policy which a Christian can fully approve.

PRUSSIA AND THE QUAKERS (From The Australasian Friend.)

In 1783 there settled at Minden, the scene of one of Frederick the Great's victories, a couple of young men who had embraced the religious opinions of the Quakers. Their conduct was irreproachable, but their objections to oaths and war brought them much oppression and disturbance from the civil Government. In 1799 they appealed against the decisions of the local Consistory to the new King of Prussia himself, and were permitted to present their petition in person when Frederick William III. attended a great review of troops at Petershagen. The answer which they received, dated 2nd June, was as follows:

His Royal Majesty, the King of Prussia, holds sacred the liberty of conscience in matters of faith of all his subjects. But civil institutions, and especially the fulfilment of those civil duties without which, were the dispensation general, the State itself could not exist, have nothing in common with this. No religious sect like that of the Quakers, whose confession of faith excludes its followers from the most important civil duties in an independent State, can, therefore, lay claim to the right of the public exercise of their religion. Even to tolerate them is a favour which must not be extended too far, lest the State should suffer by it.

The petitioners must be subject to the civil laws and regulations of the State in temporal and ecclesiastical affairs, or become chargeable with the crime of being disobedient subjects. Their Meeting House was sealed up, their schoolmaster imprisoned, and they themselves distrained upon for heavy fines. After another appeal to the King, in February, 1800, an order was made that "further increase of their numbers is not to be permitted; they shall not own or acquire any real estate; and on the first admission of a new member they shall be immediately passed beyond our frontiers."

They now enjoyed a short respite, and even obtained in 1813 (December 17) a decree that, in conjunction with Mennonites and Anabaptists, they "shall be exempted from military service of every kind, even from the Landsturm, because it is throughout at variance with their religious opinions." This was a remarkable concession. It was, however, shortly to be repudiated. When an appeal was made in 1818 against the cruel treatment of Christian Peitsmeyer, who had been forcibly pressed into military service, citing this exemption order, the only reply given was that the order related to the then existing war. Peitsmeyer died in 1889, aged nearly 92, almost the last of the Minden Quakers. He had never suffered the worst form of torture, "the latten," which was imposed on another young Quaker, Henry Schmidt, of Eldingshausen, at Minden, as related in a memorial presented to the King in 1826. This was a dreadful cage made entirely, floors and sides, of sharp triangular laths of oak, edge uppermost, in which young Schmidt was imprisoned, naked and unshod, for three days and three nights.

The conscription of 1869 was the death-blow of the Prussian Quakers. The sums paid for exemptions exhausted their small resources, and in order to avoid the service they were unable to render, many young men obtained situations in England, while others emigrated to South America. The situation of their brethren in France was indeed preferable, even under the Revolution.

COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE IN AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND

A recent number of the Australasian Friend has the following editorial note in regard to legislation in Australia and New Zealand which shows something of the present condition of the situation there. It is encouraging to note that in spite of the strong influence in favor of militarism there still exists organized opposition to conscription:

"In New Zealand, new legislation is being considered, if, indeed, it has not been already passed, in which all relief or recognition of conscientious objectors is deliberately excluded, on the alleged ground that such provisions have proved a hindrance and a failure in England.

"The Bill passed the Lower House, but the Upper House sent it back, recommending the insertion of a provision to protect "religious" (not conscientious objectors.)

"In Australia, the opposition to conscription still continues. Labour has pronounced against it. Public meetings still gather to protest, and no law has yet been brought in. But there is a strong body of opinion favourable to conscription. It is impossible to forecast what new burden the next six months may lay upon our people. Even now it is difficult to obtain the use of halls for meetings, and prosecutions on trivial points, such as the absence of the printer's name from a handbill, are being initiated."

LIFE SKETCH OF MAHALAH JAY

As early as 1823 Moses and Sarah Pearson set up their home about twenty miles north of Dayton, Ohio. The third child in this home was Mahalah Pearson, who was born December 7, 1827, and who died August 19, 1916, aged 88 years, 8 months and 12 days. Of her seven brothers and sisters and four half brothers only three are now living, Anna P. Kelly of Richmond, Abram Pearson of Washington, Iowa, and Obed Pearson of West Milton, Ohio.

In that pioneer home in the then new west, she was trained in all the many arts necessary to a primitive life. When but nine years old her father and his family were sent by Indiana Yearly Meeting to live as missionaries among the Shawnee Indians who had recently been removed from Ohio to the Missouri Territory near the present site of Kansas City, Mo. During these three years of wild life, fraught with many dangers, doubtless the seeds were implanted that later bore fruit in her work for foreign missions. Her mother and older sister dying within a single year, heavy duties fell upon her in this family of eight children.

Though those were early times and in a new country, Moses and Sarah Pearson instilled into their children a desire for the best education possible and every opportunity then afforded to gain it was embraced. So when in 1845 Walter Denny Jay, impelled by the desire of his boys for better educational advantages, hired a teacher of somewhat advanced training for a winter school, Mahalah Pearson, her father having married again, found a home in this Fredericksburg neighborhood, six miles away, where by early rising and hard work outside of school hours, she could earn her "board and keep" while she attended school. For two winters she attended this four months school and in the summers she taught near home and helped the younger brothers and sisters at home. During these two winters the acquaintance formed with Eli Jay, one of Walter Denny Jay's sons, grew and on October 24, 1849, they began their married life, which continued for almost sixty-two years, till September 14, 1911.

In November they together opened a successful school in the school house which he had just completed on his own land and among those who attended were his nephews, Allen and Milton Jay.

Convinced that teaching was to be their calling and feeling that they were not well enough equipped to do it as they wished, they determined to go to college, and in spite of little encouragement outside of their home families and expressed opposition by many Friends, they entered Oberlin College in February, 1850, then the only college in this country where they could both go as students.

Teaching during the vacations of the college years they continued in Oberlin through the spring of 1853, but in the fall of that year they moved to Yellow Springs, Ohio, to enter Antioch College, which was just opening its doors, as they felt that under that foremost of educators, the Hon. Horace Mann, the place accorded women in that institution would be equal to that given men. Four years later in 1857 they graduated, members of the first class from Antioch. Mahalah Jay had taught a class in Preparatory Latin during her senior year and continued to teach there after her graduation, Horace Mann having expressed himself that she was the best Latin teacher he had ever known.

They both taught at Spiceland Academy and elsewhere until in 1864 they were called to Earlham College and except for a year in the Government Service among the Indians at Fort Sill and two years of teaching at Rich Square when her little girl, Mary Adelaide, was a baby, she continued at Earlham College for almost twenty years.

She gave the best that a well trained mind and great natural ability afforded to the training and development of boys and girls into noble men and women, and the memory of "Teacher Mahalah" still holds a sacred place in many hearts.

She was long the Principal of the Preparatory Department of Earlham College, which was then the larger part of the school.

In 1883 she, with her husband, resigned her place, but she was persuaded to help out still another year, closing her connection with the college in 1884. For the three years, '88 to '91, the home was moved to Ann Arbor, Michigan, where during the course of their daughter, she and her husband renewed their youth, taking up work in the University. It was then that she began Hebrew and Spanish, the latter being of practical value to her in the foreign mission work later on. She also prepared the lessons for the Friends Quarterly while here.

Through all the years of teaching she had been much interested in the work of the church and from the time she left the class room she virtually gave her life to its many varied activities. She centered her chief interest, however, about Foreign Missions. As corresponding secretary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Association, she made three trips to Mexico to establish their work there and later to inspect and assist in it.

She was a member of all the "Friends Conferences" and the Five Years Meetings until 1907, editing the reports of two of the former.

Her greatest work perhaps for the church was in connection with the formation and development of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, of which she was General Secretary until 1907, when past eighty, she handed over her work to the Secretary of her choice, Charles E. Tebbetts. The development of the plans for a union of the foreign mission work of the different American Yearly Meetings under the direction and control of one Board and the establishing and developing of Friends' missions in Cuba were her meat and drink—her life for years. The good that both are accomplishing today is a monument to her.

With all this life for others both as earnest teacher and church worker, with little exception she was her own housekeeper and she never failed to be the devoted wife, mother and grandmother. To the daughter and granddaughters who are left she has always been and ever will be an incentive toward noble lives. And not only is her life an inspiration to them, but to the many nieces and nephews, to the foster daughter and others who have been members of the family, for it was always the practice of her and her husband to assist young people in every way possible to gain the education they had worked so hard to acquire themselves. To her pupils, whether in day school or Sabbath School, she has been an inspiration to a higher life.

And now after a struggle with disease for fifty-two years she has passed on to her reward in the Heavenly land.

The Master has gathered the sheaf heavy with ripened grain unto Himself.

"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord for their works follow with them."

MAHALAH JAY

One by one our "tried and trusted leaders" are laying down their armor. Their voices become silent in the council. The fight is ended and they enter into their rest.

After a long and trying illness, borne with great, Christian fortitude, Mahalah Jay died August 19, 1916, in the eighty-ninth year of her age—universally loved and respected. Her life was pre-eminently a life of service whether in the home, the school-room or the church. She was a woman of influence.

She was a fine organizer in the mission work and an ideal teacher of Latin in her prime, but her heavenly Master chose, that in those last years of her life, the weary years of weakness and pain, she should teach her most precious lessons.

Her husband had gone on before to that better land she was so surely nearing. All her remaining family—an only daughter and two granddaughters, grown—gathered closer about her. Their loving ministry did not fail and their memory is a benediction—and as she lived on in suffering her lessons were given daily—lessons in being still and praying "not my will" when she had always been so busy and absorbed in her work; lessons of calm endurance—in the agony of pain as the fatal malady tightened its grip; lessons in love and faith. How marvelously God helped her teach these higher, spiritual truths in no unknown tongue, but by personal example, until they became Subject—A Prisoner in the Castle.

Lesson—Acts 22.

Golden Text—He is my refuge and my fortress; my God in whom I trust.
Ps. 91:2.

Paul had barely escaped from the fanatical Jews. The experience through which he had just passed undoubtedly brought vividly to his mind the times when he had directed just such attacks upon Christians in and about the synagogues of Jerusalem. In the earlier part of his speech to the mob he reviewed his former career, laying emphasis upon his Jewish ancestry, training and religious zeal. To those of his hearers not intimately acquainted with him this tactful method would tend to calm their fears and prepare for the theme which he was so shortly to introduce.

This and many other incidents of like nature show clearly how men may be led into the wildest fanaticism even though they are following wrong ideals. It is also evident that it is next to impossible to convince men of the truth when once other ideas have become dominant. To them the Jewish religion was the final revelation, all else was false and must be put down. Jesus himself had been unable to convince them. Paul was convinced only after a special manifestation. A true student is always ready to listen, just in weighing evidence and willing to hold fast that which is true.

It seems that Paul did not shrink from declaring the full truth even though conditions were not very favorable. He stood facing the same class of men to which he had formerly belonged, and now with all the fervor of his Christian faith he told them the story of his conversion. The immediate results were expressed in a wild, riotous demonstration, but the seed had been sown and perhaps some of it fell on good ground.

A new danger awaited him. He escaped from the mob only to face Roman methods. Soon he was tied up, possibly by the thumbs, and the order given to scourge him. His Christian associates were helpless, no aid could be expected from them. His former Jewish associates were thirsting for his blood. Roman militarism was preparing to torture him "within an inch of his life." Happily he was a Roman citizen free born, and standing upon his legal rights the final hour of suffering was postponed. His trust too was in God.

Those were days full of uncertainty from the physical standpoint. But through it all the faith and zeal of the apostle remained true. Jesus was his overlord and no opportunity passed by unused. Undaunted Paul constantly proclaimed that gospel for which he was not ashamed.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

THE STUDY CLASS Biblical Study

"The importance for Friends of a sound knowledge of the Bible, and of the broad outlines of religious history, can hardly be over-estimated. If we are to have a living message for the world, it must be true to the facts of human life and of history; ideas accepted on tradition merely will not serve us, as every intelligent leader knows. It is by Biblical study, carried on with the great light thrown on the Bible by recent discoveries, that we can get a grasp of the real facts and methods of the divine revelation to men which culminates in Jesus Christ, and so assure our own minds and find help to answer the difficulties of others.

Historical study, rightly conducted, is a help to the devotional use of the Bible, and to this end the Study Class method can be applied successfully. It can also be employed with profit by those who are aiming directly at devotional study, and who have not time or inclination for historical inquiries."

YOUNG FRIENDS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Christian Endeavor Society at Los Angeles has about fifty members. This constitutes old, middle-aged and young people. It is remarkable how well the various ages work together. This can be explained only on the ground that the meetings maintain such a high spiritual level that people are melted into one. Young Friends forget that they cannot speak or pray as well as the older members present. Great variety and spontaneity characterize the meeting. Clippings from the Christian Endeavor World are seldom read. People testify because they have a message. There are exceptions to this, however. Sometimes one feels that the testimony has been given because it was time to speak rather than because the speaker could not keep still.

The Pasadena meeting is located in a beautiful section of the city. Still, there is no section of the city that isn't beautiful. I think I have never visited a city where there is such harmony, picturesqueness and restfulness as at Pasadena. It has been called the city of homes, and rightly so. There seems little that could be desired to make it more attractive. There is both a Friends Church and a Friends Meeting in the city. The interior arrangement and decoration of the former is quite like that of the other churches of the city, with the exception that it doesn't have a communion table and a baptistry. The meeting is programmed by the pastor and a choir furnishes music for the morning meetings. Often times people from the pews take part in the services either in prayer, testimony or singing. The pastor gives a well-thought-out sermon each Sunday, which feeds the congregation both spiritually and intellectually. The Monthly Meeting believes in putting her young people to work, too. The presiding clerk is thirty-three years old and the reading clerk is but eighteen. Both are young men. They try to get other young people to attend. The business is carried through with point and life. Often subjects on Quakerism, in which young people are interested, are discussed with profit to all. The Christian Endeavor Society is not large, having but twenty members. These, however, are all young people under the age of thirty. The clipping habit has more hold upon the Society than one could wish, but this is being remedied as rapidly as possible. Very good attention was given to the work of the Young Friends Movement as outlined by the Secretary. There are rich things in store for Pasadena Friends, if the young people are kept to the front as at present. The Friends Meeting is carried on in much the same way as the Philadelphia meetings. The meeting house is not large, but it is comfortable. Out of the silence of meditation God raises up his minister whenever the meeting convenes. The lives and testimony of these Friends are beautiful. It is a matter for no little regret that some of our pastoral meetings have neglected this quiet simplicity which does build character. The rush of a meeting often wears off the edge of keen spiritual discernment. "Wait upon the Lord and thou shalt be filled."

"Little Chances to Help."—Exod. 17: 8-13.

The Koran tells of an angel who was sent from heaven to earth to do two things. One was to save King Solomon from doing some wrong thing to which he was inclined; and the other was to help a tiny yellow ant carry its load.

A boy's lunch fed a multitude. Our gifts in His hands are first blessed, then increased.

There isn't much said about Aaron and Hur; but they stood by Moses, held up his hands while he prayed and prayed with him. We can pray. Let us pray to do the inconspicuous, the unapplauded things, the little things that help.

"If I can lend

A strong hand to the fallen, or defend

The right against a single envious strain,

My life, tho bare

Perhaps of much that seemeth dear and fair

To us of earth, will not have been in vain."

"It takes courage even for youth to choose the way of the cross, to face and accept the sacrificial callings. But they are ready for it. Let prayer be made for students everywhere that they may do the present duty and face the future task with courage and devotion worth of the Christ to Whom their lives belong."—Exchange.

DIED.

Chappell—William H. Chappell, a minister and member of Deer Creek Monthly Meeting, Grant County, Indiana, was born in North Carolina September 10, 1829, and died in Springfield, Mo., April 16, 1916. He moved with his family to Indiana in 1857, where his wife died the following year, leaving him with two little daughters. He married Martha A. Henby in 1866 and to this union was born one daughter. On account of failing health he and his wife moved to Springfield, Mo., in 1914, to make their home with their daughter. He was actively engaged in the ministry about thirty years. He did much family visiting and many testified to the blessings they received. His strong, Christian character ennobled and enriched the lives of many.

Coffin—Anna Mary Coffin, wife of Arthur H. Coffin and daughter of Samuel S. and Anna S. Richie, died at her home in Denison, Texas, August 8, 1916.

Dakin—Peter Dakin died at his late home in Ferrisburg, Vermont, July 26, 1916, aged 83 years, 3 months and 27 days. He was a life-long Friend and his home has always been open to traveling Friends. He leaves three daughters and a sister. Funeral services were conducted from his late home by J. Edward Ransome assisted by William Palmer.

Hoskins—Maud Milner Hoskins, daughter of Moses and Ella Milner, was born March 19, 1873, and died at her quiet home near Carmel, Indiana, on the morning of August 11, 1916. She married Joseph J. Hoskins in 1902. She was a minister in the Friends church and her one great joy was winning souls to Christ. At the funeral service there were many testimonies from all classes of people to the effect that she was the one who had led them to Christ. One standing at the casket said, "She is not dead; she lives on in every heart and home in all this country."

Haworth—E. Marmaduke Haworth died at his home near Wilmington, Ohio, April 28, 1916, aged 66 years. He was a birthright Friend and always a firm believer in the doctrines and faith of that Society. For six years he was a trustee of Wilmington College and was always interested in its welfare for he placed a high estimate upon a Christian education. He is survived by the widow, two sons, two daughters and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Dover meeting house with Jesse Hawkins in charge.

Jones—David H. Jones, son of Hezekiah and Jerusha Jones, was born at Friendsville, Tennessee, March 5, 1846, and died at Pleasant Plain, Iowa, May 13, 1916. He came with his parents to Richland, Iowa, in 1851. He married Rebecca E. Stuart in 1871. After her death he married Rachel Hoskins in 1889. Not long after his second marriage he moved to Pleasant Plain, where he lived until his death. He was a birthright Friend, was converted in early life and lived a consistent Christian life. He was one of the leading members of Pleasant Plain Quarterly Meeting and a faithful and loyal supporter of the church. He leaves the widow, eight children, four grandchildren, a sister and three brothers.

Newby—John Newby was born in Grant County, Indiana, March 3, 1843, and died at his home in Tyro, Kansas, July 27, 1916. He was a member of Co. B. 33d Reg. Indiana Volunteers, enlisting September 26, 1864, and serving until the end of the war. He married Elizabeth Stanfield in 1864. They moved to Iowa in 1866 and later to Kansas. He was a member of the Friends church until a few years ago when he joined the Methodist church. He leaves the widow, six children, two brothers, two sisters and several grandchildren.

Price—George Washington Price was born November 31, 1836, and died July 16, 1916. He was a faithful member and elder of Woodland Monthly Meeting, Wayne county, N. C., having sat head of the meeting for many years. His end was peace.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

If We Only Understood

By RUDYARD KIPLING

If we knew the cares and trials,
Knew the efforts all in vain,
And the bitter disappointment,
Understood the loss and gain—
Would the grim eternal roughness
Seem—I wonder—just the same?
Should we help where now we hinder?
Should we pity where we blame?

Ah! we judge each other harshly,
Knowing not life's hidden force:
Knowing not the fount of action
Is less turbid at its source;
Seeing not amid the evil
All the golden grains of good;
And we'd love each other better
If we only understood.

Could we judge all deeds by motives
That surround each other's lives,
See the naked heart and spirit,
Know what spur the action gives,
Often we should find it better,
Purer than we judge we should,
We should love each other better
If we only understood.

RESPONSIBILITY

By HENRY GEKELER

With wordy charge and countercharge the air
Is rent; none owns that he began the fight.
The actors in this war play battledoor
And shuttlecock: back and forth they toss
The blame and the recriminating blame.
To us across the seas they shout—and we Are only men—their frenzied self-defense:
They cry, "It is not I!"—"Nor I!"—"Nor I!"
O Man of Sorrows, stricken afresh with grief,
Might they but gaze into Thy war-marred face
And ask: "Lord, is it I?"—Lord, is it I?"
They all agree it is a shameful war.
Blow by Thy mighty, vivifying breath
Upon the smoldering ashes of their shame,
That light blaze up to show the way to peace!

IN THE MANAGER'S OFFICE

Remember to notify all members of the local meeting that new subscribers can get The American Friend from now until January, 1918, for the price of a year's subscription, $1.50. Please see that some one is selected to solicit the subscriptions of all families not now getting the paper. Some energetic young person can generally be found who will be glad to serve the church by doing this. But the time to get results under this offer is now. The earlier the subscriptions are sent in, the more papers the subscriber will receive.

Send $2.00 for a NEW subscription to The American Friend and a copy of Charles M. Woodman's book, "The Present Day Message of Quakerism." This will be a saving of fifty cents. Address, The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

The American Friend is very desirous of closing out the remaining printed Proceedings and Addresses of the Men's Conference, held at Richmond, Indiana, last October. In the first place every Friend's family should have a copy of these able addresses in the library, and in the second place The American Friend needs the space for other material. 160 pages. Price, paper cover, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Address, The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

Friends in England are in constant need of more money, with which to carry on the relief work incident to the war. The American Friend will be glad to receive and forward any contributions for this purpose. Money is coming in almost daily. See blank on the next to the last page of this week's issue. Address, The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

Do not send news matter to the office at Urbana, Ohio, nor funds for the European sufferers, nor advertising orders. Only matters relating to subscriptions to The American Friend should go to the Urbana office. All other correspondence should be directed to the office at Richmond, Indiana, where the editor and manager lives.

AMENDING THE DISCIPLINE

By AARON M. BRAY

I believe that the attention of Friends composing the Five Years Meeting should be called to the only method by which it is possible to amend the Uniform Discipline, viz., the consent of all the Yearly Meetings constituting the Five Years Meeting.

An amendment has been submitted to the Yearly Meetings, providing for an amendment to the Discipline by the favorable action of four-fifths of the Yearly Meetings. It will be necessary however for all of them now members of the Five Years Meeting to ratify this amendment. Report was made to the Five Years Meeting of 1912 that New England, New York, Baltimore, North Carolina, Indiana, Western, Iowa and California had taken favorable action. This year Oregon ratified the amendment. This leaves Kansas, Nebraska, Wilmington and Canada, and until favorable action is taken by these, no change can be had except by unanimous consent.

Newberg, Oregon.

FRIENDS MISSIONARY ADVOCATE

The Friends Missionary Advocate for September is at hand and is an unusually interesting and instructive number. It is devoted to the American Indian, and contains an historical review of "Friends and Indians" by Rayner W. Kelsey, an extended account of the present work in Oklahoma, a report of present conditions at Tunesassa, a review of the life and work of Charles W. and Rachel H. Kirk, a paper on Elizabeth Test, and much other valuable material.

The Advocate should be a visitor every month in every Friend's family. By putting out special numbers each month, practically all of our mission fields can be adequately covered during the year. Send 50 cents for a year's subscription to Ethel Kirk Calvert, Selma, Ohio.

O, come today and let your sad heart begin to hope. Will He reveal himself? He did to the disciples and he will do it to us.—Andrew Murray.

The Essential Values of Christianity

Christianity is not a profession to be idealized, but a life of righteousness to be exemplified; it is not an idea to be talked about, but a condition of soul to be realized; it has to do with man's moral personality as the only true basis of righteousness in conduct in the world of social relationships. The temptation has always existed to make religion a matter of types and ceremonialism. Salvation through altar worship and priestly mediation, through eating at the table and washings by water, through the mechanism of a state church and the orderly entertainments of modern forms of worship, through plainness of dress or speech and particular denominational observances is vastly easier than salvation through the process of becoming a new creation, but is no more satisfactory now than in the days of the prophets.

Let us hear again the words of Isaiah: "What unto me is the multitude of your sacrifices? saith Jehovah; I have had enough of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats. * * * Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; new moon and Sabbath, the calling of assemblies * * * Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary of hearing them. And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear; your hands are full of blood."

And then comes the remedy. Hear the old prophet again as he looks into the needs of humanity: "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek justice, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. * * * Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." And again: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto Jehovah." Christianity means a new life, not a rearrangement of the old, else how can the desert blossom as the rose and how can the thorn be displaced by the fir-tree and the brier by the myrtle-tree? If any man be in Christ, "he is a new creature," not merely a readjusted old one. There is an admonition against putting new cloth into old garments. A mended machine is not typical of a Christianity that endures, but to the true disciple "the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new."

The beloved Corinthian church was a subject of much concern to its founder, because all too much of the corrupting spirit of the city had been perpetuated in the church. To a considerable element the new religion meant little more than a change in profession, and while holding to the faith, the members were torn into factions and many had maintained their worldly and even licentious relationships. Paul could not address them as his spiritual equals, but admonishes and even rebukes them, commanding them to put away all divisions and worldly practices and commends them to his risen Lord, in whom they were to become a new creation and find reconciliation with God.

The Corinthian church was typical of all too much that is found in modern religion. It is far easier to maintain factionalism than it is to weld factions into a united, working organism by the white heat of a consuming passion for the betterment of humanity; it is easier to tolerate worldliness in the church and even to condone business or political or social delinquency than it is to insist upon positive cleanness of soul and life as the only bond of fellowship in spiritual things; it is more expedient to lower the Christian standards to suit the tastes of the world than it is to lift the world to the standards of the Sermon on the Mount; it is more convenient to consent to the reign of militarism than it is to love our enemies; it is safer to protect ourselves by guns and forts and ships than it is to rely upon the high tower of Jehovah; it is more practical to transact business according to "business principles" than according to the golden rule, or to administer government according to the rules of "practical politics" than according to the demands of righteousness.

To the natural mind the precepts of Jesus are paradoxical, for how can the meek inherit the earth, how can men love their enemies, how can men be blessed when they are being reviled and persecuted, why should the obligation of seeking reconciliation rest upon the innocent? How foolish it is to turn the other cheek for smiting, to go two miles when only one is required, to give a cloak when the law requires only the coat, to suppose that the least one is really the greatest! How hard it is to understand that the emphasis of Christianity is upon heart life and soul values, and that these are the only things that really count when humanity is being weighed in the balances! After all there is only one explanation for the seeming paradoxes of Christianity. Man's carnality, his proneness to evil, his disposition to selfishness; must, through forgiveness and the transformation of being born again, yield to the new creation of a purified life, wherein ideals are changed, the spiritual vision is clarified and life begins to function according to the program of Jesus Christ.

There never was a time when vital Christianity could make a more effective appeal to a distressed world than now, and there was never a greater demand for the actual practice of the teachings of Jesus in both individual and collective life. The incarnation of the gospel is the one and only remedy for all the ills of humanity. The world must be led to turn away from Neitzsche and from all materialistic philosophies to accept the philosophy of the New Testament, and the church of Christ, operating through the fellowship of redeemed personality, must point the way for afflicted humanity throughout the world.

The Military Service Acts

By ANNA B. THOMAS

It must seem strange to many Friends in America that free England which engaged in a war to put an end to militarism and to restore liberty to humanity, should herself turn persecutor and apparently seek to force the consciences of some fifteen hundred of her loyal and well disposed subjects. That these fifteen hundred loyal subjects should refuse to aid their country in any way in her hour of need may seem still more strange. Perhaps a simple narrative of the facts will help to clear up the mystery.

Universal conscription for all males between eighteen and forty-one (except for ordained ministers in starred occupations and men exempted on the ground of conscientious objection), is now the law of the land. When the exemption clause was inserted in the first conscription act, the government seems to have supposed that only members of the Society of Friends would come under its working. These were known to be comparatively few and it was felt that they had a strong claim to consideration from the non-political character of their testimony and from its long established record. Undoubtedly the clause was inserted to meet their case, although no denomination was named.

None the less it is a fact that the government was warned that there were thousands of other objectors, not only on similar grounds, but on humanitarian, socialistic and political grounds as well. However, they chose to take the risk and to go forward. The crucial mistake seems to have been in the selection of the bodies appointed to carry out the act.

The so-called Tribunals were local committees already appointed in every municipal district of Great Britain to deal with the men attested under Lord Derby's plan. In most cases a "labor representative" was added to the existing committee in order to safeguard the interests of labor. A former inspector of tramway tickets represents labor on the tribunal in my own district, and he knows just about as much of its business needs as I do myself. A "military representative" often called the M. R. also sits with each Tribunal, theoretically to supply expert military information. In practice the M. R. often dominates the Tribunal and his advice is very rarely disregarded. If it is, he usually appeals against the decision and over and over again an exemption has been cancelled by the Appeal Tribunal on the advice of the M. R.

Imagine several hundred of these bodies (there are at least eighty in London alone), many of them confessedly ignorant of what a conscientious objection is, some of them denying its existence, all impressed with their own importance and anxious above all to get men into the army. Imagine these people with no previous experience to guide them and each one a law unto itself, striving to deal with a complex law wholly new and strange, under the dominating influence of a wave of national excitement, strong enough to have ensured the passage of an act repugnant to all the traditions of Englishmen through a Liberal House of Commons by a majority of some 333 to 339 votes, and you may judge what chance there was of its just or uniform administration.

People had gladly believed in the sincerity of the exemption clauses and they were shocked and astonished at their unsatisfactory working. Soon it became evident that men of admitted probity—Christian men—university men, men whose sincerity was vouched for by ministers of the gospel—were being subjected to jocular bullying and coarse invective. They were asked whether they ever washed themselves—whether they had ever killed an insect—asked what they would do if the Germans came and attacked their grandmother, mother, sister, aunt or cousins—told that such as they were not fit to live with honest men, etc. The mere shorthand reports of hundreds of these cases would be wholly incredible at any other time and absurdly ridiculous were it not so serious.

Take one or two instances from my own observation. F. is a young, strong, fresh colored market gardener, a zealous Baptist, strongly opposed to war on the ground of the teaching of Christ. He pleaded to be allowed to do national service by working on the land for which his business training fitted him, (workers on the land are so much needed that children of eleven and twelve are being taken from school to help the farmers). The application was abruptly refused, the M. R. saying, "We want this man in the army." Young F. is now undergoing sentence of one hundred and twelve days imprisonment with hard labor for refusal to obey military orders.

Another man, M. by name, was partner in a firm of chartered accountants. He had long objected to war and had stopped attending his own place of worship on account of the warlike views of the minister who, however, testified in writing to his sincerity. He asked to be allowed to find work of national importance under the Pelham Committee, (a Parliamentary Committee appointed for this express purpose). The Tribunal, which was a special appeal one sitting in the Guildhall at Westminster, answered that they had no "official" information of the existence of such a body and Mr. M. was given exemption from combatant service only. This meant that he was handed over to the military and by them assigned to some auxiliary service. Refusing to obey orders he was court-martialled and is now serving a term of hard labor in a civil prison.

Another objector, whose case has become notorious, was seized by the military before he had ever been before the appeal Tribunal. He was bullied, starved, put in irons—imprisoned for several days in a dark cell on bread and water—and then sent to France. In France he was court-martialled again for refusing to obey military orders and sentenced to death, the sentence being later commuted to ten years of penal servitude. This kind of thing proved too much for the English conscience even in war time, and such a storm arose that the government was forced to insist that the military authorities should bring back the conscientious objectors who had been taken to France and hand them over to the civil authorities for the carrying out of their sentences. Hence this man and hundreds of others are now in civil prisons. The confusion and inequality in carrying out the Acts have thus been very great and one understands why so many men are in prison when one sees the Tribunals refusing them the work they would gladly do, and ordering them into the army, thus leaving them no choice but to resist.

Friends, as such, have received much more considerate treatment; only some twenty in all have been refused exemption and have consequently found their way into prison. Many more are doing work with one or other of the Friends' Relief Committees, others have been allowed to take up work of national importance, e.g. on the land. Others have been given complete exemption on the ground of the importance of the work they are already engaged in.

But to the impartial onlooker the lesson from the present situation is clear and convincing, viz., military rule is blind to all the ordinary necessities of civilian life and is inconceivably stupid and bungling. Woe to that land which upon any pretext whatever turns away from the paths of peace to follow the military ideal.

London, England.

THE DEITY OF CHRIST

(Editorial in The United Presbyterian.)

The divinity of Jesus is one of the most clearly revealed truths of history. From the beginning of His life to the end of it there is a succession of wonders and miracles that confirm the marvelous yet blessed fact that Christ came forth from God. There is no life that contains so much of the supernatural. The halo of divinity was around Him from the moment when He lay a babe in the manger worshiped by the sages of the earth, sung over by angels of heaven and looked upon with awe by the shepherds, until that hour, at the end of His public ministry, when He overcame the attraction of gravity and ascended to the skies in the presence of His disciples, and went back to His native heaven leading captivity captive.

We need only to follow that life from its advent in Bethlehem to its departure from earth on Olivet to find in it evidence sufficient to convince the most skeptical that Jesus was divine. He came in fulfillment of prophecy. Even the place of His birth was predicted. It was foretold that He should be born of a virgin; that He should be called out of Egypt; that He should be called a Nazarene. And so at almost every stage of His life we find Him fulfilling the prophecies of the Old Testament Scriptures.

The evidences of His divinity were shown also in the divine words that were spoken of Him at the time of His baptism, when the Spirit descended in dove-like form upon Him and God said of Him: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." The same voice spoke a second time on the mount of transfiguration when the Redeemer's face shone as the sun and His garments were white as the light, saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him." This is God's own testimony to the divinity of His Son. But that life itself, as lived on the earth, was a confirmation of His divine claims. He was "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners"; He of whom even his worst enemies were compelled to speak well. Pilate, who condemned him, said: "I find no fault in Him"; Pilate's wife said to her husband: "Have thou nothing to do with that just man"; and the centurion, who put Him to death, said, in view of the supernatural manifestations at that hour: "Truly this was the Son of God."

The divine works which He wrought were confirmations strong as proofs of Holy Writ. Nicodemus, after witnessing some of his wondrous miracles, said to Him: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no one can do these signs that Thou doest except God be with him." To heal the sick, to raise the dead, to still the angry billows by a word, and bring back life to the dead show a power that is not natural, but belongs to the divine. And think of the wonderful doctrine that He proclaimed! the gospel that has held the world captive to higher ideals and nobler incentives than it ever knew before. Then there were the supernatural manifestations at the time of His crucifixion, when the heavens were darkened from the sixth until the ninth hour; when the rocks were rent, and the graves were opened, and the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. Then there is His resurrection, His supernatural coming forth from the grave after He had been dead and buried for three days; there were His mysterious appearances and disappearances after His resurrection, when He came into the house the windows and doors being closed, when he walked in the morning on the sea beach and gave that wonderful draught of fishes to the toiling disciples; there was His ascension from the Mount of Olives, an act that could only be accomplished by divine power; and then, too, there was the fulfillment of His promise in the sending of the Holy Ghost at the time of Pentecost when the Church of the New Dispensation was formally launched. If the truth of Christ's divinity has not been fully confirmed by the life and teachings of Christ Himself, and by the supernatural incidents that accompanied Him, then no proposition can be confirmed by evidence. Every child of God can truly say with Simon Peter: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

PRESIDENT APPOINTS SPECIAL WAR RELIEF DAYS

By act of Congress, the President has appointed October 21 and 22 as days for the relief of the suffering among the Armenians and Syrians. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will send out the appeal to all the churches for a generous response. The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief will seek to reach every community in the land, in an effort to relieve a distress greater than any the world has ever before witnessed.

Pastors are urged to set apart Sunday, October 22, for this purpose. Sermon material will be furnished to all the pastors by the Federal Council.

Improvement in a soul gets ownership in it, even as it does in land. We may have a property in every one we meet, if only we can find out how to bless him.—Horace Bushnell.

THE YOUNG MARRIED WOMAN

By RUWONE

She was thirty or thereabout. She had three children, bless their little hearts. And she wanted to be of some use in the world.

She entered her pretty living room, dropped into an easy chair and sighed, "I'm so tired! I'm just so tired! I read my paper this afternoon at the missionary society. I have another to prepare for the club. The ladies' aid wants me to help in their entertainment and the president of the County's Sunday School Association has asked me to sing at the coming convention.

"No, oh no, I'm not so popular! It's not that at all. It's just because it is so hard to get anyone to do these things.

"Every interest has its organizer who seems fully persuaded that his or her work is the most important in the world. But we poor people are the same. And we're organized for this and organized for that and organized for the other, until all the energy and individuality has just about been organized out of me.

"Oh children! don't be so cross and do be still!

"In these, so stressful times, I sometimes see a little girl back in the old home, in the long summer afternoons, with a book in her hands, lying prone on her stomach, reading or dreaming for hours, yes hours. As Pollyanna says, she had time to just live, in those days.

"On Saturday afternoon every frock must have its frill neatly basted in. Shoes must be polished and set aside. And mother saw that we had our Sunday School lesson for the morrow. It seems to me that almost all I know about the Bible, I learned then.

"Little ones, would you be better off in an orphan asylum? If this rush keeps up you may have to go there. I'm so tired."

"Does thee know of what thee reminds me?" asked the ancient lady.

"What?" almost crossly.

"Does thee remember the story of the old woman who took a half bottle of castor oil, because she thought if a little was good more would be better?"

"What in the world!" said the young married woman.

"Just too much of a good thing, wasn't it?"

"My dear, I have known many women like thy mother. They had much work to do. Their days were full days. Yet they found time for the best things. Perhaps they learned the art of selection, the art of not doing as well as doing.

"They regularly attended First Day School and meeting. Here they met their neighbors and communed with God, and were strengthened and refreshed.

"Some of them came to feel that there was a whole range of subjects that did not appropriately belong either to First Day School or meeting, so they organized the club. Here they could discuss anything from the best way to wash dishes to the best method of bringing up children. They could study places and people from their own community to the uttermost parts of the earth.

"This, added to First Day School and meeting, gave them a balanced ration, spiritually and mentally, satisfied their social instincts and gave variety to life. They grew and flourished. But humanity is prone to spoil a good thing. And that which lightened and brightened toil, was increased to become, itself, a great burden to many women.

"In the multiplicity of things, everyone has to choose not only what is good, but what is good for her, with her surroundings.

"There are talented unmarried women, there are childless married women, and women whose children have grown up and left the home nest, who have time and strength to use for the betterment of others, whose work is a blessing to the world.

"But what will it profit a woman to belong to many organizations, if her own children grow up warped and stunted?

"Especially children and mothers need time to just live."

"Well, I must get supper," said the young married woman, rather curtly.

She started to the kitchen. Passing through the dining room she lifted the cover over the table, and behold! it was set with a dainty, bounteous meal all ready for the eating.

She rushed back to the room. "Oh! you lovely, obliging ancient lady, you should not have done all this." "We helped, mainma, we helped," piped the children.

"I knew you would be tired," said the ancient lady.

"Dear ancient lady, were you ever so worn out that you were nervous and naughty?"

"Many times."

"Did you ever feel altogether unworthy of your husband and children?"

"Very keenly."

"Did you ever resolve to cut out, and cut out and cut out things until your strength and time were sufficient for the rest?"

"The Lord led me that way to peace and rest. And what may surprise thee, to achievement."

"Please forgive me, my crudeness," said the young married woman.

"Go to thy room and rest until thy husband comes in," said the ancient lady.

With a merry twinkle again in her eyes, she turned to the children. "Kiddies, I guess you won't have to go to the orphan asylum just yet. If you'll be good you may come with mother."

"We'll be dood, we'll be dood," they exclaimed. "And we'll be still, just as still," said the eldest.

So with the littlest one in her arms and the others hanging to her skirts she entered her room and softly closed the door.

THE HOUSE BEAUTIFUL

By MRS. J. H.

It was on a side street in the city of O. The name was not on the door plate, but I can see now with the clearer vision which time has given, that when I stepped into the cosy sitting room and clasped the hand of the little woman who was its mistress, I began an acquaintance with house beautiful.

One unusual characteristic of the house was its capacity. It could be enlarged to a remarkable extent. You need not fear to go there were you delayed in the city over night, for beds could be laid in unexpected places, and if the sudden demands upon the larder could not be fully met, what there was was dispensed with such hospitality that you felt that all was right. You had been inconsiderate and should not have gone there without letting her know? Why no! Had it not been a pleasure for her to see you and to minister to your necessities?

And so the years went by and the old house extended its hospitality and comfort to a great number and of varying conditions. Some were well-to-do and some so forlorn and down in their luck that they came and went by the back door. Among the latter was Quinn, who used to come slipping around to the summer kitchen when he had been drinking. He had fallen so many times that his friends had lost patience with him, thought he was a hopeless drunkard. But when everyone else had turned him down he was sheltered at house beautiful and tided over again and again, till the Lord saved him and he became a strong Christian worker.

Then there was Nellie from down in the country. She was sick and had not the money to go to the hospital. She was installed in the beautiful down stairs bedroom and given skilled nursing at a nominal cost which she could afford to pay.

As I close my eyes I can see again the candle light twinkling through the halls in the small hours of the morning, and know that it marked an errand of love to the sick in soul and body.

Oh house beautiful, no earthly architect planned thy excellences nor could skilled modiste have fashioned more beautiful attire than the plain garments of the little woman, worn with her good works.

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll
Leave thy low vaulted past,
Let each new temple nobler than the last Shut thee from heaven
With a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell
By life's unresting sea."

THE WOUNDS OF THE SPIRIT

By DAISY RHODES CAMPBELL

The papers and magazines are full of the terrible war across the sea and what is only lesser by comparison, the distress in Mexico. Thus far we are immune and look on the sad panorama with sorrowful sympathy, apart yet one, in the spirit of brotherhood.

Yet the world is and has always been a stage whereon is daily enacted a warfare where there are the wounded and heavy of heart.

Troubles came out of Pandora's box, but they wouldn't have stayed and multiplied if mortals had not meddled and helped distribute them. Some of them seem small and they only sting; others penetrate to the innermost soul.

Life is hard enough for most of us. We all know days which seem almost unendurable. And usually it is on these days that the bullet is shot. We hear that a friend whom we love and trust has said most unkind things of us, things we feel we do not deserve.

Or, we start out in high spirits to some pleasant function and return crushed and sobered. A sneer, a cool criticism, a sharp retort has turned our day into night. The world which on our way seemed beautiful and desirable appears on our return a dismal place.

Physical ills and lack of strength are more common among American women than any other nation. The majority of them do their own housework in addition to their care of children, often sewing, and social and church demands. How they accomplish it all is a matter of amazement. The sudden breaking down, the serious illnesses, the nervousness which is our national curse, is a natural consequence of this overwork, this undertaking of so many and so varied tasks.

Mrs. Hasbrook after a nerve-racking day of combining cook, housemaid, seamstress, answering the telephone and front door, tries to summon the welcoming smile which women are taught is the only method of meeting their lord when he comes to dinner. Peter Hasbrook's frown is portentous.

"Isn't dinner ready?" he asks, "I have a deal on at half after one. Now children," he turns to the noisy trio coming in the side entrance, "be quiet. Father wants to breathe. Do hurry, Mary," to the wife, "You've no idea what a busy morning I've had. You women have it easy. You are in a sheltered spot. You haven't the wear and tear of nerves we have. I thought I told you I wanted steak today; we had stew yesterday."

"So much was left, I made a scallop," Mary explains. Her back is breaking, she feels that one more word and she will burst into tears. They sit down to the well-cooked meal.

"Just think!" Hester bursts forth, "Elsie Darwin said her mother says you don't know how to manage one bit; that with Father's income we ought to live lots better. It made me as mad as hops. I didn't tell her that Father told you the same thing."

"Your father saying so doesn't make it true," the mother replies hotly, then breaks down.

"I don't believe a man can ever have quiet or comfort in his home. I don't blame them for living at their clubs!" the man of the house asserts, as he swallows his meal and departs.

The "unruly member" of Scripture has much to answer for; its office in peace is the same as the rifle in war. The wounds it makes do not bleed, they only bring heartache and discouragement.

It is, alas! in our church work that many of these wounds are given. A woman declared the other day: "I think it takes real courage to work constantly in our church societies. I've done it since I was a child, and the criticisms, the rebuffs, the sarcasm I've heard and received are appalling."

"Yes," said another, "I agree with you. I made up my mind long ago never to resent anything, but it has taken almost superhuman effort to keep that vow. I've come home often from a church supper or market, sick at heart over my day's experience."

A child goes to school happy and singing. She comes home at noon in tears because a boy has ridiculed her clothes, or a girl has taunted her with being proud. A boy I knew went to class in a spirit of good humor towards all the world. During class his teacher without the slightest provocation held him up to ridicule before the school, and with the power of one in authority, added cutting sarcasm to her first attack. The boy, sensitive and proud, kept up in public, but he came home with severe nausea and a nervous headache as a result.

A daughter of a newly-rich mother said in a loud tone to her governess: "Don't let that girl in the gate; she's poor; her father is only a clerk. Fannie (her sister) goes with her but I shan't."

The child in question who had come on Fannie's invitation, was a refined, well-mannered but sensitive child, and turned away, cut to the quick. She was not old enough to rise superior to ill-breeding and snobbery. There is hardly a day that some member of a family has not to bear wounds of the spirit; sometimes they take the initiative in the battle.

Some one said: "Heaven may send or allow some troubles, but man always makes them worse."

A Chinese boy came to this country where he was sent to Sunday school. He kept on for several Sundays when he presented himself before the officer who had adopted him.

"Captain," he said deprecatingly, "I've tried, but I can't stand these Christians any longer. They make fun of me, they fight me, they taunt me; they say things against my parents and country. I can bear it no more."

"Very well, John," said the other. "You can go to church with me and I shall teach you the Bible at home."

He had tried to impress upon the boy—a gentle, affectionate creature—the superiority of the Christian religion and had sent him to Sunday school to bring him into contact with the disciples of that faith, but he could not persist in the face of the persecution that made life a burden.

Two or three girls in a certain high school determined to boycott a new girl from entering a sorority. The girl was good, refined, bright, and of excellent family, yet she was not allowed the desired membership from the feelings of spite held by a very few.

A young boy, half Indian, half Spanish, was brought by a gentleman to this country from South America. He was so persecuted by American boys that he was made ill by their treatment, and his school life was so unhappy he had to be taken from school.

So we Christians go on our way towards the better country dealing cuts here and there with sharp tongues and cold looks, while some faint, disheartened sister, seeking comfort and help among us in her hard life, is instead hurt and often despairing. "Whoso offendeth one of these little ones."

FAMILY PRAYERS IN AN INN

Rowland Hill was once driven by a storm into a village inn, and compelled to spend the night. When it grew late the landlord sent a request by the waiter that the guest would go to bed. Mr. Hill replied: "I have been waiting a long time, expecting to be called to family prayer."

"Family prayer! I don't know what you mean, sir; we never have such things here."

"Indeed! Then tell your master I can not go to bed until we have had family prayer."

The waiter informed his master, who, in consternation, bounced into the room occupied by the faithful minister, and said: "Sir, I wish you would go to bed. I can not go till I have seen all the lights out; I am so afraid of fire."

"So am I," was the reply; "but I have been expecting to be summoned to family prayer."

"All very good, sir; but it can not be done in an inn."

"Indeed! Then pray get my horse. I can not sleep in a house where there is no family prayer."

The host preferred to dismiss his prejudice rather than his guest, and said, "I have no objection to have prayer, but I don't know how."

"Well, then, summon your people, and let us see what can be done."

The landlord obeyed, and in a few minutes the astonished domestics were on their knees and the landlord was called upon to pray.

"Sir, I have never prayed in my life; I don't know how."

"Ask the Lord to teach you," was the gentle reply.

The landlord said, folding his hands, "God, teach us how to pray!"

"That is prayer, my friend," cried Mr. Hill, joyfully. "Go on!"

"I'm sure I don't know what to say, now, sir."

"Yes, you do; God has taught you to pray; now thank Him for it."

"Thank you, God Almighty, for letting us pray to you."

"Amen! Amen!" exclaimed Mr. Hill, and then prayed himself.

Two years afterward Mr. Hill found a chapel and a school as a result of the first effort of family prayer at the "Black Lion."—Tales of Trust.

LISTENING TO THE BIBLE

A good many Christian people are tired of the Bible. It is startling to think this, and to say it; yet many a Christian in entire honesty has to admit it. Most of us have had the experience, at least as a temporary one. We believe in the Bible; we know that it is the most wonderful book in the world; but perhaps it does not hold us with the same spontaneous freshness and interest that we find some other books have for us. What is the trouble? At the close of a recent summer conference many were testifying to their new vision and appropriation of Christ as their life. Some had found that the Bible had thereby become a new book to them, and the leader made a striking suggestion. We had unconsciously thought, he said, of the Bible as a music-box, which could play a certain number of tunes; we would wind it up, and listen to those old familiar tunes—and we had gotten tired of them. But now we are finding that the Bible is not a music-box, but a telephone, and that our Lord Jesus Christ is at the other end of the telephone. Realizing that it is He that is there speaking to us, we find its message His message, always new. Have you exchanged your music-box for a telephone? "I will hear what God the Lord will speak."—Sunday School Times.

LIFE THROUGH FAITH

What Mott gives his audiences is the simple, old-time talk of "abounding life" through a personal belief. He devotes half of his one hour to bringing home the sense of guilt to the individual soul. He shows you your life is a battleground where you are beset by temptation and defeated from time to time by sin. He tells you he sees by your face that he is speaking to individual need, and that you are asking, "What is there for me?" From his twenty-eight years of student experience, from knowing the names and the problems of tens of thousands of students, he says he brings a message of hope. By exercise of your religious faculty you can overcome the sin that keeps tripping you. Your life—life abounding, wider, deeper, of more vol-better self is dead, but Christ can communicate ume, than the sterile, withered surface life you have been living.—Harper's Weekly.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING

The one-hundred-fourth annual session of Ohio Yearly Meeting was held at Damascus, Ohio, from Eighth month 22nd to 26th. In point of attendance, interest, and manifest spiritual power and blessing but few times has the Yearly Meeting been so highly favored.

The presence and gospel messages of the following visiting ministers were greatly appreciated: Lettice Jowitt of London Yearly Meeting; Mead A. Kelsey, F. H. Tormohlen and Millie Lawhead of Indiana Yearly Meeting; Edgar T. Hole of the Friends Africa Industrial Mission. Joseph H. and Jean Kinkead Smith, of Redlands, California, had charge of the morning and evening devotional and evangelistic meetings. The teaching in these meetings was of unusual clearness and power. Many seekers found their way to the altar.

The presence of Walter and Myrtle Williams, missionaries to China; Carrie B. Wood, missionary to India; and Edgar T. Hole of the Friends Africa Industrial Mission, made the session devoted to missionary work one of very great interest. In honor of Delia A. Fistler, who gave some twenty years of her life to the work in India, a memorial service was conducted in which J. Walter Malone spoke of her consecration and early ministry; Carrie B. Wood, a fellow worker, of her ability and devotion upon the field; Elmer C. Wood of her home since being unable to remain upon the field and John Pennington in exhortation to greater devotion on the part of those at home to the interests of the missionaries. J. Walter Malone closed the service with prayer.

All lines of missionary work showed increased activity. The treasurer's report elicited much thankfulness when it became known that more than $16,000 had been paid into the treasury and a balance of $1,500 remained at the close of the year.

The Evangelistic and Pastoral work has prospered under the care of District Superintendents, Edward Mott, Elizabeth Ward and John Pennington. Edward Mott, being unable to continue in this work, is succeeded by William Kirby. There are in the Yearly Meeting 66 meetings, 105 ministers, 62 meetings having pastoral care, and a reported total membership of 5840.

At the time of the report of the Educational Board much attention was given to the work of the Cleveland Bible Institute. The Institute received most hearty commendation and assistance given in the raising of $25,000 to help fittingly celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Institute in 1917.

Aaron S. Watkins gave a very strong and convincing address in connection with the report of the committee on the Abolition of the Liquor Traffic.

While no session was especially given to the consideration of the subject of Peace a special Epistle from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, the Dublin and Canada Epistles, and the presence and addresses of Lettice Jowitt, an English Friend, gave this important subject a prominent place.

The Friends Rescue Home at Columbus is increasing in its scope and usefulness and is finding a continually greater place among the interests of the Yearly Meeting. Two residences on adjoining lots, with 24 feet of intermediate space suitable for building, have been purchased and a building fund already started in an effort to have these two buildings joined into one large building. Eighty girls were brought under the influence of this Christian home last year. By far the greater number of these were converted and restored to lives of usefulness.

Ohio Yearly Meeting has every reason to take on new courage as it enters another year of service in the Master's vineyard. The Yearly Meeting will be held next year at Mt. Pleasant.

RALPH S. COPPOCK.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

The fifty-fourth assemblage of Iowa Yearly Meeting during the week divided between August and September, evinced epoch making tendencies. There was an exhilarating alertness about the accomplishments of the sessions. The opening attendance, and the number of representatives responding to roll call the first session, were larger than usual. More and fuller hours throughout the week, compared with other years, were devoted to the tasks in hand. Acceptable messages emphasized the devotional periods. Supplemental legislation of importance was enacted.

Better continuity of action by boards and standing committees will be conserved by the newly adopted plan of having only one-third the members retire annually.

Charles O. Whitely, lately of Oregon, was made evangelistic superintendent, succeeding Harry R. Keates, whose resignation of last February became effective at this time.

Seldom has Iowa Yearly Meeting been so moved as by the reading of the epistle from London Yearly Meeting. It is recognized as a foremost Peace treatise eminently worthy a more general circulation. Samuel L. Haworth, president Minnesota State Peace Society, gave the address at session devoted to this subject. The Peace committee has been unusually active.

An early morning mission study class was conducted by Ross A. Hadley, assistant secretary American Friends' Board of Missions. Elizabeth Allen an English woman, serving Iowa Yearly Meeting as missionary in Jamaica, and Ross A. Hadley addressed the session devoted to these interests.

The Endeavor vesper service on the campus was enriched through a series of addresses by Dr. Clarence M. Case of Penn College. A class in methods was conducted by Mary B. McPherrin, state secretary C. E. Union. On Friday evening the Endeavorers enjoyed a picnic in a nearby grove.

A profound impression was made by President David M. Edwards' report on Penn College, detailing the successful $400,000 campaign, and outlining future plans. Penn is doing things.

A watermelon feast for men was enjoyed after the Thursday evening session. About two hundred attended. S. Edgar Nicholson of Richmond, Ind., editor of The American Friend, and Ancil Ratcliff of Fairmount, same state, addressed the men. It is proposed to make this informal men's conference a regular part of the yearly Meeting.

The women of the local meeting served meals in the church basement dining room, this arrangement facilitating the week's accomplishments, and adding to personal convenience.

Thought is being given to improved financial records. Two years ago department funds were directed centralized with the Yearly Meeting treasurer. Good business methods are strongly encouraged. It was recommended that a trusteeship be created to care for all Yearly Meeting trust funds. A committee is working jointly with the general treasurer on a uniform system of records and reports. Attention is also being given to arranging a more complete record of real estate belonging to Yearly and subordinate meetings.

The Bible School Board encouraged a closer relationship with the organized work of the state, through arranging for an excellent address by W. D. Stem, secretary of Iowa State Sunday School Association.

Attention lately given to the important matter of statistics is showing results. One may now draw conclusions from figures exhibited. Though a slight decrease in membership is shown, it is believed that general church conditions are improved to a degree more than offsetting the negligible numerical decline.

The period devoted to state of society brought encouragement. The lack in some localities was counteracted by excellent progress in others. If a Friends' Yearly Meeting may be allowed the luxury of a "key note," this fall in Iowa it would be: Cultivate the possibilities in rural communities.

The evangelistic committee, alert to the latest trend, will arrange for rural church conferences. More attention will be given to local meetings for the immediate present than to the Quarterly Meetings. The committee purposes to resume the tent method of church extension work next summer.

Ancil Ratcliff convinces because he supplants theories by relating how the rural church problem has actually been solved in his neighborhood, Fairmount, Ind. That country church is the nucleus of neighborhood energies. Religion and business are partners. The force actuating better crop production, better breeds of stock, and improved social conditions originates in the church. The institution impels neighborhood support because it has earned recognition as a spiritual and social benefit, and as an agency of financial gain.

Interest was expressed in the forthcoming Five Years' Meeting beyond the mere naming of delegates. It is expected that a number from Iowa Yearly Meeting outside of those officially appointed will attend the conference, due to a growing interest in this admirable co-operative movement.

The voluntary expressions of appreciation regarding The American Friend are gratifying evidences that the church publication is becoming yearly more indispensable among the individual membership.

THE IOWA PAGE

C. E. DEPARTMENT

The young people who attended Iowa Yearly Meeting had a great many reasons to be glad. Of course there were the regular exercises of the week, which are always full of interest and give one a new vision of the field where he may make his influence count for most. But this year the Executive Committee made special effort to arrange for features that would appeal directly to the needs of young people.

Classes in Missions and C. E. Methods were conducted by Ross A. Hadley, Assistant Secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, and Miss Mary McPherrin, Field Secretary of the State Endeavor Union of Iowa, respectively. These were well attended and proved that that they were what the young folks wanted. Another very special feature was the address by Clarence M. Case of Penn College on each of three evenings. These talks dealt with the Meaning and Message of Quakerism, and challenged the thought of those who were privileged to hear them.

At the request of the Executive Committee the local society at Oskaloosa provided opportunity each afternoon when everyone might meet everyone else in a social way. These occasions added much to the pleasure of the week.

The annual picnic on Friday evening was a success. As in former years, it was held at the Old Yearly Meeting grounds. After a short time spent in games and visiting, the lunch was served, cafeteria style. When everyone had had his fill of sandwiches, bananas, cake, and ice cream and had topped off the meal with an "all day sucker," we gathered on the grass while Ora and Golda Carrell, Harold Lane and Samuel Haworth told of the splendid conference the Young Friends had at Cedar Lake, Indiana. After an earnest talk by Olen Hunt of Kansas, in which he urged us to sacrifice for Christ, we had a few prayers and went immediately to the C. E. service.

In telling of Endeavor Day, we must not fail to mention the helpful address given by Charles O. Whitely, the new Superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension Work. His subject was "The Results of Consecration.' He emphasized four words, visitation, vision, vigor and victory. The application of these can easily be made. It was a talk that stirred our hearts and made each one desire to live a life more fully devoted to His cause.

With the full effect of the evening meeting still upon us, we went to the back campus, where some of the boys had started a bonfire, and there, in the cheerful glow, after a brief song service, while the crowd was gathering, many voiced the purpose that had been strengthened in their lives. Then after a number of brief prayers, all joined hands in a great circle and sang "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." Surely no one who was there can soon forget that service.

In the business meeting the same officers were continued. They are: Pres., T. Clyde Coffin, Pleasant Plain, Iowa; First Vice Pres., Walter Homan, Des Moines, Ia.; Second Vice Pres., Cora M. Mattison, Oskaloosa, Iowa; Secretary-Treasurer, Cassa M. Conover, Oskaloosa, Iowa; Missionary Superintendent, R. P. Bogue; Junior Superintendent, Tacy Ratcliff, Lynnville, Iowa.

Will you kindly appoint your correspondent at once and see that items of interest from your Society are sent promptly to Cora M. Mattison, Oskaloosa, Iowa?

NEWS NOTES

Work is progressing slowly on the new church at Tangier, Indiana.

James M. Swander has begun his work at Coloma, Indiana, and resides in the recently equipped parsonage.

The various Friends meetings at Richmond, Indiana, are planning to observe centennial day on October 8 in accordance with the plan recently set forth in the columns of The American Friend.

The Monthly Meeting and C. E. Society at Bloomingdale, Indiana, are jointly arranging to carry out the suggested program for the centennial observance of the admission of Indiana as a state. A noon time luncheon will be a feature of the service.

The superintendents of the various departments of Bloomingdale Quarterly Meeting, Indiana, held an extended meeting recently to consider departmental work of the Quarterly Meeting. It was decided to secure, if possible, some leading speakers on peace work during the fall and winter.

WORK OPENING AT MATAMOROS

Sarah R. Charles, after spending most of the past summer with her mother at Fountain City, Indiana, returned to her work at H. Matamoros, Mexico, the 25th of last month. Writing two days later, she tells of the warm welcome given her by Mexican friends and patrons of Hussey Institute, the mission school, as well as by the other missionaries. She crossed the border without any difficulty whatever from customs officers. "In fact," she says, "the custom house officers and other Mexicans with whom I had to deal were very kind and courteous, even declining to search my trunks for dutiable articles or objectionable ones—such as firearms. My gallant coachman, one of our patrons, explained to the officer that I was 'returning, not to do the people harm but rather good, by opening the eyes of our children, blinded by ignorance, by means of educating them.'"

Nancy L. Lee has remained in or near Matamoros during the entire summer. The mission property is in good condition. The buildings have just been cleaned and whitewashed in anticipation of the opening of school which was to have occurred the first week of this month.

AFRICAN CHRISTIANS AT WORK FOR CHRIST

Some months ago at a worker's meeting, we gave the lesson of the Christian soldier and his armor, from Ephesians VI. In the testimony meeting which followed, each in his turn spoke of himself as a soldier of Christ: one with the weakness of fear, another with his tendency to go ahead of his captain, another admonishing all to watch on all sides as the enemy often slips up behind, and so on until the theme of the evening was that they try to be an army with Christ as their leader and see how many battles they could win during the coming week. I was interested to see whether this was only a passing whim and whether they would forget about it before the next week's service or not. But no! One had not done much fighting during the week but had visited the sick neighbor and helped in caring for him. Another had had a struggle with his relatives because his child had been very sick; and because he wouldn't perform the usual sacrifice, they told him he wanted his child to die. But he said he did not want to carry the shame of deserting his Leader, so he stood true and his child got well. Others had gone out scouting and spying about and brought others to our service. In almost every meeting from that time to this, some have spoken either in testimony or prayer about some phase of the theme of the Christian soldier, and in connection with this they have enjoyed singing, with vim and earnestness, "Onward, Christian Soldiers" and "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus."

There are times when the zeal of the Christians is encouraging to see; then again their interest lags until we wonder if they really know of the love of God in their hearts. It seems hard for them to learn to depend hour by hour on God for help.

This morning, we went out to visit a sick child in a home where the parents have stood true through all the tests that have come and today they are a shining light to all the people around them. As I approached, I asked the father where the little girl was, as I didn't see her in the house. He said for me to go out behind the house in the sunshine and I would find her mother giving her child a bath. As I followed his directions I found the mother and three children beside a kettle of warm water; the sick child had had her bath and was lying on the grass in a blanket; the mother was bathing the second and the third, a baby, was in a basket awaiting his turn. She said she bathed them EVERY DAY an unheard-of thing among the Tirikis. The love of Christ keeps both heart and body clean.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

YOUNG FRIENDS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

About an hour's ride by trolley brings one from Los Angeles to Long Beach. Here Friends have a strong meeting. The meeting house is a modern wood structure. It has a large, well lighted auditorium, with Sunday School and Endeavor rooms. Modern methods are found in the Sunday School and in the church in general. Here as in other places on the coast the church is confronted with the tourist problem. It is difficult to minister to so fluctuating an audience as this must necessitate. Then, too, such a famous resort as Long Beach brings many retired business men and farmers.

These people for the most part are well-to-do. Many of them have been active in church work before they came west. As in the case of the tourists so with some of these residents, one sees a tendency to take a vacation from religious activity as well as from secular affairs. People like to attend church, however, but they do not relish being appointed on committees or given positions of responsibility. This situation affects the Young People's problem.

It is remarkable that the Long Beach meeting with its efficient pastor is accomplishing its task so well. Instead of young people being indifferent and fluctuating in attendance, the Christian Endeavor Society is well attended, young men's and women's classes are growing, and loyalty to the church services is markedly increasing. The intellectual level of the meeting is high and spiritual freedom in all the services is most encouraging. The outlook for Friends in Long Beach is bright.

Between Los Angeles and Whittier is Huntington Park School. Here is a strong Christian Endeavor Society. One is struck by the spontaneity in the meeting. No one is urged to take part, nor does he ride the "pony" of clippings from the Christian Endeavor World. Young Friends are ready to give their own personal testimony or offer prayer whenever opportunity affords. The place seems charged with spiritual life which is continually seeking expression. I wish here to express my appreciation of the intellectual as well as the spiritual side of the meeting. I think some Friends have had a wrong impression of this school.

While Huntington Park does not pose as a college, it strongly encourages college training. It does not fight intellectuality but fosters it. It is evangelical, however, and emphasizes positive theology. It is opposed to extreme rationalism and destructive criticism of the Bible, but it encourages constructive study of the Scriptures. I was pleased to find a good spirit existing between the faculty and students of Whittier College and Huntington Park School. One hopes that this feeling will continue to grow. There is no doubt a place for both schools on the Pacific coast. May the young people of Huntington Park continue to go to Whittier and Whittier graduates take courses in Huntington Park.

Out in the heart of the orange-growing district some twenty-five miles from Whittier, is El Modeno Friends meeting. The Endeavor Society at this place is active in both Home and Foreign Mission work. There are a few old people in the Society, but responsibility is carried by the young people. There is talk of starting a gospel team at this place. This undertaking will no doubt result in much good for both the places visited and the Endeavorers themselves. This Society had representatives at both Yearly Meeting and the State Convention. Over fifty attended the meeting addressed by the Field Secretary.

THE YOUNG FRIENDS MOVEMENT

By THEO. FOXWORTHY

As many Friends know, there has come within recent years a revival of interest on the part of the young people of our church, both in England and America. Along with this renaissance there has been felt a need of oneness in purpose and in action. One result of this awakening is, "The Young Friends Movement."

This "Movement" is not an organization. It is an attempt to gather up the scattered forces of young people in our various Yearly Meetings, and, through the avenues of their respective organizations, unite them into one common working force for the furthering of the principles for which our church stands and to promote the interests of Christ's kingdom.

To my mind this "Movement" is a God-send. Our past experience as an organization has been largely along the line of tribal advancement, each Yearly Meeting moving within its own realm. For this reason (and I make the statement with all due regard for those who have stood by the church so faithfully in the past) our progress has been slow, and we have failed to accomplish the work that we should have done. The Five Years Meeting with its various Boards has done much to remedy this weakness, but much more must be done if we would realize a fuller measure of our possibilities.

The world is looking to the young people today as never before to help solve her problems. The same can be said of the church. If we as a denomination have been in a rut and are getting out into the highway of progress and spiritual advancement, it is partly because our young people have caught the vision of new life, co-operation, and activity.

The Conference feature of the Young Friends Activities is accomplishing much in getting the young people of the different Yearly Meetings together to study our past history, the principles for which we stand and the ways by which we may better serve our purpose and proclaim the message of salvation. If we may judge the future by the past, greater blessings are yet to come from these gatherings.

The Young People's Board of the Five Years Meeting, together with the Field Secretary, in their efforts to ascertain the needs of the church and to unite the forces, as before suggested, should have the special prayers, support, and co-operation of every Yearly Meeting.

Our opportunity to serve humanity was never greater than it is today. If we would accomplish the work whereunto we are called, we must stand by those who are in the lead, and combine our forces on the plane of heart-cleansing and consecration, realizing that to be strong and to do exploits we must be a people who do know our God.

Plainview, Nebraska.

THE STUDY OF SOCIAL QUESTIONS

There is a growing conviction that the response of the Society of Friends to the call for national service may be made through the devotion of its members to the building up of a Christian social order. The need for efficient training is recognized, but the responsibility for a right understanding of the conditions of life and of the present relations of men, women and children within the nation rests with all. The growth of slums, and of other evil conditions that hinder the spiritual life of men, is seen to be largely due to the absence from business, financial and civic relations of that sense of responsibility and duty to others which true Christianity carries with it. Hence the study of social relations, and of the application of Christian principles to business and industrial and national life, is a most important part of the equipment of those who would live rightly.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting Iowa was fifty years old on May 12 last. By arrangement of the committee in charge the anniversary, however, was not observed until the regular Quarterly Meeting, held August 11-13. An Earlham Iowa paper has an interesting and extended account of the anniversary proceedings written by D. B. Cook. We cull the following from the statement:

The first session of the program proper was Saturday at 10:30 a. m. It was intended that this should reproduce as far as circumstances would permit, a "Quarterly Meeting for devotion" of fifty years ago. Isaac P. Cook, a veteran minister recorded by Bear Creek Monthly Meeting in 1880, occupied the "head seat." The meeting opened with a "time of silent waiting" without chorus, organ or singing, after which many gave expression to words of prayer, praise, exhortation, song and council.

At the close of the meeting, an autographic register was made. The first contained the names of all present who were members at the time of the opening of the Quarterly Meeting May 12, 1866. The second, all others present. The first register contained 25 names. The second list contained 215 names, making 270 in all.

The business session of the Quarterly Meeting opened at 2:00 p. m. A. J. Hadley and Verda Kenworthy, Clerks. The opening minute noted the observing of the Fiftieth anniversary and a later minute contained the program as carried out. Much of the business was given to the annual reports. The superintendent of statistics reported the present membership of the Quarterly Meeting to be 738, eight of whom were ministers. His financial statement was that $7894.48 had been expended by the congregations for home work. This included the amount paid evangelists and pastors, the running expenses, etc. Paid for the support of missions $872.15, making a total for all purposes of $8769.63.

The Saturday evening session was occupied with the reading of an Historical sketch of Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting by Alistus J. Hadley, and the Roll Call conducted by Maria Cook and Nora Craven.

The Sunday morning session opened at 10 o'clock. The first subject presented was "Recollections of the first twenty years and a message to this generation" by D. B. Cook. The speaker used for his text, "Ask for the old paths" Jer. 6:16. After speaking of "Quaker Righteousness," showing how the Quakers had made a record of being "just in their dealings, punctual in fulfilling their engagements and clear of defrauding the public revenue" etc. as required by their book of discipline, he exhorted this generation to preserve the good name by doing likewise. He then asked from whence came this good fruit? and answered by giving a quotation from George Fox, giving his personal religious experience and from this announced what he called "the Soul of Quakerism," without which the Society of Friends could not exist, namely; Quaker worship. He then drew a word picture of Quaker worship and asked the present generation if they understood it, and could re-produce the same, perhaps not in exact form but in spirit. To show that some did understand and to urge others to follow the examples, he introduced, from the files of the American Friend of 1915, part of an account of the meetings of the "Quaker Group" at Hartford Theological Seminary, Hartford, Conn., at follows:

"The general plan of our meetings are as follows: We meet at eight o'clock and spend usually a half hour in worship. These meetings are true Friends' meetings for worship. No leaders are appointed but we seek to enter into each meeting with full dependence upon the spirit of God to lead us. All grow quiet as we bow in humble trust together. After a little some one may offer simple but trustful words of prayer. Another may follow and for a time no one may feel moved to speak aloud. We wait in silence together, listening to the voice of God as He may speak to us. Soon some one may feel moved to read words of scripture or to speak forth some message inspired of God's Spirit. There is nothing formal about these meetings and no two of them are alike. Yet all of them have been singularly marked by the presence and power of Jesus Christ."

The next subject, "Recollections of the next twenty years and its lessons" was presented by W. Jasper Hadley.

The next twenty years was a period of expansion. Like a prosperous hive, new swarms went forth. With a membership of over 1200, the work began. Meetings were established not only in various parts of Iowa but in other states as well, far off Texas being included. The zeal and self sacrifice of these workers of the 80's is worthy of our imitation. Do not "lie down on the job" like a balky horse. There is much territory yet within the limits of Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting unoccupied, where Friends are needed and wanted.

The afternoon session was held in the grove. The subject, "Present and future of Bear Creek Quarterly meeting" was by David M. Edwards, before an audience of over 400.

The three divisions of his subject were: The Home—The School—The Church. He drew a picture of the Christian home, of Bear Creek Quarterly meeting as he remembered it in his young manhood how there were few homes without daily family worship. The Bible was read and each member was heard in prayer. From such homes have gone out the army of ministers, missionaries and Christian workers and educators which Bear Creek has furnished to the world's work.

My young friend you who have started homes of your own and others who are contemplating the event in the near future—for I see by your actions you are contemplating this—begin with old-fashioned family worship and keep it up at whatever cost. What your homes are the future of Bear Creek will be—was his appeal to the present generation.

The need of the world is Christian Education. Bear Creek of the past has furnished this. See to it that the next generation is equally well provided. The church life adds value to everything with which it comes in contact. Keep up the real Friends meeting and Christian faithfulness of your fathers. Make Bear Creek better than she has ever been. Others have labored faithfully and well, enter into their labors.

SERBIAN REFUGEES

F. E. Woodhouse writes from Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, where he is working amongst the Serbian boys under John E. Bellows:

"There are here about 130 boys, whose ages are mostly between 14 and 17 years; and it is hoped that these will form part of the backbone and brains of the new Serbia. The boys are for the most part surprisingly intelligent and, better still, are anxious to learn English and also our games and manners. Could they but learn all that is best in England and add that to the best their own country has given them, they would some of them make great men in the future.

"The boys seem to have but little idea of what is known to us as sport. They nearly all find amusement on the billiard table, but play a game of tennis quite their own, the chief point of which is to hit the ball as high and as far as possible. We are now beginning to organize sports, and we have the use of the Somerville tennis courts and of St. John's cricket ground, besides a boat and a punt on the river. . . . The Serbs are very fond of music. Their own music is very striking in its almost harsh simplicity. Their religious music is never accompanied, and is sung in two parts, the one a third below the other. The effect of this really cannot be described. An extraordinary characteristic is their habit of leaving some words unvocalized; I mean that perhaps here and there one or two words at the end of a line or verse are not sung but merely spoken or shouted. This gives a great deal of life and reality to their songs."

Lillian M. Law writes from Sieci, Toscana, Italy:

"I have given about 120 children sandals; some quite big boys and girls had them, including two university students. One poor lady also, whose shoes were in a dreadful state, asked if she might have a pair. They are a very inexpensive form of footwear, as the largest sizes only cost about 12 lire and they are of good leather. There are still more sandals to come. I have visited seventeen families in their homes whose names were given to me as being particularly necessitous through illness or otherwise. I have tried to help them with clothes, material for making up, shoes, etc., and sometimes in the case of illness by giving a little money to buy medicine, milk, better food and the like. In that way I have spent about 270 lire. . . . What these people need more than anything else, and what, unfortunately, I cannot give them, is work. The Government allowance is quite generous, it is more than they give to their own soldiers' wives. No one will employ refugees; they are all of them suspected. The more middle-class they are, of course the harder it is for them; they can manage to house and feed themselves, but their clothes get shabbier and shabbier and they themselves more and more despondent. Particularly for small families it is a difficulty; it is really very hard for two middle-class people to live in a strange town on 3 lire a day."

Ethel G. Dunbar writes from Salonika:

"We are very busy, as the hot weather has now come. We have between 40 and 50 patients and at present only one Greek nurse, but another is coming. The patients are very grateful and very anxious now to come to the hospital if they are ill at all. It was 100 degrees in the shade a day or two ago, but we are lucky in having a cool building. Water is a terrible trial, or rather the lack of it! The supply is cut off; in the last twenty-four hours it only ran for a short time between 1 and 2 a. m., so that means getting up in the night to fill everything, and when our store is finished we have to fetch all water from a distance. The coolest time is about 10 p. m., when I often sit out on the garden wall, which still feels quite hot from the sun, and if it were not for the mosquitos and various other biting and stinging animals, it would be very pleasant."

Holland

Gouda.—"There are now about 40 workers. The farm work is giving temporary employment to many, and such workers have asked to be taken back when harvest work is finished. The mat work and shoemaking is improving under a new method. Four women work at lining the shoes, etc."

Uden.—"The work is much improved since last year; it is really wonderful how well some of the girls tackle a piece of new work and the interest which they take in it. Miss Lindsay has taken immense pains with the plain sewing of the younger girls, and at the dressmaking table we have one or two quite skilful embroideresses who have been taught in the zaal. We are hoping also at this table to give the younger girls an idea of cutting out and making up for themselves."

Ede.—"We had endless rehearsals with the girls for the anniversary S.O.F. entertainment held on the 17th of June. Fourteen of them learned country dances, and ten sang Flemish and English songs in parts. Owing to the cold weather, the fete had to be arranged in the Work Zaal at the last moment."

One of the workers writes from France:

"I wrote to some friends a plain account of what the people have to put up with in a burnt village and in these months of waiting away from home. It was as short and simple as I could make it. A French lady read it, a lady of no peace principles of any sort. She laid it down and just said, 'If it is like that, it says a lot for the Quaker point of view.'"

RECEPTION TO THE WOLFORDS

On the evening of August 29 at South Eighth Street Friends church, Richmond, Indiana, an informal reception was given in honor of H. C. and Anna B. Wolford, president and matron of Southland College, prior to their return for their fourteenth years' service in the work for the Master. Invitations were sent to the four Friends meetings of the city and to New Westville and Centerville. Owing to the splendid musical attraction booked for that evening at the Richmond Chautauqua, the attendance was not as large as the occasion deserved.

The program was good. Dr. N. S. Cox presiding, said a few words as to how Indiana Yearly Meeting came to be the father and the mother of Southland College, and of our duty and privilege to continue the good work. H. C. Wolford gave information regarding the buildings, their equipment, the farm and the light plant. Mrs. Wolford gave the talk of the evening, showing what has been accomplished and is still in progress. She named student after student, picturing their work at school, and then tracing their life's work afterwards showed how they had made good in the different avocations they had chosen. The occasion was opened with prayer, and interspersed with musical numbers which were much appreciated.

NEWS NOTES

The meeting at Oakland, California, observed its anniversary last Sunday, September 10.

Isaac L. Kinsey, of San Diego, California, began a gospel meeting in a big tent at Alamitos on August 6.

Elma Gordon, missionary to China, addressed the meeting at Oakland, California, on the evening of August 20.

Lyman G. Cosand, pastor of the meeting at Georgetown, Illinois, preached at Russiaville, Indiana, on August 20.

Sanford J. and Blanche Ford Pickering were expecting to take up pastoral work at Huntington Park, California, on September 1st.

Whittier, California, Friends are now holding their meetings at the college while the large and commodious new meeting house is being erected.

Dr. Sylvester Newlin has received and accepted a unanimous call to remain as pastor of the meeting at High Point, N. C. for another year.

Alexander C. Purdy, who took charge of the Biblical Department at Earlham College this week, preached at the West Richmond Friends meeting last Sunday morning.

From the Pacific Friend we learn that John Henry Douglas of Whittier, California, has been confined to his bed for some weeks and does not seem to rally very much.

Edgar T. Hole and Dr. Archibald Bond attended the meeting at Bloomington, Indiana, on Sabbath morning, August 28, and presented the needs of the African field in an impressive manner.

Professors Albert F. Styles and Henry H. Townsend, members of University church, Wichita, Kansas, have moved to Wellington where they will teach in the high school the coming year.

On account of the sickness of Charles E. Tebbetts the acting pastor, Murray S. Kenworthy preached at the West Richmond meeting on the morning of September 3.

Mahlon Perry, pastor of the meeting at East Whittier, California, recently made an extended tour of California Monthly Meetings in the interest of Huntington Park Training School for missionary workers.

Grandmother Lydia Sharpless, who spent the winter with her son, William, at Los Angeles, California, has returned to her home at Whittier. On August 22 she celebrated her 106th birthday anniversary.

The address of Arthur Dann and wife, of England, has recently been changed. A note from him under date of August 10 says: "We shall be moving about, but letters, etc., addressed to 10 Drayton Park, Highbury, London, N., England will be forwarded to us."

Dr. Sylvester Newlin, pastor of the meeting at High Point, N. C., is one of a party of Sunday School workers who are making a tour this week of Guilford county, N. C., in the interests of the Sunday Schools. Meetings were held every day from September 5-13 inclusive.

Mrs. Aaron Napier of Amboy, Indiana, is rapidly recovering from a successful operation at the Mayo Brothers Sanitarium at Rochester, Minnesota and will be home again with her family in the very near future.

Aaron Napier is just closing a successful year's work as pastor of the meeting at Amboy, Indiana. He has served the meeting there since 1911 and will remain another year. The new parsonage will soon be ready for occupancy.

J. Arthur Wollam and family, who have been spending the past seven weeks in the mountains of Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho and Utah, have returned to their home at Wichita, Kansas. Mr. Wollam, who was compelled by ill health to suspend his work there, says that he has recovered his health perfectly and has resumed his duties as pastor of University Friends church.

Wichita Quarterly Meeting was held in Russell Hall, Friends University, September 1-3. It was one of the most interesting and helpful meetings of the year as the annual reports were read and considered. Rufus P. King of North Carolina, gave profitable and acceptable instruction at the morning meeting on Sunday and in the evening spoke of his experiences in and subsequent to the Civil war.

Bessie Fields of Greensboro, N. C., has been visiting Deep River meeting every two weeks during the past summer and the interest of the young people in the church is noticeably increased. She began a revival there on August 21 assisted by Dr. Sylvester Newlin, of High Point.

The annual roll call meeting of Springfield meeting, N. C., was held on August 23. Devotional exercises were conducted by G. J. Welker and the sermon was preached by Dr. Sylvester Newlin of High Point. Charles F. Tomlinson read a paper on Allan U. Tomlinson, while Archibald Johnson gave an address on "The Country Church."

George Deshler is leaving the pastorate at Cherokee, Oklahoma, and will take charge of the pastoral work at Lynnvile, Iowa, succeeding Zeno H. Doane, who takes charge of the work at Knightstown, Indiana, early in September.

Bunji Kida, of California, recently visited Friends meetings at Salem, Newberg and Portland, Oregon and also at Seattle, Washington.

George D. Weeks recently filled the pulpit very acceptably both Sabbath morning and evening at San Diego, California.

Charles M. Woodman, who recently resigned his pastorate at Portland, Maine, will arrive at Richmond, Indiana, with his family this week and will take charge of the pastorate of West Richmond meeting next Sunday morning. He is on the program to give an address at one of the sessions of Indiana Yearly Meeting next week.

Mary T. Pyle, widow of William L. Pyle, and the oldest member of the First Friends church at Indianapolis, Indiana, died at her home in that city on September 4. For many years she had been connected with the management of the Bertha Ballard Home, the Colored Orphans' Home and other charitable interests. She and her husband were for many years leading Friends in Western Yearly Meeting.

The Friends camp meeting held near Burr Oak, Kansas, from August 3-20 was reported to be the best camp meeting ever held at that place. It was under the direction of the three Friends' meetings near by with Lindley A. Wells, of Portland, Oregon, as evangelist and his son, Charles, as singing evangelist. The ministry was forceful, along the lines of repentance and faith and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. More than eighty persons knelt at the altar. Arrangements were made for another camp meeting next year.

The meeting at High Point, N. C., of which Dr. Sylvester Newlin is pastor, observed the annual missionary rally day on September 3. Pledges were signed amounting to $225 and the missionary committee will make a personal canvass of the members who were not present.

William and Abigail C. Haworth will retire from the pastoral work at Lawrence, Kansas, on the occasion of Kansas Yearly Meeting. They are undetermined as yet what field they will enter and arrangements about a successor have not yet been perfected. They have served the meeting there two years very agreeably both to themselves and to the meeting.

Thomas E. Jones, secretary of Young Friends' activities, has completed his extensive tour of Oregon, California, Nebraska and North Carolina Yearly Meetings, and is at the office of the Board at Dunreith, Indiana, for a few days, preparatory to entering Columbia University early in October.

CHURCH AT WORK

Northbranch, Kansas—We had our Quarterly Meeting last week, but owing to the union camp meeting going on in our Quarterly Meeting we held only the business sessions, the balance of the time being taken up by the camp meeting which is being conducted by Lindley A. Wells of Portland, Oregon, who is giving us some good teaching and admonition in spiritual things. Representatives and the pastors from each of the monthly meetings were in attendance at the Quarterly Meeting and an increased interest seemed manifest in the work of the church.

HELPING JAMAICA

Contributions toward a fund of $350 for equipping trades rooms in the Happy Grove Industrial School, Jamaica, were given by Friends at Wichita and a few other persons not connected with the church. The sum collected by Charles Vincent, the Jamaica student in Friends University, amounted to $65.00 and will be used especially in putting more suitable baths in the boys' dormitory. The solicitor wishes to thank all contributors for their generous help in a time of need.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

All persons expecting to attend Indiana Yearly Meeting next week and who desire to secure lodging before hand should write to Charles E. Newman, William J. Hiatt or Oscar E. Fulghum of the entertainment committee, address Richmond, Indiana.

its 59th annual gathering at Plainfield, Indiana this week. Eliza Armstrong Cox is giving lessons each day at one o'clock on the study book, "World's Missions and World's Peace." Enos Harvey was announced to preach on the opening evening. Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger will give the prohibition address on Thursday at eleven. Elwood Kemp gives the address for the literature and peace committee at two o'clock on Thursday. Edgar T. Hole is to speak at the foreign mission session on Saturday forenoon.

Charles Lescault of Los Angeles, California, is expected to have principal charge of the evangelistic services which will be held each evening.

ANNUAL BOARD MEETINGS

Announcement is made that the annual meeting of the important Boards of the Five Years Meeting will be held at Richmond, Indiana, during the week of October 19. Various committees will meet during Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and on Thursday forenoon, beginning at nine o'clock, there will be a joint conference of all the Boards which may be in session during that week. The Executive Committee will convene on Thursday afternoon. Fuller announcements will be made later.

NOTICE!

Friends having a prospect of attending Kansas Yearly Meeting of Friends, to be held at Wichita, Kansas, October 3rd to October 9th, inclusive, 1916, and desiring to make arrangements for entertainment during the sessions, should address Herbert D. Barrington, Friends University, Wichita, Kansas, who has been named by the local committee to look after such inquiries.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW

The preacher returning from his vacation will find in The Homiletic Review for September considerable helpful and suggestive material, covering almost every phase of his work. Then there are articles in lighter vein on "The Humorous Side of a Minister's Life," and "Uses of Humor in Church Life."

In the Pastor Department church methods are given a prominent place, and the Sermonic Department maintains its usual high standard.

A new feature appears in this number of The Review. It is that of a professor of homiletics passing upon the merits or demerits of a particular sermon.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

September 24

Topic—"Christianity Compared with other Religions." 1 Cor. 10:1-21.

(Foreign Missionary Meeting)

Plan to demonstrate in this meeting a meeting of the Foreign Mission Board. As the Board is seated at the table, let Endeavorers representing the Missionaries from the different nations come before the Board, presenting the work in the particular countries, and make appeals, either for money for some special purpose, or for workers. When all have been heard, the Board will then act on the matter, or pass it up till the "next meeting," as is so often done.

This can be enlarged upon to take the entire hour, and in a much better way than the old time method of papers or clippings, will appeal and interest.

Geologists say that the Bay of Naples is in reality the crater of an extinct volcano. In the cycles of ages past it was a great, deep roaring pit of fire and burning lava. The fires subsided and the lava ceased to flow. The great sea overflowed it and now the calm waters smile back in sunshine by day and in starlight at evening.

Christianity is a great calm sea that is gradually quenching and covering the old volcanoes and roaring pits of barbarism.

Lesson—Review.

Golden Text—We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal. II Corinthians 4:18.

The first lesson of the Quarter tells the story of Paul's Work at Thessalonica and Berea. Many crucial experiences happened to Paul between that time and his experiences as "A Prisoner in the Castle. Among these were his physical sufferings, or those of his friends, ending in the rough treatment by the mob and the Romans in Jerusalem. His doctrinal ideas, in many points, took definite form during this period and are well illustrated in his letters to the Corinthians, Thessalonians and Galatians. His practical teachings also are prominent phases of these messages. The apostle was thus shaping and fixing those doctrines and practices which were to distinguish the Christian from other religions.

This period was marked by certain controversies. In Corinth for instance the Gentile Christians were distressed by certain of their numbers claiming, on the basis of Paul's teaching of freedom from the Mosaic Law, certain liberties which threatened the purity of the home and family life. The activity of the Judaizers was also perplexing to the Gentile Christians and much space in the epistle of this period is devoted to refuting their claims. The chasm between the two branches of the church was widening and was destined in a few years to cause a definite and final break. The offering and tokens of interest and good will which Paul and his companions took to Jerusalem probably did little to stay the final break.

This was a period of church expansion not only in Greece but in and around Ephesus. It is presumed that a number of the churches mentioned among the seven listed in Revelations were founded during Paul's sojourn in Ephesus.

Paul as a man and apostle is revealed to us through the incidents of this period as no where else. He became all things to the church. Founder, organizer, teacher, practical exemplar and inspirer of zeal and courage, in these things he had no equal in the church. Gentile Christianity was by this time an established fact. This branch of the church was now probably more numerous than the Jewish. This was a fruitful period and the careful student will find it full of interest and inspiration.

Sympathy is the great want of the human heart; man's heart as well as woman's.—Alice Freeman Palmer.

DIED.

Brown—Winifred Beatrice Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Barnett Brown, died after seven weeks' illness at her home at Fairy Hill, parish of Portland, Jamaica, August 6, 1916. Her parents are most helpful members of the Friends mission church at Seaside, Jamaica.

Not dead but gone before.

Thy will be done.

Hadley—Joshua Hadley, son of Edward and Elizabeth Hadley, was born in Morgan county, Indiana, August 23, 1851, and died at Des Moines, Iowa, July 27, 1916. He was a life-long member of the Friends church, for which he had esteem throughout his life. He was converted at the age of twenty-eight and during the last years of his life was especially active in Christian work in Des Moines meeting and became very solicitous for the Christian welfare of his relatives and friends. He married Spica A. Barnett in 1872 and they resided in Des Moines, where he has been a contractor and builder for twenty-five years. His lingering illness of a year saw him increase in spiritual health. He leaves the widow, five children, eleven grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Interment was at Earlham, Iowa.

Mills—Emma J. Mills, daughter of Joseph and Amy Hill, was born near Thorntown, Indiana, April 25, 1856, and died at her home at Hemet, California, July 9, 1916. In 1875 she married W. Elwood Mills according to Friends ceremony at Sugar Plain meeting, Indiana. She gave her heart to the Lord in early childhood and lived a beautiful Christian life, both as a mother in the home and a co-worker with her husband in the ministry. After many years of suffering she passed gladly and peacefully into the fuller life with her Saviour. She leaves the husband and two sons.

A SIGH FOR THE OLD TIME "QUAKER MEETING"

By EMMA VARNEY ROBINSON

Well, I went to Quaker meeting
For the first time, yesterday,
Since I wandered from the hearthstone,
Of the dear old home, away;
But so strange and unfamiliar
Was the scene that met my sight
As I gazed around about me
That my heart grew homesick quite.

For there were no "facing benches"
And no "gallery" in view
While the rows of saintly faces
Ah, alas! had vanished, too.
Then no "broad brim," no "plain bonnet"
And no "plain coat" met my sight
And no "shutters" or "partition"
As I gazed to left and right.

While the "Friends" both men and women
Were mixed up unblushingly
And it was no Quaker meeting
Such as I was wont to see.
Then they sang and had a choir,
Yes, and played the organ, too;
Had a pulpit, took collection,
Just as other people do.

So, I looked and longed for something
That would unmistakably
Mark this gathering as "Quaker"
But not one thing could I see.
Now, of course, I know there's nothing
In "plain bonnet" or "broad brim"
That facilitates true worship
Or sweet fellowship with Him.

While the grounds of Christian kinship
And of brotherhood in God
Than our human forms and fashions
And traditions are more broad.
And I know that in that hour
When our Saviour shall appear "Quaker", "Methodist" and "Baptist"
Will be names we'll no more hear.

But ah, me! while in this temple
Of frail clay I still shall dwell,
I am sure that childhood memories
E'er will hold their subtle spell
Firmly, on my heart's affections
And still dear, will be to me
That quaint old time 'Quaker meeting'
Which I ne'er again may see.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Some years since, a young lady on a pleasure excursion in the harbor of Portland fell overboard and was nearly drowned. After her return to consciousness, she stated that while in the water her whole previous life, even to the minutest incidents, had passed before her mind as in a visible panorama. This review of her life so affected her with a sense of God's goodness and her own ingratitude that she cast her soul upon the mercy of Christ and consecrated herself to His service. Prior to the accident she had been frivolous, worldly-minded, and utterly adverse to religious things. But, immediately on her recovery, she mentioned her strange experience while in the water, and informed her friends that she was now a Christian, and meant henceforth to live a Christian life. And she did. From that day to the day of her death she was an earnest and faithful disciple of Christ—Congregationalist.

Salvation and Its Evidences

We have said that to be a Christian is to become a new creature. Christianity is revolutionary, and begets a venture of faith that is the test of man's willingness to go the whole way of life with God. Discipleship does not amount to much that does not stake every hazard upon obedience to the program of Jesus Christ. The heroism of faith is a challenge to all who take life seriously and who are conscious of soul needs which ordinary experiences cannot satisfy. We need a type of Christianity the world over that balks at no trial or no problem; that sees in every storm the bow of God's promise; that yields not one whit in the face of evil machinations; that confronts the spirit of suspicion and hate in the old order with the spirit of love and fellowship and good will as the essential elements of a new order; that prizes stability and character and soul values above all that worldliness can suggest.

We cast no reflection upon evangelism when we say that religion is stabbed oftentimes in the house of its friends by appeals that cheapen man's holiest relationships and put the stamp of insincerity upon his sacred professions; and we are making no attack upon the fundamental character of evangelical truth when we say that the test of religion is the fruitage of life, and that men are saved, not by the standards of creeds or doctrines, but by direct faith in Jesus Christ and through a fixed purpose to accept his program as binding upon the whole personality of man. Because men have dimmed the value of holiness by cloaking it with theologic definitions, multitudes even within the church are wandering close to the uncertain line of demarcation between discipleship and the world, and are missing the beauties of a land where the desert literally is being made to rejoice and to blossom as the rose. We need in these troublous days to return to the simple theology of the early church, and of the early Friends, by which men were brought face to face with Jesus Christ as the one and only one who could speak to every condition of life, as the only one who could speak peace to every soul.

Salvation is not a talisman, not a thing of enchantment, not something to conjure with, but is a work of God's grace in regenerating human life, conditioned upon repentance and faith in God, upon receiving the divine forgiveness and being restored to heirship in the family of God. The genuine experience of being born again will not break down by changes in the weather, or health, will not vary with environment of any kind. No man can preach redemption effectively who professes sanctity in the councils of the brethren and flies into uncontrollable passion when nature or his neighbor's stock destroys his crops, or the market shows evidences of a precipitous decline. No one can maintain his standing as a shining example in the ranks of Christian discipleship who claims to be holy in the prayer meeting and on the next day befouls himself and the community by slanderous gossip about his neighbors. An old book has declared that men shall be known by their fruits, and the church has lost standing because all too many of its communicants have been professing one thing in the sanctuary and living another thing at the parlor social, at the ballot box or in the market place.

Because nations have professed to be Christian, and have lived according to the law of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, we find Europe today torn and bleeding and the whole world waiting in horror for the final scenes of a murdered civilization. What a challenge it is to the American church to rebuild its lines more closely after the pattern of its Founder! What a challenge it is to the Society of Friends, which has always stood, theoretically at least, for the essence of holiness, to pray and strive for a rebirth of denominational integrity, purpose and zeal, that will raise up new prophets of Jehovah, to be sent out into all the world with fresh revelations of spiritual power and new messages of truth for the redemption of worldwide humanity! What a challenge there is today to Christian personality the world over to show forth the fruits of the Spirit as evidences of the power of God to save to the uttermost, not only in terms of individuality, but in terms of nationalism and internationalism as well.

The church increasingly is applying the every-member plan to its finances with excellent results. It is time that the every-member plan were being applied to the task of Christian living and world-wide service for the Master. The religion of Jesus must be able to show a fruitage of something more than keeping the forms of discipline, something more than repeating texts in the prayer meeting.

Unless it can make the desert over into fertile valleys, unless it can substitute joy for mourning, unless it can put divine purpose into human action, unless it can personate the fruits of the spirit in daily conduct, it is bound to fail at the point of its best purposes. But the religion of Jesus must be able to operate through willing human personality without reserve, and the test of its operation is the fruitage which it yields.

Our Attitude Toward Public Education

By W. J. REAGAN

During the early weeks of September, one of our biggest institutions opens its doors for another busy season. It has offices in every city and village, and in every country community in our United States. It is big in scope and compactness of organization; big in its expenditure of funds and property holdings; but most important, it is big in its control and formation of human life. This institution—our Public School System—backed by enacted law, demands the presence of our boys and girls for five days out of each week. It has a large part in guiding, at this plastic period in life, little feet that are destined to walk forever down the centuries. Do we realize, I wonder, the importance of this institution and our obligation to it? As a Church, with private schools of which we have a right to be proud, do we realize that, since the majority of our children must get their impress from the public school, we must give it and its work our earnest thought and prayerful criticism and loyal support?

These specific things we may do this year:

1. Arrange for an Education Day in our churches. Consider together the opening year and its work. At some public meeting give the public school teachers an opportunity to tell parents ways of showing interest, and methods of aiding in the progress of the school. United prayer should be so real, so intelligent, so insistent that its influence will make a difference to teachers and students.

2. Then we can visit the schools early in the year and try to understand their work. There is a visitor's page in every school register and it is never full. We watch carefully the work of the farmer, who runs the farm for us; we closely supervise the maid, who lives in the kitchen; but too often we ignore the guides of our boys and girls. Our teachers need co-operation and intelligent sympathy. They see commercialized temptation defeating their work at every turn. They feel the criticism of politicians who are in the game for gain only. They are usually interested in the highest development of their students. They are worthy of our support, and certainly there is no more worthy cause than their cause.

3. Study carefully the subject of military training in Public School. We believe that it is undemocratic, that it violates the best pedagogy, and that it fosters a cheap, narrow, circumscribed patriotism. We are caught in a wild passionate outburst of militarism. It is about to strike at the public school system. We need quiet honest thought about the matter. Our public school teachers are willing to think the thing through; they seem anxious to know; the material is abundant; their attitude is important for the final outcome; but the material must be carried to them.

Write to the American Union Against Militarism, 641 Munsey Building, Washington, D. C., for a description of their War Against War Exhibit, and other literature. Hold Peace contests and debates on this question. Use the school building as a meeting place and enlist teachers in the movement.

4. Help in an effort to meet the wave of vice and immorality which threatens our boys and girls. Use freely these books and pamphlets:

- (a) "The Little White Slaver," a discussion of the cigarette evil, compiled by Henry Ford. Write to Henry Ford, Detroit, Michigan, for free copies of the pamphlet. The boys will read it, and it will appeal to them.
- (b) Write the Department of Child Welfare, University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas, for the pamphlet, "The Cigarette Problem."
- (c) Get "From Youth Into Manhood," by Winfield Hall, M. D., Ph. D., for boys between eleven and fifteen.

5. Help discouraged boys and girls to continue their school work. This year, hundreds, who need to complete the work, will drop out and bear through life the handicap of a meager education. Some of these could be saved by people who are interested. The President of one of our Friends Colleges was encouraged to go on through high school. A minister of another church provided a pair of shoes at a critical time. A pastor of one of our larger churches in New York was kept in school by a pastor who provided board during some severe weeks of financial strain.

The work of the public school will go on through these months, with or without our co-operation. At present there is uncertainty and hesitation in our schools. The old land-marks are gone. Our schools feel the need of training—religious and moral—but this training must not encroach on the religious liberty of those who differ most widely from us. It is doubly important, therefore, for us to co-operate in every possible way, during this year when all life and practice must be surveyed by the critical eye of a restless, excited people, bewildered by hate abroad, and greed, distrust and uncertainty at home.

"Not to live but to love, not to save ourselves but to save others, not to survive at any cost but to die for any cause—this is the standard by which we gauge our conduct."—John Haynes Holmes.

THE PASTOR'S PLACE IN THE "TEAM"

By A. L. KNIGHT

In a recent number of The American Friend a writer of Bloomington, Indiana, says some very good things about team work, but he characterizes the pastor in a way that seems unjust to the Quaker ministry.

He presents the pastor as "professional clergy", surrounded by a "poisonous atmosphere", presumably created by himself, performing a "classical Sunday service" in which the pastor, willing to "do it all" and "say it all", "scorns into silence" the "almost preacher" as a "useless person", giving no one a chance to talk "even a little bit."

Such pastors and such conditions no doubt exist in some localities, but usually as a reaction against the intolerable abuses of the free for all policy of former days. But my friend has pictured his pastor as a typical, and not as an exceptional, character. He has made a rule of the exception.

I have seen instances where the pastor, as the head of the meeting, was almost compelled to close the meetings for worship without giving time for others to speak because of the bold, undesirable, unfit "takers", who insisted on occupying the time to the very great embarrassment of the congregation. Such a situation is not the fault of the pastor nor of the pastoral system, but of an unwatchful eldership.

In its normal operations the pastoral system has not been found wanting in developing the gifts in the ministry. The writer remembers with much appreciation the wise guidance of his pastor in the early years of his ministry.

On the other hand, some very serious misfits, so common in former times, have been avoided since the work of the ministry has been more guarded, and the ambitious and the "not called" have been restrained.

From my observation in three Yearly Meetings and five states, I will venture the assertion that one will more often find a pastor looking for a team than a team neglected or restrained by the pastor. What pastor does not more than welcome the active, intelligent co-operation of the spiritual members? The average Friends' pastor is quick to recognize the importance of team work. He has been thoroughly schooled in the principle. The term, "team", is the only new thing in the plan.

What is Christian Endeavor but practical team work? What is the pastoral committee for if not for team work? Perhaps we have had too much regard for "weight" and not enough regard for energy in the selection of the members of the pastoral committees. More energy, even at the expense of gravity, might be doubly beneficial. We need a reorganization and a fresh grooming of the teams we already have. Harness the colts.

In his relation to the team work of the church the pastor should occupy the place not of a driver with whip and rein, but as a member of the team; the leader—strong, willing, tractable, masterful—dominating, but not domineering; directing, but not bossing. He is the "servant of all."

CORRESPONDENCE

Editor The American Friend:

Ever since reading the article by Charles W. Dickinson, in No. 21, date May 25th, asking for more place for the teaching, both in this paper, and from the ministry, on the "Higher Life", my heart has been deeply stirred, and, in fact, long before this letter appeared, the same question had arisen in my own heart, "Where are those men and women who used to so hold up Jesus Christ as a Saviour who was able to deliver from sin, not only its penalty, but its power in us; able to satisfy our inmost and utmost need, to cause all grace to abound toward us, that we always, having all sufficiency in all things, might abound to every good work?" There is a lack, we all know it too well. The article, later, by Wm. Smith, shows us that our early Friends did not tell us that we must always be in the bondage of sin, or fear. "Are we standing fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath set us free?" This denotes that the work has been done for us by Jesus Christ. Why do we not "Go forward"? Have we not "compassed this mountain long enough"? My heart burns within me, and I long for the ministry to claim what is their's in Christ.

A Builder of Western Quakerism

Charles Fisher Coffin, 1823-1916

By HERMAN NEWMAN

Early in the closing year of President Monroe's Administration, Elijah and Naomi Coffin left their home in Guilford County, North Carolina, and with their two children, Miriam, three, and Charles, barely one year old, moved in a two-horse wagon westward over the Cumberland trail to Eastern Indiana and settled on the west branch of the Whitewater, where the town of Milton now stands. Elijah Coffin and his father-in-law, Benajah Hiatt, took together 160 acres of timbered bottom land and began the arduous task of clearing and farming it. At first the Coffin's lived in a cabin near the river, but later built a "hewed log house" on the elevated ground farther back. It had but one full-story room with an attic above, reached by a step-ladder. In his "Personal Notes," Charles records as one of his earliest recollections that of sleeping in this attic and hearing the downpour of rain on the roof.

Elijah Coffin was appointed Clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting in 1827, the year before the Hicksite Separation. There was some objection to him because his hat brim was not wide enough, but the objection was overruled and he entered upon a service which he continued for 32 years. Charles, while not old enough to understand what the Hicksite Controversy meant, was nevertheless moved with the intense feeling which it engendered.

Charles was taken to meeting regularly in the middle of the week and on First days. He seems not to have minded the First day Meeting, but to be called from his play on Fifth day, to sit for an hour and a half at his father's side without his feet touching the floor, was an ordeal. This discipline was supplemented with a form of family worship not universally found in Quaker Families of that early day. In his "Personal Notes" Charles records: "as far back as I can remember, my parents had family worship in the morning, and my father read straight through the Bible, beginning at Genesis and closing at Revelations, not omitting a single chapter on the way. This gave me a very thorough knowledge of the Old Testament, the Law of Moses and a great many portions of the Bible which but few young persons now read and study."

Following 1833, the family resided for a time in Cincinnati, but in the Fall of 1834 they returned to Indiana and settled in Richmond, where Charles made his home for 50 years. The removal to Richmond was occasioned by the appointment of Elijah Coffin as Cashier of the Richmond Branch of the First State Bank of Indiana. Elijah Coffin continued in the banking business the balance of his life, and naturally Charles found employment with his father. He was 12 years old when he began work as a clerk, copying letters in long-hand and before the closing of the bank in 1854, he had filled nearly every position in the establishment. He continued in the banking business until 1884, as Assistant Cashier, Cashier and President of the Bank of the State of Indiana, as junior partner in the firm of Morrisson, Blanchard & Company, and later as President of the Richmond National Bank.

His "schooling" was begun by his father. Later he had the advantage of a few months teaching, under Robert Harrison, a Philadelphia Friend, who was "high tempered" but "could repeat pages of Virgil and Homer." For some months after the family moved to Richmond, Charles attended a Friends' School, taught by Isaac Hiatt. His work in the bank early interfered with a continuance of his school work, but for a time he took private Latin lessons. More important, however, was a "habit of private study," which he early formed.

His first religious awakening came in his 12th year. He speaks of it as a very marked and definite experience. It occurred one First day while he was at home alone. A strong sense of his sinful condition pressed upon him, and he yielded his heart to Christ. The first effect upon my mind, so he says, "was to lead me to an extreme in all the outward duties of Christianity * * * As I look back now, I can see that a little correct instruction might have relieved me from much straightness and given me a much more cheerful view of Christianity. My idea was formed on my mother's basis * * * was of a monastic type * * * and prevented me from associating to any great extent with others who had not a like religious experience. As I grew up in this straight life, I adopted the full uniform of Friends' dress, and continued to wear it until I was 50 years of age, when I felt entirely relieved from the necessity of maintaining the outward garb."

An event of great significance in his early life was a trip to the Eastern States. While in Baltimore he was entertained in the home of Dr. Richard H. Thomas, beginning a friendship which lasted until death. From there he went to Philadelphia and attended the Yearly Meeting. "It was the largest body of plain, genteely-dressed men and women that I had ever seen together * * * I recollect especially the women's Meeting, where there were from one to two thousand dressed in the uniform of the Society, and looking like a lot of princesses to me." He went on to New York and Boston, and returned by way of the Erie Canal and Cleveland. He traveled much in later life, his most extensive trip being that with his wife and one son, when, in 1872 and 1873, he covered much of Europe, Egypt and Palestine. While these were all interesting and instructive, nothing surpassed this initial tour in its novelty and its effect upon his life.

About three years later, Third Month, 1847, he united in marriage with Rhoda M., daughter of John and Judith Johnson, of Warren County, Ohio. The event was solemnized in a quiet friendly way in the old Miami Meeting House. The union was a most happy one, she proving to be an efficient help-mate in his various interests, and a good wife and mother. They were favored to live together for more than 62 years. To them were born five sons and one daughter, all of whom are living, except the daughter, who died in childhood.

He early became identified with the work of the church to which he freely gave much of his time. Seldom has there appeared in the Society a character who has rendered more eminent service in so many lines. He was appointed Assistant Clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting in 1851 and succeeded his father as Clerk in 1857. This position he held until 1884.

During the intervening years the country passed through the Civil War and the Reconstruction Period, and the Society through the greatest transitions in its history. Through it all, he held the reins of the largest Yearly Meeting in America with a wise and steady hand. He was firm but kindly in his bearing, keen to sense the mind of the Meeting and happy in his drafting of minutes. A story is told of how "during the Yearly Meeting of 1869, when radicalism was most aggressive, a heated discussion arose which lasted nearly three hours. For a time it seemed as if the radicals were going to carry everything before them. Charles F. Coffin, as Clerk, had power to 'call the meeting to order', but instead of doing so, he turned to an old friend, Joseph Cox, who sat behind him, at the head of the meeting and said, 'Joseph, shall I stop them?' Joseph Cox replied, 'not yet, Charles, let them run.' Later, the same question was asked and the Old Roman replied 'wait a while longer, this is not a northeaster' (referring to a storm from the northeast which usually continues several days). In time the rebellious ones talked themselves into silence and the business was resumed as if nothing had happened." Undoubtedly this skillful handling of the situation prevented a more protracted scene of shameful confusion.

Merely to catalog the various lines in which he was active is no small task. He was only 17 years old when he became Clerk of the Bible Association of Friends of Whitewater Quarterly Meeting, an organization for the distribution of bibles among Friends. When nineteen he was made Clerk of Whitewater Preparative Meeting and served two years until he became Assistant Clerk of Whitewater Monthly Meeting. In 1848 he was promoted to the clerkship, which position he occupied for six years. When twenty-one, he became a life member of the American Bible Society. He was made the first President of the Wayne County Sabbath School Association in 1861, and in 1867 President of the State Sabbath School Association, which position he held for two years. From 1862 to 1871 he was superintendent of a Mission and Bible School for soldiers' widows and orphans.

It was upon his advice that President Grant appointed the Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian affairs. He served as first clerk of this Committee, was for a time chairman of the sub-committee on "Religious Interests," and a member of the "Washington Committee" which formulated its reports from the National Government.

He was one of the band of young Friends who felt the early breathings of the religious awakening which swept over American Quakerism the last half of the last century. At his home the prayer group gathered for its initial meeting in 1860, and there interested Friends continued to meet for six years. From this nucleus grew South Eighth Street Meeting, Richmond, Indiana.

In Fourth Month, 1866, he was acknowledged a minister by Whitewater Monthly Meeting. In 1871 a movement was started in Indiana Yearly Meeting to promote Foreign Missionary labor, and the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends was organized. He and his wife were members of this Association, which for a time was not directly responsible to the Meeting, considerable difference of opinion having prevented the Meeting from undertaking this work. This Association sent Samuel Purdy to Matamoras, Mexico.

The work to which he gave the major part of his time during his last ten years in Richmond was a "Committee on Ministry." He was made its Chairman and Robert W. Douglas, Superintendent. In much of this labor he was assisted by his wife. He thus writes of the work: "A large number of ministers were soon placed actively at work. Series of meetings were held in all the Meetings in the Yearly Meeting. The results were soon shown in a large accession to the membership of the Church. Old Meeting houses were remodeled and made more attractive and new ones in many instances constructed. And in some parts of the Yearly Meeting, particularly in Van Wert County, Ohio, and in the limits of Winchester Quarterly Meeting, Indiana, new Meetings were formed, where they had never existed before, and a large and interesting work of evangelization was carried forward."

Various as were his activities in the church, he found time for much other public welfare work. In 1844 he served as treasurer of the Young Friends' Boarding School Association, which, at that time, was raising funds to erect the first building now constituting Earlham College. Under commission of Governor Baker he devoted months to the study of methods for the care of the insane in Europe, and, as a result the "Cottage System" was installed in two of the Indiana State Asylums.

For two years, following the close of the Civil War, he was a member of a Citizens' Committee to look after the physical needs of soldiers' wives and children and to assist returned soldiers to secure positions. During Lincoln's Administration he was a member of a Yearly Meeting Committee to intercede with the President in behalf of Friends drafted into the army, and later during Johnson's Administration he served on a Committee to confer with the President on the care of the People of Color, who were left destitute throughout the South. He organized the Indiana Reform School for boys and was for years its president. He was instrumental in procuring for Indiana the first women's prison in the world, managed exclusively by women.

In the midst of his most active service, the bank of which he was president failed and he found himself forced to begin life anew. It was then that he and his wife came to Chicago. He began work for the Provident Life and Trust Company, of Philadelphia, as General Agent for Illinois and Indiana, and later became their Western Loan Agent. His connection with this Company was interrupted at two periods; once when he was appointed receiver for the Fort Scott Water Company, and once, as receiver for the San Diego Water Company. In order to handle these trusts satisfactorily to the English bondholders whom he represented, he spent about two years in London, beginning his residence there in the Fall of 1887.

From 1899 to the time of his death, he was not in active business, but had a desk in his son's office and devoted a portion of his time to the care of two estates for which he was Trustee.

He came into the Chicago Meeting, and while assuming little official responsibility, wielded a most beneficial influence. He continued to exercise his gift in the ministry and his presence at the head of the meeting was a benediction for a generation. His sympathies and affections grew and deepened with the passing years until his very presence radiated the spirit of his Master, and his death on the 9th of Eighth Month, 1916, was a peaceful, trustful closing of a victorious life.

CHARLES F. COFFIN AND QUAKER HISTORY

"Other men labored and ye are entered into their labor." John 4:38. These words of Jesus seem singularly appropriate upon this occasion. I did not have the pleasure of knowing Charles F. Coffin personally. I do not intend to repeat anything I may have heard about him. I venture to speak of him from an indirect source. I have endeavored to fit Charles F. Coffin into what little I know of Quaker History in America. It seems to me he occupied a strategic position. It cannot be amiss to say that he exercised marked influence upon Indiana Yearly Meeting at a time when that body stood at the parting of the ways. It seems to me that this Yearly Meeting is today a progressive evangelical body, largely in consequence of the attitude and influence of Charles F. Coffin.

The Society of Friends in America has had a very extraordinary history. The beginning was marked by dramatic and tragic events in New England; William Penn and his Holy Experiment in Pennsylvania made Quakerism a national force. Then followed the long period of conservative quietism. During these decades the Friends were mainly agriculturalists. They read but little; the Bible was seldom used at home and was taboo at most meetings for worship. The preaching was mainly exhortatory. The energies of the Society seem to have been largely consumed in enforcing discipline by disownment of members for trivial delinquencies.

Then came the Hicksite controversy. Elias Hicks was a great man—yet he was an extremist. He appears to have had no adequate appreciation of the historic development of Christianity. He was a mystic; and, therefore an individualist. Lack of patience and sympathy caused both Hicks and his opponents to take extreme points of view. The resulting disruption did grave damage to the Orthodox body; it robbed them of many brainy men, whose guiding hands would have been of invaluable service.

The visits of Joseph John Gurney resulted in great good. He established Bible Schools and brought Friends back to a knowledge of the Scriptures. Yet Gurney was a traditionalist, and it is not surprising that many of the simple American Quakers were soon interpreting Scripture in an unwarrantable literal manner.

That John Wilbur threw himself across the track of J. J. Gurney is not at all surprising. Gurney was an English aristocrat and would not brook opposition. The result of the unhappy controversy was, as we all know and deplore, that the Orthodox body was torn into fragments. Separations occurred in practically every Yearly Meeting.

I speak of these things because Charles F. Coffin, wonderful as it seems to us today, was actually born before the Hicksite Separations of 1827-1828. He was old enough at that time to have heard Friends discuss the matter, and doubtless he remembered it. Charles Coffin lived through the whole of the critical period of Quaker history. He certainly was a link with the past. He was an active participator in Quaker affairs in the stormy days of the middle period of the last century. His father, Elijah Coffin, was Clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting from 1827 to 1859. Charles succeeded and was Clerk for 27 years. Thus he and his father have helped to make Indiana Yearly Meeting what it is.

Owing to the strange distrust of human reason held by the old Friends they were not able to meet the renaissance of the last century. There were few who could debate with Hicks and none was the equal of Gurney. These two men were, of course, the very antitheses of each other, Hicks being a mystic and Gurney a literalist.

Thus the Society, rent and torn, heated with anti-slavery and doctrinal passion, scarce knowing what it stood for, and none knowing what its future should be, met the Revival of the fifties and sixties. This movement was not a mere Quaker Revival; it was one of those strange, psychological upheavals, which occasionally sweep across the continent. It affected nearly every religious body.

The Revival gave Charles F. Coffin his opportunity. It tested his genius. When the whirlwind struck Richmond he stood firm. He saw the trend of events, and prophet-like, saw the way the Friends should move if they were to survive as a religious body. In many places the Friends resisted the Revival, and, as a consequence settled down into conservative "deadism." In other places Friends were swept off their feet by the movement. All sorts of excesses resulted. In a neighboring state astonishing and disgraceful proceedings occurred.

As I look over the field of Quaker history, I believe I see where Charles F. Coffin belongs. By this indirect, yet perfectly justifiable method, I arrive at the conclusion that it was largely due to the sagacity, far-sightedness, level-headedness and statesmanlike abilities of Charles F. Coffin (and a few others) that Indiana Yearly Meeting has avoided conservatism on the one hand and ranterism on the other.

This is his unique contribution to Quakerism. He helped to make Indiana Yearly Meeting a sane, progressive, evangelical body. He labored, and we have entered into his labors; it is, therefore, fitting that we thus meet to honor his memory.

TRADITIONAL QUAKERISM

By CORNELIUS R. SMALL

We have no disposition whatever to set ourselves up as a critic, neither a prophet, a poet nor a dreamer. In an effort to make our viewpoint clear we may state some pointed facts, only as words of caution to our beloved church. We have for some years been much interested in the success of the Friends church in carrying out the mission for which she was brought into the world. This interest has begotten in the writer a real conviction leading to this paper. We hope, and pray, the readers of The American Friend will read and consider it in the same spirit in which it is written.

We will all no doubt concede there is nothing so much needed in the Christian life and Christian service as the Holy Spirit of God. True, our beloved church wants many things—social position, influence, wealth, etc.—that she may feed the poor, clothe the naked, fight disease, intemperance, oppression, foster education, care for the orphans, and scatter sunshine where darkness reigns. These things are all very good, but nothing can take the place of the Holy Spirit as an aid in maintaining the message as given to the primitive church of the Society of Friends, which was abundantly blessed and sustained as a peculiar people chosen, by obedience to the Lord, to give the world a Gospel message entirely suited to the needs of the people in all ages, a full Gospel, a higher standard of righteousness, a purer life emanating from that of the living Christ.

That the Society of Friends as a message bearing church is undergoing a change or drifting away from a leadership by the Holy Spirit seems, in evidence, true. In casting about in a diligent search for truth, we find her nearing the shoals of tradition that played havoc with God's once chosen people, Israel. Since the Society of Friends has no commission from the Bible, or its author, to which we may go to support us in the use of the name Quaker, and since it was originated and applied in derision to the followers of George Fox more than 260 years ago because of a physical manifestation of religious emotions, a demonstration that has long since passed from us and does not apply to Friends of the present day, it is therefore a misnomer. The name Quaker has become a traditional term rather than one of merit in the cause of Christ. The speakers and writers of our day who seem eager to popularize the traditional term are very far from encouraging that physical manifestation of religious emotion that brought forth the name.

We have asked some Friends, who are well informed and good thinkers, to define Quakerism. They have come with a ready answer. But, when asked to define the term in the light of its origin rather than the light of its tradition, we have never been able to get an answer satisfactory to the persons themselves or the writer. One Friend, a good writer and an author, said it would be quite awkward to use the term Friendsism instead of Quakerism. This led us to remember "The world grew light-headed and forth came a spawn of isms which no man can number." We cannot hope as a church to succeed on the dead past of isms and traditions. Jesus Christ said to the Pharisees: "Full well ye reject the commandments of God that ye may keep your own tradition." Mark 7:9. In the wisdom of God, in the council with His only begotten Son, did it not seem more expedient to institute a new dispensation and start anew rather than to wean Israel away from the numerous traditions added to God's word and law? Let us therefore be very careful, as a church, that we do not traditionalize God's law into a programmed system of ritualistic ceremonies that cannot evangelize, or give to the world, the message entrusted to us. The tendency among us seems to traditionalize Quakerism, making it prominent as an end. We should accept God's Word and Message to the church only as a means to an end.

We pledge our loyalty, as a Friend, to God's Word and Message, in all sincerity and tenderness of spirit.

We have such a good opportunity in our schools to teach the Scripture as it is required by law and I have felt that God has wonderfully blessed me in giving these lessons. I am sure it is getting hold of their young hearts and not the children alone but also the parents as you will see in the following incidents.

One little Indian boy eleven years old, Harold Balisingh by name, was converted a few months ago. He is an exceptionally bright boy. It would be hard to find one with a keener intellect than his in any race or country. He sits and drinks in the Gospel like the thirsty earth drinks in the water after a sudden shower. One day something was said about idol worship and offering food to idols. Harold said, "My mother always gives a cock for a certain heathen festival. But I told my mother she must not do it again and she isn't giving one this year." He has now united with the church and I am praying that God's spirit will so get hold of his heart and life that he may be used in winning many souls.

A few weeks ago I was speaking to the father and mother of another one of my boys about getting married. As I was talking, this little ten-year-old boy spoke up and said, "That's the same thing I was telling them." I could only reply, "That is right, Niehulsingh." And I thanked God for the seed that had been sown in his young heart. We pray that before long these parents shall be united, not only in marriage but also with God and the church.

Louise, a little girl of nine years, whom Miss Stanley took into her home about two years ago, was sent for by her parents so she might attend "Hoosey" a heathen festival. When asked what was wanted she said very decidedly, "They came after me, but they are not going to get me."

As our school has increased in numbers and interest, we have seen also a marked increase both in our Sunday School and church services, which of course is the goal for which all our work must be aimed, and in the future we hope to see a large church built up in that place filled with native workers who will be able to carry much of the burden of the church.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Recent letters from Cuba tell of increase in the number of candidates for enrollment in the Mission Schools. These schools opened the first of this month, but all workers have been too busy thus far to write in detail about the opening. It is encouraging to know that our schools are gaining favor with the people and that through them boys and girls are in greater numbers being trained for usefulness in the Church in Cuba.

Emory J. Rees is making good progress with Scripture translation. An edition of St. John's Gospel, in Kavirondo, has just been printed on the mission press at Maragoli. St. Mark was issued nearly two years ago.

The translation of Matthew is completed and work on the Acts is nearly finished. Little has as yet been done on Luke. Emory Rees hopes to be able to finish the translation and revision of the four Gospels and the Acts before going on his furlough next year.

The officers of the Board of Missions and workers on the field are awaiting with deepest interest the result of the conferences between Mexican and American Commissioners now taking place at New London, Connecticut. Solomon Tice's recent visit to Victoria gave him assurance that the mission schools there can be opened with native teachers—whether American workers can safely remain at Victoria remains yet to be seen. On the 13th inst. Solomon Tice started again for the interior, expecting to arrange for the opening of work at Victoria and to spend a few days at Matehuala. As soon as the weather will permit, Genaro Ruiz and Solomon Tice prepare to start on an evangelistic tour through the towns and villages of the state of Tamaulipas, which will give an opportunity of reorganizing scattered congregations and of visiting members who have been cut off from church privileges for three years past.

Friends have accepted the responsibility of carrying the Gospel to these four great foreign fields.

Without the Gospel countless multitudes in these lands are lost.

Missionary contributions thus far have not been sufficient this year to meet the cost of carrying the life-saving Gospel to our four fields. Several thousand dollars are still needed.

The year of the Board of Missions closes Ninth Month 30th.

Only by immediate action on the part of Friends who see this bulletin can a deficit be avoided.

Let individuals and meetings send, according to their ability, additional gifts of $1, $10, $50, $100, $1000 or other sums.

Let all treasurers forward immediately missionary funds now on hand.

To be counted toward this year's work, funds must reach our treasurer, on or before the 30th instant.

To fall short in the support of our Foreign Missionary work this year would necessitate retrenchment next year. It would mean disloyalty to Christ. It would be a calamity to the Church.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

YOUNG FRIENDS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

San Diego is a fresh, clean city of Southern California. It is but fourteen miles from the Mexican border, and is situated at the edge of the sea with a very even climate. One may expect therefore a cool reception in summer and a warm one in winter. A newcomer is often not aware of this and to his disgust is caught up in a Palm Beach suit or light dress. The discomforts of a mistake of this kind are compensated, however, by the beauty of the place. One is impressed with the broad streets, white or grey business blocks, extensive parks and abundance of flowers. As in other California cities one finds the saloon an eye sore to the community and a draw back in social and religious development. Let us hope that the day is near when the beauty of no American city will be marred by this evil. Here, as in other Pacific Coast towns, the shifting population presents a difficult church problem. While it is almost impossible to build a permanent work, a meeting can take advantage of the training and culture of some tourists by putting them to work in the Sunday School and C. E. Societies during their stay in the meeting. This will do the meeting much good and will help the new comer. Of course there must be a large element of staple people or this cannot be worked to advantage. The Friends Meeting at San Diego is not large, but it is a good meeting and the workers are earnest Christians. They are interested in progressive church movements and are trying as best they can to establish a solid city Friends Meeting. The new pastor, Mr. Kinsey, is a graduate of West-town and has had much experience as a pastor. He is deeply interested in a broader and better Quakerism. Under his leadership we hope the Meeting will move ahead to far greater fields of service. The Young Peoples Society is striving nobly to maintain an efficient organization of Christian Endeavor.

Ramona Meeting is situated thirty-five miles northeast of San Diego. It is in the center of a farming district which is surrounded by a series of mountains. To reach the place one has to climb up, up through canyons, over sandy river beds, through narrow gorges and along waving wheat fields. The country is romantic and fascinating. Part of the way between San Diego and Ramona leads through the wasted valley of the Santa Ana river. The floods of a year ago swept away beautiful farms, drowned cattle and left hundreds of farmers destitute. Wheat, oats and corn are grown around the Ramona meeting. The rather scanty rainfall this year has cut the crops short and Friends are a little pressed for funds, still there is a spirit of optimism about the whole place and one cannot help feeling there are better days ahead of the Ramona Meeting. The Young Friends here are eager for some organization, that will minister to the social, intellectual and spiritual side of the meeting. They are growing very interested in the community church idea and are asking that it be tried. A church with a positive program, which will really minister to young people along the above mentioned lines seems to be needed in this place.

FRIENDS IN COLORADO

After a two days' ride from Los Angeles, which for the most part is over hot deserts, one arrived in Boulder, Colorado. Here is one of the largest and most progressive Friends' meetings in Nebraska Yearly Meeting. Through the efficient services of Kirby V. Bowen, the church has gone ahead apace in the the last two or three years. Effort is being made now to erect a much needed meeting house. The congregation has so grown that the present accommodations are entirely too small.

At present Friends meet in a house which belongs to the Seventh Day Baptists. A building site has been purchased, however, and building operations will begin soon. The Christian Endeavor Society is wide awake and is helping much on the new building. The young people are very loyal to the church and are devoted to the cause of Christ. They have emphasized the social side of the meeting also. Often prayer meetings are held in one of the canyons just at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. A great future seems ahead of Boulder Friends.

Boulder, Colorado, has a population of 9,539, and is situated at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. Within an hour's time one can reach any of the large mountains and be started on his climb to the top. I shall not soon forget a climb up Green Mountain. This overlooks Boulder and the broad prairie that stretches beyond the horizon to the east. The picturesque city nestled at the foot of the great mountain is surrounded by dozens of lakes which sparkle in the moonlight like so many fields of silver. Broad white roads run to Denver and other cities of this section, while wheat and oats fields lying like big squares of gold dot the broad dark plain. There are few cities that furnish a more invigorating climate than Boulder and hundreds of people come here for a rest in the summer. Many students from Colorado University attend meeting in the city and take leading positions in the work of the church. In such a city as this the Friends are undertaking to build a meeting house and to extend the lines of the church. If any one is looking for a new home he would do well to visit the Friends in Boulder and hear at first hand the advantages of the place. There are bright prospects for Friends in this city.

Denver Meeting presents a rather discouraging aspect at present. The meeting is small. It is situated in the extreme northern part of the city and is not of ready access to Friends generally. Yet there is a growing population about it and if aggressive work is done no doubt the meeting can be built up. The Christian Endeavor Society is planning to reorganize and undertake greater things in the coming year. If Friends of the meeting would co-operate more closely and permit the love of God to surround all the efforts of the meeting no doubt many could be lead to Christ and the Meeting strengthened. All the problems of a small meeting in a large city seem to be summed up in the Denver Meeting.

MUTUAL AID

STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE

From The Messenger of Peace.

(In view of the fact that the recent increase in number of subscribers to the MESSENGER OF PEACE has included many readers of the AMERICAN FRIEND, articles from the former paper are not now as a rule reprinted here. The unusual importance of this article seems, however, to justify its appearance in both papers.—A. D. H.)

The Author Of a New Book, and His Subject

A Russian author, Prince Kropotkin by name, published fourteen years ago a book entitled "Mutual Aid, a factor of Evolution," which is only just now becoming known to English readers generally. The present great war in Europe has been the occasion of bringing it to the attention of the public, because of the new emphasis the author places on the principles which underlie the process of development of man and the institutions of civilized society.

The author's thesis is that the development both of the lower animals and of man depends as much upon MUTUAL AID as upon rivalry; perhaps, indeed, mutual aid is the more fundamental PROGRESSIVE element.

Why Has There Been Progress?

The advocates of military methods insist that the progress of civilization depends fundamentally upon the fighting instinct, and since Darwin's time the phrase "struggle for existence" has been used frequently and perhaps effectively in support of their claims. As a result of the emphasis thus given to the function of rivalry in development not a few of our citizens, including many devout Christian men and women, have come to believe that wars are "inevitable," and some believe also that wars will always be inevitable.

Since this disheartening belief is apparently founded on advanced scientific principles, it is refreshing and encouraging to those who have refused to accept such views, to find a work which with such care and scientific accuracy presents for consideration the case for mutual aid. Perhaps it may yet be established as a scientific truth that the progress of the human race has come about in spite of the fighting instinct, rather than because of it.

Outline of the Book

In the limited space which can be given to a review of the book at this time, the argument followed and the facts adduced cannot be presented. The plan and spirit of the work can, however, be at least partially understood by reading the following extracts from the Preface to the edition printed in 1914. Those who are interested in the principles here discussed should become familiar with the work as a whole.

Extracts from the Preface

"When the present war began, involving nearly all Europe in a terrible struggle, and this struggle assumed, in those parts of Belgium and France which were invaded by the Germans, a never yet known character of wholesale destruction of life among the non-combatants and pillage of the means of subsistence of the civil population, 'struggle for existence' became a favourite explanation with those who tried to find an excuse for these horrors.

"A protest against such an abuse of Darwin's terminology appeared then in a letter published in the Times (London.) It was said in this letter that such an explanation was 'little more than an application to philosophy and politics of ideas taken from crude popular misconceptions of the Darwinian theory (of 'struggle for existence' and 'will to power,' 'survival of the fittest' and 'superman,' etc.); that there was, however, a work in English 'which interprets biological and social progress not in terms of overbearing brute force and cunning, but in terms of mutual co-operation.' It was suggested, therefore, that a cheap reprint of this book should be published without delay.

"Twelve years have passed since the first edition of this work was published, and it can be said that its fundamental idea—the idea that mutual aid represents in evolution an important progressive element—begins to be recognized by biologists. In most of the chief works on evolution which have appeared lately on the Continent, it is already indicated that two different aspects of the struggle for life must be distinguished: the exterior war of the species against the adverse natural conditions and the rival species, and the inner war for the means of existence within the species. It is also admitted that both the extent of the latter and its importance in evolution have been exaggerated, much to the regret of Darwin himself; while the importance of sociability and social instinct in animals for the well-being of the species, contrarily to Darwin's teaching, was underrated.

"The leaders of contemporary thought are still inclined to maintain that the masses had little concern in the evolution of the sociable institutions of man, and that all the progress made in this direction was due to the intellectual, political, and military leaders of the inert masses.

"The present war, having brought the majority of the civilized nations of Europe into a close contact, not only with the realities of war, but also with thousands of its side effects in daily life, surely will contribute to alter the current teachings. It will show how much the creative, constructive genius of the mass of the people is required, whenever a nation has to live through a difficult moment of its history.

"It was not the masses of the European nations who prepared the present war-calamity and worked out its barbarous methods: it was their rulers, their intellectual leaders. The masses of the people have nowhere had a voice in the preparation of the present slaughter, and still less so in the working out of the present methods of warfare, which represent an entire disregard of what we considered the best inheritance of civilization.

"And if the wreckage of this inheritance will not be complete; if notwithstanding the crimes committed during this "civilized" war, we may still be sure that the teachings and traditions of human solidarity will, after all, emerge intact from the present ordeal, it is because, by the side of the extermination organized from above, we see thousands of those manifestations of spontaneous mutual aid, of which I speak in this book in the chapters devoted to Man."

Who can now listen? To hear is a divine accomplishment. Who hears well? To have a responsive hearer is to make a good preacher. The pew makes the pulpit.—Joseph Parker.

THE IOWA PAGE

EVANGELISTIC AND CHURCH EXTENSION WORK

In an unusual way this is the beginning of a new year. Upon the recommendation of this Committee, the Yearly Meeting changed the size and method of appointment of the Committee having this work in charge. Now it consists of nine members, three retiring each year, appointed by the Yearly Meeting. The Quarterly Meeting Superintendents are now advisory members. The personnel of the Committee has also been considerably changed.

In the process of revising the Iowa additions to the Discipline, the field and scope of the Committee has been somewhat altered with the thought of removing any suspicion that the Committee was seeking to use delegated or assumed authority over Meetings or pastors, but to strengthen the ties of friendly relationship through counsel and advice. Then, too, the Committee has a new Superintendent, Charles O. Whitely, who has moved from his pastoral work in Newberg, Oregon to Oskaloosa and has already entered with zeal into his new work.

All this newness will, for a time, make for slowness in the work, but the Committee has every reason to believe that the Meetings and pastors, realizing this handicap, will the more readily co-operate with them and be the more free to let their needs be known to the Superintendent or members of the Committee. The persons appointed by the Yearly Meeting to assist in the pastoral, evangelistic and church extension work are all at the command of any Meeting or pastor who may be served.

The Committee is composed of the following persons: E. H. Stranahan, Chairman; A. J. Hanson, Vice Chairman; Adaline Hadley, Sec.; J. Milo Hockett, Treas. of the Yearly Meeting, Colfax, Iowa, Treasurer; W. Jasper Hadley, Viola Smith, A. J. Hadley, William S. Kitch, Clarence M. Case, Isaac N. Rich.

Among the evangelists available for work in the Yearly Meeting are: Viola Smith, Salem, Iowa, now ready for work; Taylor Guthrie, Cummings, Iowa, available for a few meetings; F. Olin Hunt, of Kansas, available for a few meetings, possibly, after Christmas. There are a few singers, women, and some pastors who will hold one or two meetings. Charles O.

Whitely, 638 North Market Street, Oskaloosa, Iowa, should be written to concerning dates, etc.

OUR POLICY

During Yearly Meeting the Committee decided that it is to be the policy of this committee to give its attention, as a body and through its Superintendent, to the individual Meetings rather than to Quarterly Meeting sessions. It is accepted that the Quarterly Meeting should be made an occasion of spiritual uplift by means of strong sermons, but this committee does not hold that the Superintendent is secured for the sole purpose of being Quarterly Meeting preacher. For this year however, because of the necessity of Charles Whitely becoming thoroughly acquainted with Friends and all of the Meetings he will visit many if not all of the Quarterly Meetings once during the year. Quarterly Meetings should direct their proper committees, though, to make such arrangements as will permit the general superintendent to be somewhat free during its sessions so that he may assist the Meetings of the Quarter through conferences with persons in attendance. In most cases he will plan to spend several days visiting Meetings before or after the Quarterly Meeting sessions.

AMONG THE PASTORAL CHARGES

George Deshler goes to Lynnville after a year at Cherokee, Okla., Birdie V. Batchelor to Hubbard; A. J. Hanson to Indianola; George McClellan to Ackworth; Laura Townsend to West Branch.

There are several Meetings that have not made final arrangements as to pastors, among them being Wright, Bloomfield, Searsboro, Liberty, Cummings, Scranton, Springdale, Sawyer, Hesper, Velton and Highland.

An unusually large number of changes have taken place at the end of the year. It is hoped that all Meetings may soon be supplied and that all pastors may soon be located. It is important that all concerned should give careful attention to this.

NEWS NOTES

Charles O. Whitely conducted an "all day meeting" at Pleasant Chapel, in Honey Creek Quarter, on the 10th. He will attend a similar meeting at Middle River on the 24th.

General Superintendent Charles O. Whitely and the chairman of the committee recently visited in the Bloomfield and Wright neighborhoods looking after the matter of pastoral care for these Meetings.

The Committee is expecting to have a meeting soon to more definitely plan its work for the year. Any Meeting desiring any assistance in regard to pastor, evangelist, or special meetings of any description should communicate immediately with the Superintendent or Chairman.

PEACE DEPARTMENT

The report of the Peace Committee of Iowa Yearly Meeting for the past year shows that 37 peace meetings have been held, 39 sermons preached, 3 programs rendered and 31 addresses given. Many meetings report having written their congressmen asking them to use their influence against further increase in armaments. More than 25,000 pages of literature have been distributed during the year and there has been an expenditure aside from money appropriated by the Yearly Meeting of $41.40

Samuel L. Haworth of Minneapolis, beside serving as President of the Minneapolis Peace Society, has given nine addresses on important occasions, some of which have been outside the limits of the Yearly Meeting and has also preached several peace sermons before the local congregation. The chairman of the committee has visited a number of meetings during the year, giving 20 addresses in all, 16 of which were illustrated by aid of stereopticon.

The committee and organization for the coming year are as follows: Chairman, Alvin Hoskins, Richland; Secretary, Bessie F. Collins, Salem; Samuel L. Haworth; Dr. Clarence M. Case; Chase Conover and John M. Baldwin.

The following is the program of work as outlined by the Committee. Clarence M. Case and Alvin Hoskins were appointed a sub-committee to care for the legislative interests of the work. Arrangements were made to send the "Advocate of Peace" gratis to a number of interested pastors. The committee decided to continue its lecture work believing that to be the most effective method of reaching the people. It is hoped that Clarence M. Case of Penn College will be able to give a few addresses. Samuel L. Haworth will likely be available for a limited number of addresses and Alvin Hoskins expects to give some time to the work with his illustrated lecture on "The European War and International Peace" and a new lecture now in preparation treating on, "The Grounds and Practicability of the Quaker Position on War."

Correspondence is solicited with meetings and others desiring the services of the committee or to secure speakers for peace meetings; it is urged that meetings be arranged for as early as possible, and that when possible union meetings of all churches in the community be held.

The committee desires that all peace news, such as addresses, sermons preached, and programs rendered, etc. be sent to Alvin Hoskins, Richland, Iowa, for publication in The American Friend.

NOTICE

The Foreign Missionary Committee of Iowa Yearly Meeting has been organized with the following officers: Chairman, A. J. Hadley, of Earlham; Vice Chairman, S. M. Hadley, Oskaloosa; Secretary, Anna M. T. Kelsey, Oskaloosa. All funds go through the hands of Milo Hockett, our Yearly Meeting Treasurer.

AS OTHERS SEE US

The following interesting editorial is taken from a recent issue of "Charities and Children" of Thomasville, N. C., and has been sent us by our friend, Dr. Sylvester Newlin, of High Point. We are sure that many of our readers will be interested in seeing this statement:

The Quaker Attitude

Quakers are not cowards. They are as courageous as other people; but they are opposed to war and they are right. It is with them a positive and overwhelming conviction that men were not made to slaughter each other. They have stood true to their conviction through all the ages and have been entirely consistent. They are excellent citizens and stand for civic progress everywhere and all the time. They are patrons of education, advocates of good roads, of improved agricultural methods, and of moral and material progress along every line. It has been the pleasure of the writer to mingle with them a good deal of late, and our admiration for them grows as we know them better. A Quaker community not far from here is a model neighborhood. They live in beautiful homes, are enterprising and prosperous citizens and are never forgetful to entertain strangers. In religion they manifest a high devotion and unswerving loyalty to the Bible. There are no higher critics among them. They adhere to the simple form of worship and are always tolerant and considerate of the feelings of others. A recent visit to Springfield, a Quaker neighborhood near High Point, prompts these remarks. For more than a hundred years a church and school have done their blessed work among the people. For years a demonstration farm was run by the community that led the way in better farming, improved stock, etc. A paper read at a memorial service on Aug. 23 on Allen M. Tomlinson, one of the pioneers in the development of the community, was to this writer exceedingly luminous. Among many other valuable historical incidents the following was given: In the bloody years of 1861-1865, as the fortunes of the Confederacy were waning, and the southern forces were being rapidly depleted, an infamous bill was proposed in the legislature to compel all Quakers to bear arms, albeit this meant the crucifixion of their consciences. The penalty for failure to obey this outrageous law was the confiscation of the property of the Friends and their expulsion from the state. With the deepest apprehension of the danger of the proposition, Allen M. Tomlinson with three or four other Friends went to Raleigh and appealed to Gov. William A. Graham, who was a member of the Senate, to stand against this cruel bill. He heartily championed their cause and when the bill came before the Senate made a speech of such wonderful power that the body defeated the measure by a unanimous vote and the Quakers were saved. Gov. Vance afterward asked them to go to the salt works on the coast and help to make salt which had become a stern necessity. To this request they gladly responded, and were of great service to the Confederacy in this capacity which did not outrage their consciences. There has been much senseless prejudice against these honest citizens, but the world is coming around to their position and perhaps sooner than we think, their wisdom will be vindicated. They believe that war is of the devil and that we ought not to be engaged in the devil's business, and they are everlastingly right.

DANVILLE QUARTERLY MEETING

The different sessions of Danville Quarterly Meeting, Western Yearly Meeting, were held at Millcreek church, September 1-3. It was regarded as being one of the best Quarterly Meetings held for a long time. We had the acceptable services of Edgar T. Hole, now on furlough from the Africa Industrial mission. He was accompanied by Dr. Archibald Bond and wife and little daughter of Westfield, Indiana, who are expecting soon to enter upon work at the Africa mission.

Thomas C. Brown of Plainfield, Indiana, was present at the Sabbath morning services and preached a searching sermon from the text, "And will ye also go away?" The services of a male quartette, consisting of Messrs. McCormack, Lawrence Hadley, Jewell Stephenson and Herman Haworth, were highly appreciated. The reports indicated that better work is being done in most of the meetings than last year. A request came from Danville to have a Monthly Meeting set up at that place.

Following the Quarterly Meeting the missionaries visited all of the meetings constituting this Quarter.

Some changes are being made among the pastors of the Quarterly Meeting. Mary Miars Harold will continue in service at Danville and Austin Osborn at Amo. Martilla and Mary A. Cox, who have had charge of the work at Hadley and Mill Creek, will be located at West Middleton, Indiana, having charge of the work at Lynn in New London Quarter.

HELP ARMENIA AND SYRIA

To the Churches of Christ in America:

In response to the proclamation of the President of the United States, appointing Saturday and Sunday, October 21 and 22, as days for the relief of the suffering Armenian and Syrian peoples, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America earnestly urges upon all of the Churches of the thirty constituent bodies of the Federal Council, and upon all Christian people, that Sunday, October 22, be set apart for earnest intercession in behalf of our brethren of these races.

The Federal Council will send to all the pastors of its constituency full informational material for use in presenting this great cause to the people and recommend that contributions at all the services on this day be secured for distribution through the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief.

In the name of Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

SHAILER MATHEWS, President.

General Secretary.

THE NEBRASKA PAGE

PLAINVIEW, NEBRASKA

Our pastors, Theo. and Estella Foxworthy, recently returned from their vacation trip to Iowa. During their absence Stella Hockett, of Kemma, preached the first Sunday, the next Sabbath the Mens' Gospel Team had charge of the morning services and the Young People's Gospel Team of the evening meeting. Brother Foxworthy is now visiting meetings in western Nebraska and eastern Colorado in the capacity of Evangelistic Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting.

The Men's and Women's Bible Classes of the Sabbath School met at the parsonage for their regular business meeting Tuesday evening, September 5. The social feature was enjoyed by all and the business was transacted with much interest, after which refreshments were served.

A most interesting phase of our Bible School work, introduced by the Superintendent, Philip Stein, is proving very beneficial. In the classes above the primary department, the class secretaries on calling the roll each Sunday are responded to by the per cent earned by each individual, "Attendance" counting 60, "Home Study" 15, "On Time" 15, "Collection" 10. A marked advancement has been made in home study and the collections have increased. Being able to answer 100 at roll call is a point of appeal to children and young people of the Bible School as well as it is of the public schools. We notice that the men and women are also helped by the system.

CENTRAL COLLEGE OPENS

On Tuesday, September 5, Nebraska Central College opened her seventeenth year's work, with a large increase of enrollment in all departments, especially in the College Department. Short addresses were given on this auspicious occasion, by Dr. S. L. Hull, President of the Board of Trustees, by Prof. Homer J. Coppock, one of the new members of the faculty, by John D. Mills, pastor, by Prof. Ray Lewis, Traveling Secretary, and by President Eli H. Parish.

Prof. Coppock said in part, "Entering College is like embarking on a journey through a land of variegated beauty. We as your teachers hope to be able to help make your College work as a journey through a land of beauty in these days to come."

NEBRASKA CENTRAL COLLEGE ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

One year ago the board of trustees voted to undertake the raising of one hundred thousand dollars, permanent endowment by October, 1917. At the Yearly Meeting last June, a joint endowment campaign between the College and the Church Extension Board for this amount was agreed upon. This campaign is now in progress under the leadership of Prof. W. R. Lewis and quietly but surely is moving along toward ultimate victory.

Our own Central College has proved its right to permanent existence by seventeen years of steady consistent growth. Through lean years and fat years she has lived and labored onward. Already more than one hundred graduates from her department "rise up and call her blessed." So far her expenses have been met almost entirely by tuitions and donations. Such has been true indeed of many Christian Colleges in their earlier years. However it is a fact recognized by all that before coming to her own in the greater work of a standard college she must have the ballast and the security of a strong endowment fund.

Now there are four or five reasons for which this campaign should be won by October, 1917.

First—The interest-income to the school.

Second—The greater security and credit.

Third—The foundation and attraction for legacies or gifts from the aged.

Fourth—The ranking among sister colleges here in Nebraska.

Fifth—The establishing of her place among the Quaker colleges of America.

To Mr. Fred Marsh, former county superintendent of schools is due the credit for the beginning of our endowment fund, ten years ago. To him and to many others also we are indebted for their responding to the call at that time and later under the administration of Stacy J. McCracken.

And to the Nebraska Central College Alumni—and their generosity at their banquet in 1912—are we forever grateful, in that forty of them gave $100 each to the permanent endowing of their alma mater.

These Friends saw afar. They believed in the cause early. Many of them "out of their want have given all that they had." Altogether a sum of $16,635.00 has accumulated which sum is in the hands of the endowment trustees.

But with the larger prosperity of the state of Nebraska and with the consequent larger day in all her institutions of learning, comes the larger challenge for Nebraska Central College to keep abreast in a way altogether in keeping with all the institutions of Central City and Merrick County, and her constituents are not failing her.

Professor Lewis and the endowment committee have been studying for several months upon a plan that has long been in effect at Park College near Kansas City. This is a plan whereby the land owned by the college there is farmed by the school boys themselves under the direction of an able superintendent of labor, and it has demonstrated the practical benefits to the school in every way and has enabled hundreds of young men to attend college who otherwise would never have dared undertake it. A similar plan is there in effect for dormitory, laundry and greenhouse work for the girls and thus the "self help system" is extended also to young women.

This idea has evoked much favorable comment from the citizens of Merrick county and many already have offered to contribute to such a phase of the endowment fund of the "Greater Central College."

The trustees, teachers, and officers of the Nebraska Central College are the products of Penn College and Earlham, of Guilford and of Friends University and the product of their labors cannot be other than a school of the calibre and standard and fruitage of the worthy schools above named. The best is none too good for Central City. There is not a citizen here who will not thrill with pride as they see the local college flower out into her best and take her place with Nebraska's best and give out unto the world a veritable stream of young men and women—equipped with that which will not only make the world better—but will lead it to its best.

CHURCH AT WORK

Alamitos, California—On Sunday, August 6, special meetings were begun at Alamitos with Isaac L. Kinsey as the evangelist in charge. The Yearly Meeting gospel tent was set up on the school grounds, the desire being that the meetings for which we had prayed long and earnestly might be a union of all the churches for several miles around. A cordial invitation was extended to each one and though the response was not what we had hoped, the Lord was manifestly present from the beginning and blessing fell upon many hearts. A number of ministers dropped in at different times, some from quite a distance, and joined heartily in the services. The greatest blessing centered upon the young people of our Bible School. Several accepted and confessed Christ. For fifteen days and evenings the evangelist broke to us the "bread of life" in loving earnestness. There were several special messages, all of which were masterpieces of strength and eloquence. Church and world conditions were faced and flayed fearlessly.

The Whittier Quarterly Meetings met at Alamitos on August 19. Mr. Kinsey brought the morning message from Numbers 22:18. The evening was given over to a young peoples' rally and the tent was well filled. The meeting closed on the 20th, but the memory and blessings still linger and we are sure will continue.

Portland, Indiana—Portland Quarterly Meeting was held here September 9, and was well attended. Good reports were brought from all the local meetings. The visiting ministers present were Clyde Horne of Amboy, Indiana, Clifton Hinshaw of Winchester, Indiana and Chloe Brooks of Richmond. Their labors of love in the gospel were well received as was also a message from our home pastor, George Bird, which was given somewhat in the nature of a farewell sermon. He has served as pastor within the limits of this Quarterly Meeting for the last four years and he now goes to Greenfield, Indiana, as pastor.

Portland local meeting will miss the personal work and plain gospel preaching of George W. Bird. Percy Thomas of Arba will succeed him as pastor the coming year. Brother Bird has gained a very high standing here in the ministerial association of our county. Luther Addington of Pennville has been appointed evangelistic superintendent of the Quarterly Meeting. Chloe Brooks of Richmond has been chosen as pastor at Monroe. This Quarterly Meeting in a general way is in a good growing condition.

Spiceland, Indiana—Spiceland Quarterly Meeting was held at Spiceland September 9 and 10. The first session at 9:00 a. m. on Ministry and Oversight was devoted largely to reports on the state of the church from the five Monthly Meetings, all of which were encouraging. At 10:30 the Quarterly Meeting assembled for worship and was opened by singing "All hail the Power of Jesus' Name." Besides the home ministers there were present Charles and Lenna Lescault of Los Angeles, California, former pastors of the local church, Zeno Doan, recently chosen pastor at Knightstown; John Butler of Dublin, Indiana, and Murray S. Kenworthy, of Glens Falls, N. Y. After a brief prayer service led by Lenna Lescault, Charles Lescault brought a stirring message delivered in the power of the Spirit, showing how God had always found a man to respond to His call in hours of crisis in the world's history, and emphasizing the call of God today for men and women to solve the social, political and religious problems of the world, which will require a degree of courage and sacrifice too rarely found. He was followed by Zeno Doan, who briefly referred to the method of team work so often chosen to accomplish needed results.

At the noon hour a bountiful dinner was served to more than one hundred and twenty-five people. The afternoon was devoted to the business session. The twelve meetings constituting the Quarter were all well represented and each reported its quota of Yearly Meeting stock paid. In reports from Superintendents of Departments, much interest was shown in the different lines of work, especially that of Bible Schools and Foreign Missions, the latter reporting $767.75 forwarded during the year to the American Friends' Board. The delegate to the Young Friends Conference at Cedar Lake gave a comprehensive report. The clerks disposed of the business in a very satisfactory manner and all felt it had been a good day. On Sabbath morning Charles Lescault was again used in delivering a helpful message from Gen. 1:8, in which he magnified the institution of the home and made an appeal for family worship and a revival of parental control.

At 4:00 o'clock Sabbath afternoon the young people of the Walnut Ridge, Dublin and Spiceland Quarterly Meetings met in conference. The purpose of the conference was to inspire in the young people a desire to meet the present day needs of the church, and to discover how some of the needs might be met. Murray S. Kenworthy, as an adopted son of Spiceland, gave the address of welcome, after which Harry R. Hole of Carthage, Indiana, led the devotions. Following this, three simultaneous classes were conducted, one by Ross A. Hadley on missions; one by Ancil Ratliff on the rural church, and one by Ralph F. Foster on Christian Endeavor Methods. All were interesting and helpful. All classes then assembled for general discussion, which was led by Ralph Foster.

At 6:00 o'clock the various groups ate lunch on the lawn, and at 7:00 o'clock vespers were conducted by Thomas E. Jones. Mr. Jones also presided at the closing session which followed. Special music was furnished by the Spiceland choir and orchestra. President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, brought an inspirational address, which was a fitting climax to the services of the day.

Emporia, Kansas—On July 27 we had the great privilege of having with us the gospel band of Cottonwood Monthly Meeting. This band is composed mostly of converts from the revival wave which passed through these parts last winter and spring. Thirty-five members were added to Cottonwood meeting. The fresh ringing testimonies of the thirty Friends who came in a body to visit our meeting were inspiring and certainly gave us an uplift. Willard Coppock of Oklahoma, who is now serving the Cottonwood meeting as pastor, is doing a good constructive work and the Lord's blessing is being manifested.

Rufus P. King of North Carolina Yearly Meeting was with us for three services, Sabbath, August 6, and the following day. His messages had the old-time ring and all considered it a great favor to have this dear aged friend with us. His message on the guidance of the Lord was especially timely. We were forcibly impressed that we as a church were losing much of the direct guidance enjoyed by the early Friends. He left to attend the Quarterly Meeting at Haviland and other meetings in Kansas and returned to Emporia September 6 and gave a very interesting and instructive talk on his trip around the world.

George C. Wise, Jr., has accepted the unanimous call from Emporia Monthly Meeting to serve this meeting as pastor another year.

New London, Indiana—Lewis E. Stout was present at New London Quarterly Meeting, held September 2 and 3. He delivered excellent sermons, both on Saturday and Sunday morning.

The missionary meeting on Sunday afternoon was addressed by Rosa Lee, a returned missionary from Palestine. She, dressed in the native costume of the Syrians and her address was very interesting. The attendance was very good throughout the Quarterly Meeting.

NEWS NOTES

Edith F. Sharpless left Haverford, Pa., on August 11, with the expectation of sailing on August 26 to resume her work in Japan after more than a year's furlough.

LeRoy A. Hawks, who has been pastor at Milo, Iowa, has taken pastoral charge of the work at Illinois Grove and Fairview, Iowa. His new address is R. F. D., New Providence, Iowa.

Josiah Pennington, who for the past ten years has served as pastor of the Third Friends Church at Indianapolis, the meeting being located in Haughville, has resigned from the pastorate.

Mary N. Cox of Sheridan, Indiana, gave an address on temperance to a good audience in the Friends' church at Ridgefarm recently. Her address was listened to attentively and very much appreciated.

Friends in and about Philadelphia have been conducting automobile tours through the surrounding country in behalf of peace. The parties are said to have met with astonishing interest and attention.

James Swander, who has so faithfully and acceptably filled the place as pastor at Ridgefarm for the past two years has tendered his resignation and accepted a call to the pastorate at Coloma, Indiana.

The Christian Endeavor of the Friends church at Ridgefarm, Illinois, was reorganized recently. The Society is taking on new life and the interest and plans for progressive work are very encouraging. We feel that the Jones-Reagan Rally was a great boost to our Society.

HUMANITARIAN ACTIVITIES

Recommendations that a fund of more than $3,000,000 for the treatment of cancerous, nervous and disabling ailments be given to the University of Pennsylvania Hospital has been made by Dr. Winford H. Smith, superintendent of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, who was selected by the trustees of the fund, jointly the incorporated trustees of the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and a body organized as the board of managers of the Jeanes Hospital, to come to Philadelphia and make a survey of its hospitals and medical work and give them his opinion as to where the fortune would work the greatest benefit. The fund is the estate and its increment willed for the purpose by Anna J. Jeanes, a noted Friend philanthropist, who died in 1908.—Science.

THREE WEEKS SURVEY OF YOUNG FRIENDS IN NORTH- WEST

The people are delighted to know. There is an undefinable spirit of optimism, good will and progress. The spirit of adventure that brought many of these people to the woods of the Northwest has not left them.

They still plan and do big things. The word "action" seems to sum up the spirit of the place better than any other. People are proud of their country but they realize that it is new, and they are leaving few stones unturned to make it one of the best places in which to live in the United States. There is not a marked war spirit and the preparedness issue is not very popular. This is witnessed by the fact that in one city where plans were made for sixty thousand to march in a parade but thirteen thousand actually took part, and I was told on good authority that many of these were employees who had to do so because their bosses had commanded it. These people are too much interested in developing their country to grow enthusiastic over a war of aggression. The saloon has been banished from Washington and Oregon and the people are highly pleased with the result. In the erection of schools and churches often great financial sacrifice is made but no one complains. He seems to take a pride in having a share in bringing the best to the Northwest. Yet with the good qualities of this people I was informed that there are some drawbacks. The eager desire to possess has caused many people who pose as good members of the church to resort to some very questionable means of making money.

There are many foreigners in the cities who have come from non-Christian lands. They have brought their religious beliefs with them and have taught them to the less stable Americans. This makes for social as well as religious unrest.

The church directly or indirectly is influenced by the above named conditions. To guard itself against the inroads of foreign "isms" the greed of its constituents, the indifference and scepticism of tourists, and the general unsettled condition of many permanent residents the church has erected a very rigid standard of righteousness. Out of the maelstrom in which it finds itself it exalts its standard and invites all to follow. Because there are so many different types of belief it says we had better take none of the new. Back to the "Old Time Religion" and "Beware of Modern Movements in the church" is the common cry. They say we have tested and tried the religion of our fathers and we know it will suffice. Considerable attention is therefore given to fighting heresy, preaching "Old Time Theology," warning against amusements and closely defining things that are worldly. While on the whole this seems to be a good thing because it gives something to which to tie, still one finds scores and hundreds of young people who are untouched by this appeal. Some young people feel that the church is either their enemy or that it is "Old Fogey." Several of them have practically stopped going to church, and others take delight in shocking their parents and the Elders. Some church members are inclined to raise their hands in holy horror at the worldliness of young people while they wait with pious longing for the second coming of Christ which will set all things right. One Friend told me that he had no other idea than that Satan was having his reign now and that Christ was soon coming to put him in chains. Of course none of us know but that this dear Friend has analyzed the situation correctly, but the facts are that it is very difficult to make young people in this section believe this. They want a religion of action, of daring, of thought and present day reality.

BIBLE SCHOOL

October 1.

Subject—A Plot That Failed.

Lesson—Acts 23.

Golden Text—"They shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee". Jeremiah 1:19.

The opening section of this lesson presents some incidents in Paul's life which are hard to explain, and many commentators pass them by with scant notice. It is hard to justify him in all that he is reported to have said and done, perhaps we need not attempt it. He censured Peter for his attitude toward Christian Gentile practices while in Antioch. Possibly Paul's attitude toward the High Priest and the council was not above criticism. He was not infallible. He was placed in a most trying position. He was forced to think and act quickly and it is quite possible that he erred in judgment. We ought to note that he was at least courteous enough to apologize when reminded of his offense against the High Priest.

The special comfort Paul soon received is well worth our notice. Jesus promised his disciples that he would be with them even unto the end and one of the striking phases of the experience of the great Christian leaders about whom we read is the fulfillment of this assurance. Again and again mention is made of the presence and sustaining power of God in times of affliction or trial. Among our own denominational leaders—men like Fox and Woolman repeatedly refer to these consolations and assurances. The leaders are not alone in this matter. Speak with any sainted Christian in your community and learn of God's willingness to support his followers.

The cruel zeal of the Jews is a marvel to many Christians of today. It seems impossible to think of those men—the members of the council and the band sworn to kill Paul—as religious men. Certainly their religion differed from ours, but there is little doubt but that they were as religious as the accepted standards of the time required. Paul wrote, "as touching zeal persecuting the church". The Roman Catholic Inquisition, Calvin's consent to the death sentence, religious persecutions in England and early New England's bloody religious activity in which Friends and Baptists lost their lives, all show that unbalanced religious zeal may lead to wild deeds of barbarism. Let Friends ever bear in mind that fundamental cornerstone of Quakerism, freedom of conscience and the right of the individual to worship his God as he sees fit.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

October 1.

Topic—"The Consecration of School Life." Prov. 4:1-13. (Consecration.)

John Wesley had a scholar's hate of ignorance and he toiled with almost amusing diligence to educate his helpers. He insisted that they should be readers. He writes to one: "Your talent in preaching does not increase. It is just the same as it was seven years ago. It is lively, but not deep. There is little variety; there is no compass of thought. Reading only can supply this, with daily meditation and daily prayer. You wrong yourself greatly by omitting this. You can never be a deep preacher without it, any more than a thorough Christian."

A good education will make you more valuable to the Christian world, but should this for you be limited, give God the best that you have. Study His Word; and by prayer and meditation, by observation and reading, you can improve and enlarge, and your service, if your best, and if willingly and cheerfully done, will under God's Hand bring in a rich and bountiful harvest. This is a consecration of your education, whether you have much, or little.

How can we live for Christ in school?

How can we win our schoolmates to Christ?

How can we start private prayer circles?

Does my school life testify for Christ?

What place should the Bible have in the school?

Does my life testify for Jesus Christ on the playground as well as in the prayer meeting? These are some questions suggestive for short talks.

C. E. RALLY AT RIDGEFARM, ILLINOIS

One of the most successful rallies that has been held in Vermillion Quarterly Meeting occurred at Ridgefarm July 29, under the auspices of the C. E. Union. In spite of the hot weather the house was well filled. The Societies of the Quarterly Meeting were well represented except one. Both old and young showed much interest. Thomas E. Jones of the Young Friends' Board spoke on "Why I am a Christian." Chester Reagan, Y. M. Superintendent of C. E., followed in a short talk on C. E. methods and true pledge keeping. After this meeting a conference with the Endeavors was held which was indeed very helpful and inspiring. We feel that we indeed were very fortunate to be able to secure the services of Mr. Jones again in our Quarter and we realize their efforts are bringing forth good fruit.

The Thinker

Back of the beating hammer
By which the steel is wrought,
Back of the workshop's clamor
The seeker may find the Thought,
The thought that is ever Master
Of iron and steam and steel,
That rises above the disaster
And tramples it under heel.

The drudge may fret and tinker
Or labor with lusty blows,
But back of him stands the Thinker,
The cleared-eyed man who knows;
For into each plow or saber,
Each piece and part and whole,
Must go the brains of labor,
Which gives the work a soul.

Back of the motor's humming,
Back of the bells that sing,
Back of the hammer's drumming,
Back of the cranes that swing,
There is the Eye which scans them,
Watching through stress and strain,
There is the Mind which plans them—
Back of the Brawn, the Brain.

Might of the roaring boiler,
Force of the engine's thrust,
Strength of the sweating toiler,
Greatly in these we trust,
But back of them stands the schemer,
The Thinker who drives things through,
Back of the job—the Dreamer
Who's making the dream come true.
—Berton Braley in American Machinist.

FROM THE MANAGER'S OFFICE

The offer of The American Friend to new subscribers for the balance of this year and all next year for $1.50 is attracting a number of new subscribers. Pastors and others should make announcement of this offer at once.

While addressing an audience of one-hundred and fifty persons recently, a Friend asked all those who were subscribers to The American Friend to raise their hands. Only two persons responded and there were only about a half dozen present who had ever seen a copy. This was in a Yearly Meeting which belongs to the Five Years Meeting. We cannot help but wonder what the pastor of that meeting is doing that such a situation as this could exist. We would like to ask all pastors to make announcement next Sunday that new subscribers can get the paper until January 1, 1918 for $1. 50.

Patronize The American Friend book department. Announcements of books will be made in the advertising columns from time to time.

CORRESPONDENCE

London, August 21st, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

A few weeks ago the writer called attention to the destitution among refugees in Russia—those millions of men, women and children, who have fled from the clash of contending armies, leaving wide areas of devastated country behind them, and who are now suffering for want of the barest necessities of life, food, shelter, clothing, medical care, medicines, nursing are among their crying needs.

The Society of Friends (London Yearly Meeting) has since my last letter, sent a number of its members to Russia, and is about sending others. The Russian and English Governments are facilitating the operation of these brethren. The Friends represent some of the best professional skill and business life of England. They do not charge for their service—it is a labor of love. Among them are young graduates of English Universities, imbued with a love for Christ and for their fellow men. They face present perils of travel, disease and possible death, that they mitigate sorrows of the humble, helpless non-combatants who are the victims of cruel war. The personal touch of Christian sympathy and advice is one of the most valuable parts of their work, and may be quite as important as the urgently required financial assistance. These English Quakers cannot conscientiously destroy human life, but they will endure much stress and hardship in order to save it.

In France alone, 108 of the Committees workers have been established in thirteen centers in the mined districts of the Marne and the Meuse. Maternity and general hospitals have provided an inestimable boon in districts where doctors and nurses have been commandeered for military service. In seventy-five towns and villages thousands of destitute have been relieved with food and clothing. Many huts have been built by the Committees workers. Open-air classes have been organized for the children and work-rooms for women. Farmers have been supplied with seeds, live stock, tools and implements.

The Committee's receipts up to almost two months ago were £60,000 and the monthly expenditures were about £4,000. The sufferings to be relieved in Russia, during the approaching Autumn and Winter are unthinkable.

The past work of this War Victims Relief Committee in Belgium, France and Holland has been very great. Its successful and economical administration of monies committed to its care has induced many benevolent people to contribute, who otherwise would feel cautious about doing so. The donors know that the money is well spent. The cost of the distribution of funds placed at the disposal of the Committee, has only been about 4 pence to the pound, or eight cents out of every five dollars. Such a business-like and careful administration of relief funds, to such an extent, is probably unprecedented.

The material blessings enjoyed by America may tend to veil our eyes from a view of the homeless and sorrowing millions of Europe. Will not those who read this appeal make haste to answer it?

Contributions can be forwarded to C. Walter Borton, in care of The Provident Life & Trust Company, 409 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., who will forward them to the Friends War Victims Relief Committee in London.

Christianity Means Life

The reasons for the indifference of the masses to the claims of the gospel is a subject of frequent inquiry in the councils of the church. Is it not that Christianity the world over is more often interpreted in terms of theology or in terms of living (action) than in terms of life? The germ must exist as an element of life before it can grow. The child must exist as a living organism before its life can find expression in action. The building must exist as a living concept in the mind of the architect before it takes form in brick or stone or marble.

Christianity is not service, primarily and fundamentally, but Christianity is a life that finds expression in service. Men are not saved by good works, but being saved through the grace of God, good works are the visible exponents of that which they are. We walk with God, not by virtue of the manner in which we live, but by virtue of the character of the life which we possess. There must be purity and righteousness of soul, purity and righteousness in life, before there can be purity and righteousness in living. We judge men to be sure by their fruits, but it is the nature of the tree and the quality of the soil that fixes the quality of the fruit. What men are determines the character of what they do, and the world needs to be constantly learning that a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit.

Christianity, as taught by Jesus, is not a question of definitions. Theology is not an element in salvation. We may know how to get salvation and yet miss it. What salvation is, or the way to get it is not the first concern of the gospel, but its actual experience in life, determining the quality and nature of the soul, that is its first concern. Correct theology is helpful, just as all definitions are helpful, as sign posts to point the way, but the sign post can never serve as a substitute for the way. George Fox found much comfort in reading the scriptures and learning about God and his Son, but it was only when Christ was revealed to him as the life and light of his own life that he found genuine and satisfying rest of soul.

Men may philosophize about Jesus and accept him at his true valuation as the Son of God, sent to redeem humanity from its sin, and yet have no consciousness of the work of God's grace in cleansing their lives, just as men may accept as a mental act all the doctrines about Christ and yet miss him as the vital controlling element in their daily experiences. We may believe that the Holy Spirit has been sent into the world to lead the followers of Christ into all truth, and yet have no conscious realization of his leadership in our own lives. The church has talked so long in terms of definitions and in terms of deportment that the world has lost sight of the commanding call to the experience of a new creation. The church needs mightily in this age to be putting first things first.

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," but to love is only the expression of that purity of heart that cannot know the defilement of suspicion and ill will and hatred. It is time that the church were stressing the real meaning of the gospel which is the promise of that purity of life that is the sure guarantee of purity in action in the individual and in the social order of the world. The church must be able to exemplify the gospel in terms of life, before the world will have faith in its potentiality, manifested in terms of conduct.

An exchange well says: There are those who drink at fountains which quench not the thirst, and bow at shrines where suppliants cry in vain." Apparently the days of penance are not yet over, for upon every hand men are seeking to find favor with God through good works, through long prayers, through the giving of alms, through doctrinal pronouncements, through liberal theologies, through programmed occasions of worship, through regular church attendance, through devotion to church traditions, through plainness of speech and apparel, through faith in dogmas, through church discipline, through social reforms, through materialistic philosophies. But these are manifestations of life and can never serve as a substitute for it.

"He that hath the Son hath the life". That is the secret of finding reconciliation with God. Jesus must be more to the Christian than the Christ of history, more than a memory, more than an ideal. Through faith he must become the life of our life, an actual living, abiding, purifying Presence, who saves initially and who saves continually. As Dr. Adam so well said at the Men's Conference: "I do not want a blessing; I want the Blesser, and when I have the Blesser, I have the blessing." The battlefield of the world is first of all in the hearts of men. If they win out there over evil and receive Jesus Christ as the center of their lives, the contests of the world will be easier and surer. What we are will determine the character of what we do, and the church must become a leader in enforcing this philosophy upon the world.

The Message of Quakerism

(From the Philadelphia Friend)

Note.—The authorship of this paper is not known to the Editors. It seems a timely message and we gladly print it at the suggestion of our friend Samuel Emlen.—Eds.

There comes a time in our human lives when, in some measure, we begin to feel the solemn responsibility of life; and the desire stirs within us to put away childish things, to take a place in all seriousness amid the workers in the world, to do something for the betterment of our fellow-men. Whether this condition is first experienced in early years or not until later, it marks a critical stage in the earthly pilgrimage; and upon reaching it, it is of vital importance where we look for counsel—whether the attention is directed outwardly to man for leading and direction, or inwardly to a greater than man; for there is needed now, both for our own welfare and that of those whom we we would benefit the teaching of One, who knowing the secrets of every heart, can speak with certainty to its needs. Is such instruction within the ability of man to give? Is there not, indeed, great danger lest men, through ignorance of true condition of the seeking soul, or perhaps from a well-meant zeal to utilize a willing hand, may hurry it unconsciously into activities before its time and beyond its strength, so stunting its growth? An eagerness to work for the spread of righteousness in the earth is a good motive, but it may well be questioned if it is ever in itself a sufficient qualification for labor. "I began to see," says John Churchman, humiliated because of some overzealousness of his youth, "there was a difference between seeing what was to be done, and being bidden to do the thing shown, besides this I had to consider there [is] a time to bud, a time to blossom, a time for fruit to set and appear, and a time for it to ripen."

The earth is not man's but the Lord's. To the fields white unto harvest, it is the Lord's prerogative to send the needed laborers. Grave is the responsibility, therefore, alike of them who, being called, hold back, and of them who, taking the need or some earthly motive for a call, go unbidden of the Lord of the harvest. He it is that ruleth in the kingdom of men; He alone is Lord; beside Him there is no Saviour. To man there would seem to be the choice of but one of two positions as regards Him. Either he must resign all to the disposition of his Lord, that whatsoever he does may be in harmony with the Divine will, and himself a willing instrument in the Divine hand, or failing that, he becomes, be following the leadings of his own imagination (however high his motive), an undisciplined and self-willed workman, wasting his own energies and by his waywardness impeding the labors of others.

"We are nothing, Christ is all," has ever been a watchword with the devoted followers of the Lamb of God. But this sense of nothingness is not a thing to be assumed at will, it is attained only by a daily death—by a patient submission to that thorough purging of the heart, that burning up of the chaff with unquenchable fire, which marks the essential baptism of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. "Who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth? for He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap, and He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver." In those who wait for and give themselves up to this heavenly work, mortality becomes "swallowed up of life," and Christ the Lord becomes all in all. Not in name merely, but in truth, He is their life, their righteousness. Abiding in Him, as branches in the Vine; they wait to know His Will declared in them, and what they do is done in that power fresh from the spring of His Divine life. Their works, then, are not their own, but His wrought through them. Such may say with Paul, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me."

Certain of the people coming unto our Saviour, inquired of Him, "What shall we do, that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them. This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom he hath sent." Now a true belief in Him implies such a trust in Him, such a confidence in His authority, that our wills are given up to Him, our lives are surrendered into His keeping, our supreme care is to do His bidding. "Every such believer," says William Penn, "becomes an Enoch translated, that is, changed from the fashion of this world, the earthly image, the corrupt nature, and is renewed in the likeness of the Son of God." Such a faith (and nothing short of it is a saving faith) is the gift of God, its elements are by the revelation of the Father. "Who say ye that I (the Son of Man) am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jonah, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." "No man can come unto me," again He declares, "except the Father which hath sent me, draw him." "Though I read the Scriptures that spake of Christ and of God," says George Fox, "I knew Him not by revelation, as He who hath the key did open, and as the Father of life drew me to His Son by His Spirit."

There is abroad today in more than one branch of this scattered Society, a spirit of inquiry as to the manner in which the spiritual life of its members may best be stirred up, developed and directed. In its fundamental aspect, is there not, after all, but one way? Who is He that hath said, "I am the resurrection and the life," "I am the bread of life," "I am the way, the truth and the life," "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life," "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." To know Him—there is the essential thing, it is something infinitely more than to know of Him—than to be thinking of Him to-day and be off in the world tomorrow. There is need for each of us of that same process of humiliation, that same fiery trial, that Job was obliged to submit to before he realized his condition and in contrition of spirit could say, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes." Not by works first, but by submission, not by activity first, but by passivity, not by the encouragement of the first nature, but by its death, that being dead we may be made alive in Christ—is not this the Gospel order? Is the work such as may be accomplished in a day or that one man may do for another?

Here, it seems to the writer, lay the strength of primitive Quakerism, and here lies the possibility of the continuance of Quakerism to-day—namely, a practical faith in the headship of Christ over His Church, so great that no earthly consideration, no love of ease or false peace, no ridicule of men, can shake it. He the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, the author of our faith and its finisher, must be the constant spring of our activities, or we fall away into the world. How like a trumpet call is the first Quaker's declaration of his mission: "When the Lord God and His Son Jesus Christ sent me forth into the world to preach his everlasting Gospel and Kingdom, I was glad that I was commanded to turn people to that inward light, spirit and grace, by which all might know their salvation and way to God, even that Divine Spirit which would lead them into all truth, and which I infallibly knew would never deceive any, but with and by this Divine power and spirit of God and the light of Jesus, I was to bring people off from all their own ways to Christ, the new and living way, from their churches which men had made and gathered, to the Church in God, the general assembly written in heaven which Christ is the head of, and off from the world's teachers made by men, to learn of Christ, who is the way, the truth and the life, of Whom the Father said, 'This is my beloved Son, hear ye Him,' and off from all the world's worships, to know the Spirit of Truth in the inward parts and to be led thereby, that in it they might worship the Father of Spirits . . . ; which spirit they that worshipped not in, knew not what they worshipped. I was to bring people off from all the world's religions, which are vain; that they might know the pure religion, might visit the fatherless, the widows and the strangers, and keep themselves from the spots of the world; then there would not be so many beggars, the sight of whom often grieved my heart, as it denoted so much hard heartedness amongst those that professed the name of Christ. I was to bring them off from all the world's fellowships, prayings and singings, which stood in forms without power, that their fellowship might be in the Holy Ghost, the eternal Spirit of God; that they might pray in the Holy Ghost; sing in the Spirit, and with the grace that comes by Jesus; making melody in the their hearts to the Lord, who hath sent His beloved Son to be their Saviour, caused his heavenly sun to shine upon all the world, and through them all; and His heavenly rain to fall upon the just and the unjust (as His outward rain doth fall and His outward sun doth shine on all), which is God's unspeakable love to all."

Have conditions so changed that the message of Quakerism should be another thing to-day than that which it was in that early time? Surely not. The trials of the human soul are not essentially different from one age to another; and the heart is still the seat of that holy warfare which is accomplished with weapons that are not carnal. The Truth, in its very nature, is ever the same, however men's appreciation of it may ebb and flow; and the Gospel of Christ is an everlasting Gospel—forever remaining to be "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

HOW SOME WREST THE SCRIPTURES

By EDWIN I. NILES

What did our Lord mean when he said that "the kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal?" Did he mean to convey the idea as some expositors affirm that he did, that he was comparing the kingdom of heaven to three measures of meal, and the leaven to evil or iniquity, which would be introduced into the kingdom, and silently work there until general apostasy should be the final result? It is said that leaven in the scriptures is always a type of evil. But this may not be so. It certainly is not so if our Lord did not so use the word in this instance.

Leaven was excluded from the typical ceremonies of the Old Testament with but one exception. That one exception, however, might have suggested the idea of caution when such statements have been made as the one above alluded to. But would the mere fact of its exclusion from the Mosaic offerings and ceremonies give to it the significance of evil? I think not. There were some things like unleaven bread which were set aside for sacred purposes, but this can in no wise give the significance of evil to such things as were not so used. One-tenth of Israel's income was set aside in this way, but this did not attach the idea of evil to the other nine-tenths. One day out of seven was made sacred, but this did not make the other six days to be days of evil. Nor did the selection of "a lamb of the first year," make a lamb of the second a thing or a type of evil. Nor are we to think of Israel as living fifty weeks during the year on that which was a type or an emblem of evil, and only eight days on that which was emblematic of good. If so it certainly was a strange way to lift their ideals in regard to morals.

By the statement which I am considering the idea is conveyed, and it is assumed that if a thing is used several times in the Scriptures, figuratively to express the same class of ideas, that its use by the sacred writers must therefore become uniform. But this is mere assumption. There are but few things of which we can think, which are so essentially suggestive of evil that they may not be used figuratively to express some idea of that which is good. The sword, the soldier and the pugilist are used by St. Paul to convey ideas of good. "Take the sword of the Spirit", "be a good soldier of Jesus Christ", and "So fight I, not as one that beateth the air" are no exceptions to such use of figurative language.

The eagle was among the number of unclean fowls, yet it is said, "They shall mount up with wings as eagles." The serpent is perhaps the most detestable thing in nature, but the Master said, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves." But now lest some sophist should challenge the force of what I am saying by asserting that the language used in connection with the eagle and the serpent is not parallel with the language used in connection with the leaven, I will pause to say that that is making a distinction where there is no difference. They shall mount up with wings as, or like eagles. Be ye wise as, or like serpents. The kingdom of heaven is like, or as leaven in its workings. But to show that there is no difference in the meaning of these words as here used I will mention the fact that Mark in recording some of the parables did in two instances use os as, instead of omoia like. In chapter four, verse thirty-one he said "it is (os), as a grain of mustard seed."

Again it is quite common for the sacred writers to use a thing figuratively to express an idea at one time the very opposite of what it is used to express at another time. Jesus Christ is spoken of as "the lion of the tribe of Judah", while we also read that your adversary the devil goeth about as a roaring lion."

While the foregoing will show the fallacy of basing a scriptural interpretation upon such a principle as I have been considering, it is to the text and the context that we must look to ascertain the meaning of this particular passage. The interpretation which I am considering has made Christ to say the very opposite of what he did say. It represents Christ as saying that the kingdom of heaven is like unto three measures of meal. This is turning what he said inside out, or upside down, or wrong end to. He did not say that the kingdom of heaven is like unto three measures of meal. He said, the kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven. Now if this method of interchanging words in this way is a correct method, it will apply without any incongruity of thought to the three kindred parables. Christ not only said that "the kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven," but he also said, "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a grain of mustard seed", "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net" and "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a treasure." Now let us apply this method of interchanging words, which has been applied to the parable of the leaven, and see if there is not a manifest incongruity of thought as the result. And so we will say that the kingdom of heaven is not like unto a grain of mustard seed, but like unto the ground in which the mustard seed, which is emblematic of evil, was planted. Again the kingdom of heaven is not like unto a net, but like unto the sea into which a principle of evil was cast. And still again the kingdom of heaven is not like unto a treasure, but like unto a field in which a treasure, an emblem of evil was hid.

Now if Christ was as incompetent to use language as this represents him to be, and if this interpretation is without any incongruity of thought, the "net" like the "leaven" being emblematic of evil, then I will only pause to ask one question, what about the fish which by the net "they drew upon the beach, and sat down and gathered the good into vessels, but the bad they cast away." No one ever heard of applying such a method of interchanging words to these other parables as that which has been applied to the parable of the leaven.

A text which has been associated with this is St. Paul's statement that "wicked men and seducers shall wax worse and worse." This is oftentimes quoted to prove that the world is constantly growing worse. I am not discussing that question, but what I do say is, that this text has no bearing upon that question at all. All this talk about the world growing worse in connection with this text, is nothing more than what some people have read into the apostle's statement. St. Paul did not say that each succeeding generation would be worse than the one preceding it. He said nothing about a course of generations, nor anything about successive extensive periods of time. What he did say is what we all know to be true, that wicked men in the course of their lives wax worse and worse.

OUR PLACE IN EDUCATION

By NEREUS H. MENDENHALL

I notice under this caption in the Educational Number of the American Friend, a very reasonable and philosophical treatise from the cultured brain of our friend the Dr. L. Lyndon Hobbs, of Guilford College North Carolina. I am glad he has touched upon this question of vital worth. Notwithstanding we may cherish a very exalted opinion of popular education, and appreciate its influence in the social sphere, and the emphasis it places upon the intellectual fiber, yet it fails to reach the purpose of a Christian type of learning in a specific degree.

The public school system has grown and expanded: and in a great measure, its efficiency has earned for itself the plaudits of all the people. But the attributes of Christian education, are not cultivated, emphasised, and taught in the common schools, and state colleges, with a degree of relish and proficiency that measures up to and satisfies the church requirements. An education that is not seasoned by the Christian graces is defective in its character.

I assume this position that denominational schools are a great factor in building up a Christian sentiment in harmony with the fundamental principles of the church body that is officiating in the maintenance of such institutions of learning. Other church organizations place great stress upon their denominational schools, they regard them as a feeder and an equipment station for their church. If this state of affairs prevails with other churches, why should we Friends not receive instruction and fresh inspiration from them, and likewise increase our zeal and enthusiasm in favor of the learning that is seasoned with our peculiar Christian graces. Our denominational schools are not designed exclusively for Friends children, neither do we place them upon the plane of reform schools, but we do insist that there is a moral atmosphere about our methods of instruction and wholesome curriculum that is beneficial to every student regardless of church affiliations but it comes with special greetings to the student body of the Friends membership.

Our Friends schools are a valuable adjunct to our Christian faith, and a superb auxiliary to our church activities. It is well for us to reflect upon the worth of Friends schools as a medium by which true Christian character is built up and strengthened. It is by gradatory advancement that we reach the climax in our Christian, intellectual progress, that is satisfactory to us. The academy is entitled to our first notice and support, its fruitage is a crop of students equipped under the instruction of a Christian faculty, ready to enter upon collegiate activities.

These institutions emphasize the functions of the church and express its influence in the diffusion of Christian knowledge, hence as Friends I think we should foster every means tending to place our educational institutions upon a solid financial basis, with modern equipment, furnished with excellent faculties, under whose instruction the nobility of Christian character is exemplified in all the ramifications of the social fabric.

USING YOUNG PEOPLE

By RILEY HUBBARD

In the realms of American Quakerism there are a vast number of small congregations. Usually the explanation for this is that "the community has changed," or "most of the older Friends have died."

Any denomination, or organization that at present does not have a vital message and potential power of helpfulness to extend immediately to the inhabitants surrounding it had best make its last testament and choose its grave clothes or proceed to minister to an immediate community need.

How often the officials of these small congregations say, "Young people are not interested in the church any more." This is a positive fact and if Quakerism is to maintain a power for righteousness it is time all congregations were setting about to see what the young people in the radius of their church house are interested in.

American young people will never be interested in the church of ten, twenty, forty and eighty years ago except in a parental or historical manner. Is the official personnel of your church and Sunday School the same now as it was ten to forty years ago? If it is, select your epitaph or select new officials and committees. You say these people are still active and good, so are father's old grain cradle and the buggy lines of twenty years ago. You expect that the operators in the wireless station and the crew of the submarine were not yet born forty years ago.

We especially appeal to the helmsmen in the little Quaker meetings to put on their observation lenses and see if the handwriting on the church wall does not say "Use the young people or perish." We elderly Friends feel that inasmuch as church authority was not entrusted to our care when we were young, that surely these children will be ruined if admitted to select meeting and the innermost workings and burdens of the church.

His majesty, the devil, in satanical glee, says, "Friends, keep your children from church secrets free." If those interests are evil the officials of the church should be present at the center of these evil interests and show themselves workmen approved of the Lord. The young people's interests that are not evil should become the interests of the church.

We old friends may rest assured the young people will never come to us, but we can go to them.

How about a preacher?

Who do the young people want?

What do the young people think about modernizing the church and parsonage property?

Who would the young people like to see as department superintendents in your quarterly meeting?

Who of the young people would serve as elders, overseers and on committees?

Now friends you are horror stricken and say "If we use young people this way we will have no

Friends meeting. It will be Methodist, Christian Science or perhaps Baptist and there will be no real Quakerism left. But my dear old Friends, these young people are flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone, if birthrights.

Perhaps the young people in the radius of your church are not of Friends' families, then all the more reason for letting them do as they please rather than force a Quakerish phase upon them. The facts are that each time an undertaker makes a professional call the funeral of denominationalism is again announced. This is God's hand in Christian progress and we elderly Friends can not stay it.

Though we cling to discipline, custom and creed and ostracise all who will not heed, we serve our day and perish like a weed. God moves upon the land and the young people are in His hand. We can help them ere our sun goes down and save the church, be it rural, village or town.

CORRESPONDENCE

Chungking, China, July 26, 1916.

Editor the American Friend:—

Late last evening as I was reading aloud from a magazine which had just arrived we both heard a sound which we supposed was a shot, but we paid no more attention to it. About 10:30, after we had retired, we were aroused by two explosions, followed shortly by many others. The most probable explanation seemed to be that the soldiers in the city had quarreled with other factions and had begun to fight. I dressed and went to the other side of the hill from which I could get a splendid view of the city about two miles distant. Two points of light somewhere near the Chu Chi Men (city gate) seemed at first to indicate fires, but as I could see no leaping flames I concluded they might possibly be torch lighted areas. From one of these repeated flashes of fire were emitted in quick succession, each followed in eight or ten seconds by a dull roar when the sound reached me. A fusillade of shots as of small arms ammunition in machine guns now began and continued for a considerable time, while the explosion of the heavy ammunition became more frequent. Finally I returned and we tried to get a little sleep, but we were soon aroused by our servants and the students of the school who said that the city had caught fire.

As sleep seemed out of the question we both dressed and went out to watch. One of the luminous points seemed to have disappeared, but the other was still belching fire and smoky gases, the reports of the explosions being very loud. Some little distance from this point a fire had developed, the flames of which were leaping skyward and illuminating a pillar of smoke.

About twenty of the students of the school had come to the top of the hill to watch the progress of events, so I left Mrs. Simkin in their care and went down the hill to Dr. Freeman's bungalow.

While we were discussing the situation two other foreigners from the second range appeared. By this time (about 12:15) the popping of the small arms ammunition had largely ceased, and the heavy explosions were becoming less frequent. We finally decided that it was not a fight as we had at first supposed, but that it was probably the burning of an ammunition depot. This explanation relieved the nervous strain for us all, and about one o'clock we went to rest again.

Today we learned that this later explanation was correct. About a thousand soldiers have been coming in today from Kweichow, and room had to be made for their accommodation in one of the large yamens in the city. Whether the ammunition was accidentally set afire as it was being moved or whether it was done purposely to make room for the soldiers is not clear from our incomplete information, but at any rate we are very thankful, if our slumbers must be disturbed, that it should be by such cannonade instead of by a real battle with its resulting chaos. As it was, we learn that four men lost their lives by the explosions. We cannot learn whether the fire referred to was a result of the explosions or whether it had no connection with them. It was extinguished after it had burned two residences.

Thus far Chungking has been spared either a battle or looting, and if the large numbers of Northern soldiers who are preparing to leave for down river can be got away in safety the prospects will be greatly improved for peace in the city and province. In China as in other parts of the world it is the soldiery who are the greatest menace to the well being of society.

THE CLOCK'S HANDS

"Come, hurry up," said the second-hand of a clock to the minute-hand. "You'll never get around in time if you don't. See how fast I am going," continued the fussy little monitor, as it fretted round on its pivot.

"Come, hurry up," said the minute-hand to the hour-hand, utterly oblivious of being addressed by the second-hand. If you don't be quick you'll never be in at the stroke of one."

"Well, that's just what our young friend there has been saying to you."

At this point the clock pealed forth the hour as the hour-hand continued:

"You see we're in time—not one of us behind. You take my advice—do your own work in your own way, and leave others alone.

Moral.—Mind your own business.

You reap what you sow—not something else, but that. An act of love makes the soul more loving. A deed of humbleness deepens humbleness. The thing reaped is the very thing sown, multiplied a hundredfold. You have sown the seed of life, you reap life everlasting.—F. W. Robertson.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE

A FABLE

"Put the young horse in plow," said the farmer, and very much pleased he was to be in a team with Dobbin and the gray mare. It was a long field, and gaily he walked across it, his nose upon Dobbin's haunches, having hard work to keep at so slow a pace.

"Where are we going now?" he said, when he got to the top. "This is very pleasant."

"Back again," said Dobbin.

"What for?" asked the young horse, rather surprised.

But Dobbin had gone to sleep, for he could plow as well asleep as awake.

"What are we going back for?" he asked, turning around to the old gray mare.

"Keep on," said the gray mare, "or we shall never get to the bottom and you'll have the whip at your heels."

"Very odd indeed," said the young horse, who thought he had had enough of it and was not sorry he was coming to the bottom of the field. Great was his astonishment when Dobbin, just opening his eyes, again turned and proceeded at the same pace up the field again.

"How long is this going on?" asked the young horse.

Dobbin just glanced across the field as his eyes closed, and he fell asleep again as he began to calculate how long it would take to plow it.

"How long will this go on?" he asked, turning to the mare.

"Keep up, I tell you," she said, "or you'll have me on your heels."

When the top came and another turn and the bottom and another turn, the poor young horse was in despair; he grew quite dizzy, and was glad, like Dobbin, to shut his eyes, that he might get rid of the sight of the same ground so continuously.

"Well," he said, when the gears were taken off, "if this is your plowing, I hope to have no more of it."

But his hopes were in vain; for many days he plowed, till he got, not reconciled to it, but tired of complaining of the weary monotonous work.

In the hard winter, when comfortably housed in the warm stable, he cried out to Dobbin, as he was eating some delicious oats: "I say, Dobbin, this is better than plowing. Do you remember that field? I hope I shall never have anything to do with that business again. What in the world could be the use of walking up a field just for the sake of walking down again? It is enough to make one laugh to think of it."

"How do you like your oats?" said Dobbin.

"Delicious," said the young horse.

"Then please remember that if there was no plowing there would be no oats."

This little fable is as good for boys and girls as horses. Can you find the moral?—Our Dumb Animals.

"So Like Johnny"

During the hard winter of '77, when thirty thousand unemployed workmen haunted the streets of New York, driven to beggary, or too often theft, a man rang at the door of a house in one of our largest cities, and asked for something to eat. He told a glib story of his discharge from a woolen mill, and said he had a wife starving not far away.

The mistress of the house made it a rule not to give alms that winter, except after personal examination of the case of each applicant. She went into the kitchen and ordered a substantial meal set before the man, who ate ravenously.

He was a young, honest-looking fellow, but there were heavy marks of dissipation on his face. Suddenly he dropped his knife and fork and sat staring at the door.

"Who's that?" he cried. "Johnny! Johnny!"

The lady's little girl, a child of three, had followed her from the nursery, and stood in her white gown in the doorway, her fair curls tumbling over her face. The tramp recovered himself with a hoarse laugh.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "It's your child, of course. I—haven't seen a child for a long time."

But his food seemed to choke him. In a few moments he started up again in agitation and said:

"I am not a workman; I am Jim Floyd, and I was discharged yesterday from the Moyamensing prison, where I have served out a sentence for burglary. I was a decent man once. I left my wife and my old mother up in Pottsville, and—my baby."

While he spoke his eyes were fixed on the child with a terrible hunger in them. "Little one," he said, holding out his hands with a pitiful entreaty, "shake hands with me, won't you? I wouldn't hurt a hair of your head."

The mother's heart gave me a great throb. The man was just out of prison. But the baby (surely God sent it) ran forward smiling, with both hands out. Jim kneeled down beside it, the tears rolling down his cheeks. "It is so like Johnny!" he muttered. "It is so like Johnny!"

"You'll go back to Johnny and your wife and old mother?" said the lady.

He would not promise. "It's too late to make a decent man of me," he said, and presently putting on his old cap, he went out.

Six months later the lady received an ill-spelled letter from Pottsville. "I am at work here," it said. "That day I had planned to join the boys again. But your little girl saved me. I came home instead. It wasn't too late."

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

The fifty-ninth Annual Assembly of Western Yearly Meeting convened September 12 at Plainfield, Ind. After a season of silent devotion, Rufus King of North Carolina led in prayer. Fifty-eight representatives responded to roll call. Credentials were read and a cordial welcome extended to ministers and Friends from other Yearly Meetings. Among the visitors were Truman Kenworthy, S. E. Nicholson, Daisy Douglas Barr, Leannah Hobson, Eveyln Overman, Ross Hadley, Alexander Purdy, all of Indiana Yearly Meeting; Chas. Lescault and wife, Los Angeles, Cal., Charles T. Moore, Elwood Hadley and wife, of Iowa; Addison Reynolds of Mt. Pleasant, Ohio; Albert J. Brown, Mary O. Allen and Harriet N. Purdy, Wilmington, O.; Millie Lawhead Van Wert, O.; Rosa E. Lee, returned missionary from Palestine, and Edgar T. Hole, missionary at home from Africa. Several of the visitors brought greetings from their home meetings, and fields of labor.

The first business of the forenoon session, was the appointment of a number of nominating committees, which reported permanent committees and superintendents of departments, later in the week. The printing committee announced that the Butler Printing Co., of Noblesville, presented 1000 copies of the program to the Yearly Meeting.

A message from Philadelphia Friends concerning the opportunity of Friends to work for peace principles, was read. The reading of the London general and special epistles was followed by an earnest discussion of the vital questions therein mentioned.

The following officers were re-appointed: Willard O. Trueblood, presiding clerk; Flora Mills Morris, recording clerk, Ella M. Barrett and Mary Miars Harold, reading clerks; Frank Stafford, announcing clerk; Arthur Hammond and Wilma Reeve, pages.

The report of the Bertha Ballard Home Association showed a good financial year, with scores of girls cared for in this Home. Albert J. Brown told of his conversation with Wm. Ballard, soon after the death of the latter's little daughter, Bertha Esther Ballard, and how the idea of establishing such a home for girls, as a memorial, was presented at that time, an idea which has developed into the splendid institution of today.

The Board of Administration recommended (1). The use of the Uniform Blanks for all reports the coming year. (2). That the business of the different departments of the Yearly Meeting be so combined, that the evening sessions will be left open for evangelistic services. (3). That all reports be made and business be completed on Saturday afternoon, so the Yearly Meeting may adjourn on Sabbath evening. (4). That the transfer of Church property to the Yearly Meeting be encouraged.

The Meeting adjourned on the forenoon of Sept. 14, in memory of Chas. O. Newlin, of Plainfield, who for thirty years had been at the head of the department of Peace and Literature. The funeral service was held in the audience room of the Yearly Meeting house. On re-assembling, the meeting listened to memorials for Asenath Nixon, aged 95, of Kokomo, Chas. F. Coffin of Chicago, James H. Butler from New London Quarter, and Jesse H. Hadley of Columbus. Loving mention was made of many other Friends who have passed away during the last year. Among these were, John E. Woodard, Bloomington; John W. Moore, Kokomo; Robert W. Furnas, Mary T. Pyle, and Cyrus N. Harold all of Indianapolis, and Benjamin Vestal of Plainfield.

The work of the Social Purity department was reported by Martilla Cox. That of Temperance by Jehu Reagan. An impressive solo was sung by Miss Barrett of Indianapolis. Mrs. Culla Vayhinger gave an inspiring address on the pressing need of more diligent endeavor in both these lines of work. The two departments have been combined and will be known in the future as Prohibition and Purity, with Jehu Reagan superintendent for the coming year.

E. Howard Brown superintendent of Literature and Peace, reported for that work, and introduced Elwood Kemp of Terre Haute, who gave a scholarly plea for peace. The speaker showed what the enormous cost of military equipment would do if used for Christian education and the material development of our country. He urged the United States to take the lead in ushering in a great movement for world-peace.

Evangeline Reams of the Friends Rescue Mission, Columbus, O., presented the work and needs of that institution. Benjamin Anderson and Howard B. Johnson were appointed Yearly Meeting Trustees.

Enos Harvey superintendent of the Evangelist department reported $60,- 000 paid out by the congregation of the Yearly Meeting in the various lines of Church activities, during the last year. An offering of $701.82 was made for this work. In addition to the $1500 appropriated by the finance committee. A new church building has recently been completed in West Indianapolis. Substantial improvements have been made on the buildings at Carmel and Courtland Avenue, Kokomo. Enos Harvey was reappointed superintendent of this department.

The Treasurer and Financial trustees reported the financial condition of the Yearly Meeting. $6,000 remains of the debt made in rebuilding the Yearly Meeting house. The Statistical Secretary's report showed the membership to be 13,000, of which 9,654 are resident members, and 3,346 non-resident. The number of ministers is 147. Four have died during the last year. Two have been recorded, and twenty give evidence of a call to the ministry.

The reading of the summaries on the State of Society, was followed by a very serious discussion of problems of vital interest to the life of the Church. The lackness of home and Church discipline so apparent everywhere was deeply deplored.

Fraternal delegates were appointed. Enos Harvey to the Federated Church Council, at St. Louis. Lydia T. Painter and Albert J. Brown, to the National Convention of the W. C. T. U., in Indianapolis. Lydia Hoath to the State W. C. T. U., and Frank Ashba to the State Charities convention.

In the Missionary session, reports showed increased interest throughout the Yearly Meeting. Forty-three study classes have been held, with 661 members enrolled. Chas. Tebbets of Richmond, Ind., made an effective appeal for greater loyalty to this department of work. Dr. and Mrs. A. A. Bond, who will soon sail for Africa, were introduced to the meeting. Edgar T. Hole gave a graphic account of their work in East Africa.

The following were named as delegates to the Five Years Meeting: George H. Moore, John J. Copeland, Charlotte E. Vickers, Gertrude M. Reinier, Lenora N. Hobbs, Chester Reagan, Willard O. Trueblood, Enos Harvey, O. P. Clark, George Evans, Eliza Armstrong Cox, Florence Rees, William Cleaver, Lizzie Fessmire, Asa Woodard, David B. Johnson.

October 8th was designated as Centennial Day, and its observance recommended to all local meetings.

The report on Bible Schools showed 8,939 members of Bible Schools in the Yearly Meeting. J. Ord Fortner was re-elected superintendent and Chester Reagan superintendent of Christian Endeavor.

The annual report of Earlham College was presented by President Robert L. Kelly and the Board of Trustees on Saturday afternoon. The report showed that during the past year there was an enrollment of 401 students who came from sixteen states and three foreign countries. Seventeen religious denominations were represented. The productive funds of the College were increased during the year in cash or its equivalent by $80,000. It was announced that Alexander C. Purdy has entered upon his duties as head of the Department of Biblical Literature and college pastor. During the year a series of meetings resulted in definite decisions for Christ on the part of about 150 students.

The session on Saturday evening was devoted to the interests of the Christian Endeavor Union and the work of the young people. This meeting was presided over by the superintendent, Chester Reagan. Professor Alexander C. Purdy, of the Biblical Department of Earlham College, was the speaker of the evening and gave an inspiring address. A large number of young people were present from over the Yearly Meeting.

The meeting on Sunday was not quite so large as last year. Those who preached on that day either in the house or at points on the grounds were Albert J. Brown, Charles Lescault, Robert L. Kelly, Robert E. Pretlow, W. O. Trueblood, Millie Lawhead, Leannah Hobson and Nettie Springer. The singing for the day was in charge of Fred Snow, G. W. Milhous, Lawrence Samms and Mildred Barrett.

Some new features which added to the pleasure of Yearly Meeting week:

1. The enthusiastic song services, led by Fred Snow, of Kokomo.

2. The social intercourse in the dining room and rest rooms in the basement, made possible by the courtesy of the women of Plainfield local meeting.

3. The additional time devoted to evangelistic services. The sunrise prayer meetings, the eight o'clock meetings and every evening given over to preaching services. Charles Lescault, of California, and many others brought most helpful messages.

4. There was a general satisfaction that the movement to care for aged ministers was finally inaugurated, and the recommendations made that a fund be created for this purpose and that the interest be so used.

5. The literature tables, under the direction of the Woman's Missionary Union, the literature and peace department, and the American Friends Board, afforded unusual opportunities for the purchase of good books.

6. The Woman's Missionary Union was favored in having Eliza Armstrong Cox give daily lessons on the study-book, "World Missions and World Peace," during the noon hour. Rosa E. Lee, returned missionary from Palestine, held a story hour for children each afternoon at four o'clock. She also gave a most interesting talk Saturday morning before the missionary rally, speaking particularly on the work in Palestine, now interrupted by the European war. The attendance and interest in this rally was most gratifying. Officers for next year are Mary C. Hadley, president foreign mission department, Minnie M. Anderson, vice-president; Sarah J. King, secretary. Of the home mission council, Gertrude M. Reinier is president, Ruth Brown, vice-president, Claribel Harrison, secretary, and Fannie Cox, treasurer. All members present were urged to work for increased interest in the study of both books, "World Missions and World Peace" and the new Home Mission text, "Old Spain in New America." Also to endeavor to double the subscription list to the Missionary Advocate.

LENORA N. HOBBS.

CANADA YEARLY MEETING

The fiftieth annual session of Canada Yearly Meeting was held at Newmarket September 6th to 10th inclusive. William Harris, who has acted as presiding clerk for ten years, was compelled to be absent this year and Joseph P. Rogers was asked to serve in that capacity. Lydia Colquhoun was appointed recording clerk and Leila Starr assistant.

The attendance was the smallest for some years owing to the extreme scarcity of labor. In many cases even the older Friends were prevented from attending because, though they have for some years been at leisure at will, they are now required to work, because of the lack of sufficient help.

As might be expected, the spirit and tone of the Yearly Meeting was distinctly affected by the war. A number of Meetings have suffered loss of workers and financial support because of the unsettled and shifting conditions. In this regard we were especially brought into sympathy with the Meetings in British Columbia where the depression is worst. These things, together with the ever present sense of the tragedy of the war tended to produce a deeply thoughtful, prayerful and seeking attitude. Thoughtful and prayerful because of the evidence of our weak interpretation of the Gospel in the past; seeking because we are sure if we only find the way, we may actually help to bring in the Kingdom of God now.

Everett Scotten, a minister in Ohio Yearly Meeting brought to us several helpful suggestions during the business sessions; gave a very interesting account of the work of Ohio Yearly Meeting in China and India, and had service a number of times in Meetings for Worship.

Dr. W. O. Mendenhall of Earlham College was present, at the invitation of the Yearly Meeting, to give three addresses of a deeply spiritual nature. These were especially impressive. They were based on the text, "The Master is here and calleth for thee." He showed the response of the Pharisee and of the Apostle to this call. Immediately following the close of business sessions the whole Yearly Meeting moved into a room just large enough to hold the group and there we listened to these moving appeals. These addresses, together with Dr. Mendenhall's message to the Young Friends' Meeting on Saturday evening did much to produce a sense of the comradeship of men in Christian service and the partnership of men with God which is the normal relationship. Many Friends, both old and young, spoke of being greatly helped to see their way more clearly through the present maelstrom of religious thinking by these addresses.

It was gratifying to note that Friends had seen to it that our Missionary obligations in Japan are met. Contributions of $2041.71 have been made for that work—an increase of $38.64 over last year. This, together with over $300.00 contributed for the Friends' African Industrial Mission makes an average contribution of $2.57 per member for Canadian Friends. The reports of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society showed that this money had been wisely expended as the work in Japan shows a marked strengthening though our Missionaries in Japan also feel the drag of the war.

The work of the Friends' Ambulance Unit and War Victims Relief Committee of London Yearly Meeting was presented and the local treasurer showed that nearly $1400.00 had been given in aid of this work since last Yearly Meeting.

Pickering College reported a marked growth in the Christian spirit of the institution, due partly to the effective work of the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. Along with all private schools it has suffered a decrease in attendance and the years operations showed an increased deficit. The Committee has been active during the past year in working out a plan for broadening the basis of organization of the College and a proposal was presented to the Yearly Meeting looking to this end. The Yearly Meeting heartily appreciated the efforts of the Committee and approved the principle of the proposed plan. Details are to be worked out for final sanction at next Yearly Meeting.

A special Conference of Young Friends was held just preceding Yearly Meeting to consider "How we may better interpret the message of Quakerism through the Sunday School." Aaron Downs, who has been working through the Summer at Uxbridge, one of our country Meetings, led the discussion and from it, plans were arranged for the circulation among the teachers and officers of the various schools literature which they may use to help them carry our message. An address was given on Thursday night by P. K. Dayfoot, of the Baptist Sunday School Union, on "The Church School, its place and importance."

The Province of Ontario goes "dry" on September 16th of the present year. This is of course cause for rejoicing, but Friends recognized that it laid upon the Christian people of the Province the obligation of seeing that some proper social and recreation centers are supplied to replace those formerly afforded by the open bar. The Temperance Committee was renamed the Temperance and Social Reform Committee and were asked to carefully consider, and try to get Friends to co-operate with all attempts to supply this need.

A splendid summary of the correspondence from the American Yearly Meetings brought before us the principal items of interest in each. We were especially impressed with the London General Epistle, so different from the usual letter. Correspondence was also received from both Arch Street and Race Street Yearly Meetings, Philadelphia. These were deeply appreciated and were replied to.

The coming year closes fifty years of the existence of Canada Yearly Meeting as such. Provision was made for suitable commemoration of this event next year at Yearly Meeting time. This will also close seventy-five years of the operation of Pickering College which was first opened in 1842 as "Friends' Seminary" and it is likely that fitting notice will be taken of this also.

The closing sessions of the Yearly Meeting saw a greatly increased attendance, which was very representative in its character. The Meetings for worship on the closing day formed a fitting close, and all felt inspired to return to a more deeply consecrated year's work than we have yet done.

CHURCHES IN FRANCE

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is sending at the present time about $5,000 each week for the relief of the Protestant Churches in France.

The Council has recently received a report from the Union Nationale, containing the following interesting information.

Of the 413 pastors of the Union Nationale, 157 have been called to military service during the year. The result is that many of the parishes have no pastors and many of the pastors are serving a large number of parishes.

The same is true of the leading church members, a large proportion of whom have been called to military service.

All available superannuated pastors, evangelists, and theological students have been drafted to fill the pastoral vacancies. In other cases, laymen have undertaken to act as pastors. Some of the ministers are ministering to parishes a long distance apart, traveling from one to the other on bicycles and motor cycles.

The editors of religious papers, theological professors, and men of similar positions have also come in to fill these vacancies.

In addition to their own work, some of the French pastors are regularly visiting camps of German prisoners.

The wives of the pastors have given themselves to the work of pastoral visitation, the care of the sick and the old people. When no minister can be present, they sometimes read their husband's sermons to the people.

The report indicates that the old Huguenot spirit is still alive in France.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

The following article appeared in the Alliance Daily Review, and is self-explanatory.

Damascus, O., Aug., 22.—One of the most pleasing events of the season and entirely disconnected from the yearly meeting of Friends, now in session here, was the celebration Tuesday afternoon of the golden wedding anniversary of John and Mrs. Pennington in Friends' yearly meeting house at 3 o'clock p. m. Charles E. Haworth, pastor of Friends' church at Damascus, was master of ceremonies and he was ably assisted by the Edward Mott of Cleveland. This pleasant and unusual affair was a public event and was largely interesting to the great mass of Friends attending the yearly meeting. A formal program had been prepared which was carried out in detail.

The services were pathetic and eulogistic. The life of John Pennington has been one devoted to the cause of Christ and the upbuilding of the church in which he has been eminently successful. As the program proceeded the venerable couple were nearly overcome with emotion, but not to such an extent as to preclude Mr. Pennington from giving expression to his feelings of thankfulness for the goodness of God in permitting the two to live as one in the pathway of life, and for the recognition of loving friends of the event that comes to but few in life. It was a fitting tribute to friends for their remembrance of a day in early life and the 50 milestones passed since then.

At the close of the exercises prayer was offered by J. W. Malone, Cleveland.

The children sent their parents tokens of love in the form of gold.

The "offering" was a liberal subscription to which additions will be made to assist in providing a home for Mr. and Mrs. Pennington.

NOTICE

The annual home-coming and rally day for Chicago Friends will be held at the meeting house, 4413 Indiana Avenue, October 1st. Bible School 9:45 a. m.; meeting for worship 11:00 a. m.; social hour 5:30 p. m.; Christian Endeavor 6:30 p. m. All Friends are urged to make a special effort to attend services on this day.

CHURCH AT WORK

Berkeley, California—The meeting here is enjoying the addition of a number of young people from various other California meetings, who are in attendance at the University of California. The present enrollment at the University is 5600 and each new term brings a number of young Friends from other parts of the state who have been and are a great help and encouragement to the local meeting.

Pasadena, California—Charles S. White has accepted the invitation of Pasadena meeting to remain as pastor for another year. Ill health for a time threatened to make future pastoral work impossible, but there has been so much improvement of late that the prospects now are good for a year of active work. Dillwyn C. White, older son of our pastor, who has been a patient for six weeks at the Pasadena hospital following an emergency operation for appendicitis, has recently been returned to his home, where it is hoped there will be a rapid convalescence.

In recent weeks Laura P. Townsend, William Bertram and Professor Clarence M. Case have acceptably attended Pasadena meeting, bringing gospel messages. Harry R. Keats, a former pastor, was welcomed to the last session of Pasadena Monthly Meeting, being en route from Iowa to his new field of labor at Ramona, California.

The gospel team of Pasadena meeting goes each week to Montebello to conduct a gospel meeting. The same group of workers also holds weekly cottage prayer meetings and conducts a mission meeting in Los Angeles once a month.

Hesper, Kansas—Hesper Quarterly Meeting was held here September 9 and 10 and proved to be a most helpful and spiritual uplift. Our dear friend, Rufus P. King of North Carolina, was with us and did some real good gospel preaching. Our Monthly Meeting at Prairie Center has been without a minister for sometime, but the minister at Hesper, A. J. Bales, will attend the meeting there every Sabbath at 3 o'clock the coming year.

Lane, Kansas—Jacob R. Perry who has been located as pastor of Springgrove meeting, Kansas, for the past three years, feels that his work there is about accomplished and will leave the meeting in November. There is a large meeting house there in good condition for a country place in the midst of a farming district near plenty of timber. Shortage in crops during the past three years has crippled the work considerably. There are quite a number of splendid young Endeavor workers in the meeting. If the Lord seems to lead anyone to this large open field, correspondence should be had with Ray McDougal, Lane, Kansas.

Stella Academy, Okla.—Stella Quarterly Meeting was held here September 1-3. We had the acceptable company of Rufus P. King and Jessie Mills from outside our Yearly Meeting. The Lord blessed them in giving us helpful messages. Hannah Hubbard, of Oklahoma City, was also present and brought us the message on Sabbath night. The subject considered at the doctrinal conference on Friday afternoon was "The duty of the elders to the pastor and the church," and was opened by Arthur Craighead in a very helpful way. The temperance address on Friday night was given by Clyde Likes.

The business session was a very full one, yet all was done with love and harmony. The evening session was given to the interests of the academy. The meeting in December will convene at Ringwood.

Kernersville, N. C.—New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at Kernersville midway between Guilford College and Winston-Salem on September 9, the meeting on Ministry and Oversight being held at ten o'clock on the opening day. Lewis McFarland, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work, spoke on the call to the ministry and said that he had recently met a number of young men at Guilford College who were looking forward to the ministry. He urged that the Quarterly Meeting should see to it that these young people have a chance to serve in preaching while they pursue their college course. At the eleven o'clock service Brother McFarland spoke at length from the first chapter of Numbers. During the noon intermission a good dinner was served.

During the afternoon the routine work of the Quarterly Meeting was transacted. Fred E. Smith, pastor at Greensboro, was given a minute to attend the coming Yearly Meeting at Baltimore. F. S. Blair presented the peace medal contest work and opposed the introduction of military training in the public schools. Alice Paige White of High Point, superintendent of the Bible School department of the Yearly Meeting, gave as the slogan for the work, "All church members in the Sunday School." The meeting will hold its next session, December 9, at Winston-Salem.

Kernersville meeting is only a young Monthly Meeting. Albert Peelle preaches there twice every second Sabbath in each month. The Bible School is kept up all the year around with Shepherd Nelson as superintendent. On Sabbath of Quarterly Meeting at eleven o'clock Lewis McFarland preached again acceptably from John 19:30. At two o'clock F. S. Blair spoke in another church of the town on Sunday School work. At 7:30 Albert Peelle preached in the Friends' meeting house to an audience that filled the house. It should be stated that Dr. L. L. Hobbs presented the claims of The American Friend.

Marlboro, N. C.—Southern Quarterly Meeting was held here the last day of August. Eli Reece of Greensboro spoke briefly from the text, "See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." Thomas E. Jones, General Secretary of Young Friends' Activities, followed and spoke at length from the text, "Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest." The social lunch hour followed with lunch served out-of-doors under the shade of the trees. Reports were presented from the various Monthly Meetings, Marlboro, Back Creek, Holly Spring, Science Hill, Poplar Ridge, Prosperity, Asheboro and Hopewell, the last being a new meeting. The meeting cheerfully accepted an increase in the Yearly Meeting budget. On Sabbath at the Bible School Dr. Thomas Newlin, President of Guilford College, led the School on the lesson for the day. At the eleven o'clock service Dr. Thomas Newlin preached a strong sermon from Isaiah 41. He said that "prosperity will follow the open bible and the uplifted cross." At the same hour Eli Reece preached to a large congregation in the grove. After an abundant luncheon Eli Reece preached in the afternoon in the house from the text, "Follow me and I will make you to become fishers of men."

Kokomo, Indiana—The Friends of Kokomo, especially those of the Union Street congregation, are looking forward with pleasure to the coming of Lewis E. Stout as pastor. His splendid record as former Yearly Meeting Superintendent and as pastor at other places make him one whose services are much sought after. He and his family have taken up their residence in Kokomo and he began his pastoral work immediately following Western Yearly Meeting.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

AFRICA, Maragoli Station—We are not without our difficulties in the work but on the whole I think we have reason to feel encouraged. About twenty schools—station and out-station—are running while the interest in evangelistic phases of the work is, on the whole, good. Many have responded to the call for laborers much needed in this part of the world; others have turned away to follow the old, evil customs; but a substantial number remain and constantly place themselves under our influence.

E. J. REES.

CUBA, Banés—Our Sunday afternoons are crowded to the limit, especially if there are three weddings as there were last Sunday. At 2:00 there is the Cuban Sunday School; at 3:00 Sabbath School in English for the Jamaicans of whom there is a great number; and at 4:00 or usually more nearly 4:30, there is either a preaching service or Christian Endeavor for the Jamaicans, these two services being held alternate Sundays. As this service often holds until nearly 6:00, if there is a wedding afterward, Raymond Holding scarcely has time for supper before the hour for the evening service in Spanish. Services are also held regularly at Embarcadero, the port of Banés. The people in these smaller, outlying places where there are no Catholic churches seem eager to hear the Gospel and this work therefore seems very hopeful. Raymond Holding is especially gifted for this work, too, as he is a strong speaker and an especially effective evangelist and has been used of the Master in winning many to the Way of Life. L. H. MENDENHALL, MEXICO, Matamoros—Our school opened, as announced, on Monday, September 4th; 126 pupils were enrolled the first day and several have come in since so that there are about 145 now. Doubtless more will wish to enter, but we had too many last year and do not want to enroll so many this time. When we were enrolling, we impressed it upon our pupils very strongly that they would be expected to attend Sunday School. There were 122 present today. It remains to be seen whether we can hold them or not. Mr. and Mrs. Tice and Miss Reeder are hoping to go to Victoria soon.

NANCY L. LEE.

As indicated in the paragraph above, Emma Reeder, who spent the past year working in our Cuba Mission, has now returned to Mexico. If possible, she will work during the coming year in the interior; otherwise, her time will be kept fully occupied with educational or evangelistic work at Matamoros or elsewhere along the border.

JAMAICA, Fellowship—There have been some encouraging things in connection with the school recently. The attendance is larger than in other years. Some of the parents have been sending children who are under age, making a sort of nursery in connection with the school. It is remarkable how little trouble these children make. We are glad to have them come for they thus form early habits of attending school and it also gives us an opportunity to gain a hold upon their parents. One of the school boys was very brightly converted recently. He gives clear evidence of a change of heart and an earnest desire to please God. Another bright boy expresses a desire to be a Christian but his parents, who are Hindus, seriously object to his even attending church services.

LORA P. ARMS,

WORK IN THE COLLEGES At Whittier College

We have a Student Volunteer Band with a membership of five, they hold a meeting each college week. The Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. each support a live missionary committee. These two committees together with the Volunteer Band arranged for a very successful week of prayer, the second week in November; among the good speakers were Robert and Mrs. Simkin, missionaries from China and (Miss) Dr. Pretlow, a returned missionary from Cuba. The Y. M. C. A. have a pledge of $50 each year to missions and the Y. W. C. A. sends $75 to the support of Miss Margaret Matthews in Japan.

We have organized mission study classes which are led by outside leaders. The students of Whittier College are exceptionally loyal in their support of the Christian Associations. The missionary departments are very much alive and these interests are looked after as well as those of any other department.

MANY HAVE RESPONDED

As material for this page is being prepared (on September 20th,) the end of our fiscal year is still ten days distant. The secretaries of the Board take very great pleasure in announcing that a great number of letters and gifts from individuals, from meetings and from Yearly Meeting officers have reached the Mission Board office in response to the appeals which have been printed on this page during the past four weeks. It is still too early to know whether it will be possible for the Board of Missions to close the year with all bills paid, but the response which has come from Friends in every section of America has been most encouraging. If evidence were needed to show that Friends are vitally interested in the foreign work of the church, the events of the past few weeks have fully demonstrated it.

A NEW PLAN

An attractive folder bearing the title "Annuity Bonds" has just been issued by the Board of Missions. The secretaries will gladly send copies of the folder to any Friends who may be interested in the plan which it describes. The following paragraph taken from the folder will indicate the nature of this plan. We invite correspondence from all interested Friends.

For the convenience of those who wish to give their money to foreign missions but who find it necessary to keep their funds so invested as to yield an income during their own lifetime, or during the lifetime of wife or husband, the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions has arranged to issue Annuity Bonds bearing interest, payable semi-annually, on donations of $100 or any number of hundreds or thousands of dollars. Under this plan, money paid to the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions is invested in first mortgages on real estate and interest is paid to the donor during his own lifetime or that of his beneficiary at the stated rate of interest. At the death of such donor or beneficiary, the principal sum is taken over into the general funds of the Board to be used in supporting its work on the Mission field.

THE IOWA PAGE

AT SPRINGDALE, IOWA

On Saturday evening, September 17, at the pleasant country home of Lee and Ada Branson Millitt near Springdale about thirty of the live members of Springdale meeting gathered at the invitation of the hostess to hold their monthly business meeting, listen to a most interesting report of the Yearly Meeting and enjoy a watermelon feast. Questions on various lines of Friends' work were brought out and discussed profitably. We plan for more informal meetings of this kind.

AT RICHLAND, IOWA

The Friends here united with other denominations in union services during the months of July and August. These services were held in the park at 6:30 p. m. with the exception of one held in the chautauqua tent which was addressed by the Friends' pastor, Alvin Hoskins.

T. F. Hadley, superintendent of the school here, and his mother of Northbranch, Kansas, have arrived and are planning to spend the year together.

We miss our Sabbath School Superintendent, Willard Jones, who enters Penn this year. We will miss also Orlando Hobson and his three children from Woolson meeting, who leave soon for California to visit his sister.

A letter was read during last Monthly Meeting from Levi Gregory of Oakland, California, giving an interesting account of his work.

Elizabeth Allen, a returned missionary from Jamaica, is to be here and at Woolson on September 24.

On account of failing health Grandma Logan is unable to attend regular service.

Our pastor's mother of Central City, Nebraska, and his sister from Colorado are visiting him here at this time.

PENN COLLEGE

The following letter, from Gilbert Bowles, will be of unusual interest to his many friends and will, it seems, through the columns of the Iowa page, reach the notice of these friends.—

DAVID M. EDWARDS.

The sadness which came with the first news of the Penn College fire and of the death of a college friend was made tender and fragrant as with the sense of a sacrificial offering. From that smoking altar was not the college to come forth into a larger life?

I should like to do something to aid those whose faith has already received back from the flames a new and better Penn. Were I now in the home land, I should wish to give some time in aiding those who are appealing for funds to make good the present loss, to increase the endowment fund and to provide against recurring deficits. As distance and regular duties make this impossible, there remains the privilege of sending my own small offering and of writing a personal appreciation of the college.

Soon twenty-two years will have gone by since as a lone young man I first landed in Oskaloosa and on the old white-mule street car made my way to South Hall. The advance letters of Dr. Pearson, the hand-clasps of Francis and Elmer Jones, then juniors, the greeting of Rosa Lewis and Prof. Hadley in the college office and Prof. Michener's first words in the Greek class, "Daraïou Kai Parisatidos," were the beginning of Penn College and of a new life for me. A new life I have called it, not that the direction of my life was changed, but the years spent at Penn crystallized my earlier purposes and opened for me the doorway to life service.

This personal word is spoken only to give reality to the appeal which I would make to the people of Oskaloosa, to the members of Iowa Yearly Meeting and to all Friends who are able to help Penn College in this important hour of her history.

Except for the people of Oskaloosa and vicinity, the strongest reasons for sacrificing for Penn College are moral and religious. It may be granted that other institutions can meet the general demands for culture and vocational training, though Penn has her own educational mission. But to all who care for the moral and spiritual welfare of Iowa, of America, and of the world, Penn College calls with a voice which cannot be stilled. As I think over the needs of the world, memory calls up pictures of Penn College students and teachers who have been active in promoting some of the important movements of our day. Whether Penn has done more or less than like institutions is not considered; the thing which has weight is that she has her own work to do.

With the Church of Christ deeply involved in that world crime which "sets aside all laws save the laws of war," having but half learned that Christ's "Kingdom is not of this world, else would his servants fight," there is a clear call for the college which bears the name and seeks to embody the spirit of William Penn. There is an urgent call for Penn College to increase her efficiency in training men and women to walk in the footsteps of one of her former presidents, who has lately finished his twenty-five years as executive head of the organization which has held together and trained the peace forces of our country for the past hundred years. Friends' schools and colleges have special qualifications and responsibilities for creating and developing the type of peace workers demanded for this age. The world will be the loser if Penn College is not fitted to do her share in producing such workers and in giving them the spiritual experience of Fox, the logic of Barclay, the statesmanship of Penn, the prophetic vision of Whittier and the sacrificial love of Woolman.

Penn College students of twenty-five years ago have not ceased to be moved by the memory of one of their own number who, on Douglas Island, Alaska, gave his life as a sacrifice in the cause of temperance and prohibition. Defenders of the liquor interests could kill the body but they could not kill the soul and silence the voice which calls to Penn students for sacrificial service in the cause of nationwide and world-wide prohibition. It has given me great joy to see among the names of the leading speakers and organizers of the Intercollegiate Prohibition clubs one of my own college friends. When in Penn debates and oratorical contests he used to emulate James G. Blaine and John J. Ingalls. I did not know that his instincts were leading him into one of the greatest moral conflicts of this or any other age. Neither did I know that another young man from the western cattle plains was preparing for leadership in the temperance force of Kansas. The latest appeal to Penn College for efficient preparation for service in the cause of prohibition was made when the walls of the college building fell upon Robert Williams. Having grown to manhood in the Dakotas, it was not strange that Penn College should have meant to him active participation in prohibition clubs and preparation for service in arousing voters to their responsibilities for the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

From the moral and social, as well as from the religious point of view, the foreign mission enterprise is the greatest movement of the last hundred years. Opportunities are lessening for such miraculous opening of doors as that of Dr. Peter Parker "opening China at the point of the lance," or of Verbeck and Williams entering Japan while the official bulletins held the death penalty over the heads of all Christians; but never were there greater opportunities for the miraculous in transforming individual lives and in bringing the Kingdom of God to the homes and social institutions of the great mission fields whose doors stand wide open. If the call to world evangelism be less spectacular and romantic than it was fifty years ago it is none the less urgent and imperative.

To this great work Penn College definitely set her hand in her early days. The Penn Peru Mission of the early nineties did not become a permanent institution but the vision, the consecration and the purpose of those days has borne much fruit in the lives of H. E. McGrew, John H. Hadley, Charles S. White and others in the widely scattered groups of Friends where they have ministered. Whether it be mission study groups, which at times have included faculty classes studying China, India or Japan; whether it be the college Y. M. C. A. week of prayer coming to its close with the clear unfolding of the missionary purpose in the heart of Sylvester Jones and his further preparation for work under the American Friends' Board in Cuba; whether it be the definite decision of the student body in the college chapel to support one of their number on the foreign field; whether it be the example and the inspiration of President Rosenberger's actual service with the Friends' Mission in Palestine; or whether it be the general missionary spirit which has sent Penn students to Jamaica, Cuba, Mexico, the Philippine Islands, Africa, Japan and China, the history of the past twenty-five years shows that the life of Penn College has been closely bound up with the cause of making Christ known to the unevangelized. With these and many other facts before them it will be difficult for groups of Friends anywhere, and especially for those of Iowa Yearly Meeting, to solemnly read the last command of Christ and to sincerely pray for its realization unless they are at the same time doing all within their power for the maintenance and thorough equipment of Penn College.

I have mentioned some special movements with which Penn College is vitally linked, but I do not forget the urgent call which our day brings to Penn to do its share of fitting men and women to become moral and spiritual leaders in the various callings of life. In this connection I remember that Penn College has given to the world Dr. Woods Hutchinson, one of the great leaders in the educational movement for the preservation of human life and the protection of public health. Aside from the natural ties of home and kindred and the desire to fit myself for better work, the only call which strongly pulls me toward the homeland is my earnest desire to see my own country become in reality what its name indicates—a Christian country. Missionary leaders used to speak of the demand for people in the homeland to "hold the ropes" while the missionaries work. This is a real need. But the deepest loneliness which steals over us is the realization that in the land from which we come yellow journalism is endangering our mission here, that the social evil eats at the vitals of our great cities and that love is crucified in many of the relations of life. The college cannot do all, but I am sure that the spirit which has pervaded Penn from the beginning of its history has been doing much for the realization of the Master's prayer, "Thy will be done on earth"—in America—"as it is in heaven."

One other word of appeal—Penn College ought to be cherished and further equipped because of its vital relation to the future of the Society of Friends. If in relation to group worship and to the impelling conviction as to the inviolability of the law of love in all human relations the Society of Friends ceases to have a distinct mission in the world, my interest in Penn and other Friends' colleges might be transferable to other institutions. But what knowledge I have of the history of the Christian church and of the present condition of the Christian forces of the world holds me to the conviction that the fundamental principles for which the early Friends toiled and suffered are permanent forces in bringing in the Kingdom of God. The news which comes to us of the Young Friends' Movement is a cause for great encouragement. In this, as well as in all of the larger Friends' movements, Penn College has no small opportunity and responsibility. I therefore plead for and with the college to which as a young man I was led.

REPORT ON SECRET ORDER

The committee appointed last year to confer with Mead A. Kelsey in reference to literature on secret orders and distribution of same over the Yearly Meeting (Western,) makes the following report which is satisfactory to the meeting and the same committee is continued to continue the work and report next year.

Report

To the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight to be held 9-15-1916.

"Your committee appointed last year to co-operate with Mead A. Kelsey in reference to distribution of literature on secret societies and other work on that line, reports the following work done:

"Mead A. Kelsey has attended the sessions of three Quarterly Meetings and ten local meetings, giving sermons or addresses on the subject of secrecy. On most of these occasions he has distributed literature on the subject.

"Some addresses on the same subject have been given by the different members of the committee, mostly in connection with their regular pastoral work. Nearly every month some matter on the subject has been published in 'The Friends' Minister.'

"The committee recommends that the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight take steps to continue the work with a view to eventually acquainting every member of the church with the warning of our discipline and the general reasons why secret society membership interferes with the best fellowship with Jesus Christ and limits one's usefulness in the church."

The above minute is taken from the minutes of the meeting on ministry and Oversight held Sixth day, Ninth Month 15, 1916, at 8:00 o'clock a. m. at Plainfield, Indiana.

THE STUDY CLASS

The Study of the Problems of Peace and War.

The importance of the study of the underlying principles and the implications of the Quaker testimony for peace need no emphasis at the present time. The widespread desire to study the relation of Christianity to War is evidenced by the enormous output of books and pamphlets on the subject.

William E. Wilson's "Christ and War," is the best Study Circle textbook treating the general subject from the Quaker point of view.

A small selection from the books and schemes for study and discussion of various aspects of the subject, issued since the outbreak of war, follows. A fuller list can be obtained from the Young Friends' Board.

LOOK OUT FOR YOUNG FRIENDS' DAY!

YOUNG FRIENDS IN COLORADO

At the corner of Te Jon and Fountain Streets in Colorado Springs stands the Friends' Meeting House. This is a modern, well-lighted, wooden structure, painted dark brown. It is literally a temple set upon a hill and can easily be seen as one approaches it from any direction. The auditorium is cool and restful during the hot summer months. The pulpit and seats for the congregation are thoroughly modern. The Sunday School rooms which open out of the main assembly are supplied with modern equipment for the kindergartens and juniors. While the building is an important factor in the success of any meeting, the most important element is the membership itself.

Certainly one cannot too highly praise the spirit and diligence of the Friends at Colorado Springs. While the Meeting is not large, it has the marks of healthy growth. Although a few years ago a spirit of suspicion and disharmony reigned in the meeting, now a unity of spirit and a vision for the community is manifest. One can scarcely keep from feeling this spirit of brotherhood and friendship as soon as he steps into the room.

Although the Christian Endeavor Society has several old people in its ranks as active workers, the young people attend and enter heartily into the meetings. As the meeting continues to grow in spirit and numbers we feel sure more young people will come into the Sunday night service. Perhaps then a C. E. Society composed of people under thirty can be formed and the older ones gathered into a mid-week prayer meeting.

The young people are sociable, too. I shall not forget an early morning breakfast and a delicious picnic dinner we enjoyed in the mountains up towards Seven Falls. All who have made a trip to Colorado Springs know of the beautiful mountain valleys, rushing brooks and towering rocks that are within a few minutes ride of the city. What wonderful picnic grounds they make! Even though Friends who live at the foot of the mountains recognize these blessings and take advantage of nature's wonderful playgrounds. Of course here as at other resorts the church has to confront the problem of a shifting population. Yet on the whole we are encouraged that she is meeting her problem so well.

T. E. JONES.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR YOUNG FRIENDS

Have you ever been out in the country? Out in the real country, where you could look as far as you could see without a tree or hill to obstruct your view? It's a peculiar sensation that one experiences isn't it? For the first time in my life I was on the open prairie where I could see all the country I cared to behold. I arrived at Sugar City, Colo., about six o'clock in the evening. Fearing that announcement of my visit had not reached these parts, as soon as the train stopped I began to make inquiry for means of conveyance to the Friends' Meeting twenty miles away. Within a few minutes I found a man who was going nearly to that vicinity. He had a new Henry Ford automobile and I'll admit it looked very inviting as those twenty miles stared me in the face.

As we were leaving town William

Jester and his wife came whizzing up in their Maxwell. They had received word to take me to the Meeting, but as I was all stowed away with my bags like a prize package, we did not change. Within a few minutes after leaving town nothing but open country could be seen. The sky was red with the setting sun, the dusty road wound and angled across fields and, on the far horizon now and then a dark speck appeared and then gradually faded from sight. I found later that these dark objects were the shacks or cottages of the settlers. Long rows of barbed wire marked the line of the farms most of which contained three hundred and twenty acres.

Once in a while one could see a dug-out or a sod house but for the most part the settlers live in frame houses, which are made of pine covered with tar paper. There are seldom over four rooms in a house and many have but two rooms. This with two or three sheds and a low wind mill constitutes most the buildings on a farm or ranch as they are called in this country. Because of the sparsely settled country I anticipated a small attendance at meeting. But happily I was mistaken. When we arrived about eight o'clock the meeting house was full. Where they came from I did not know but there they were and an eager lot too.

Again I was struck by the high plane of intelligence manifest. One often forgets that the most enterprising and many times the best educated people are just the ones who dare conquer a new country. We had a good meeting and arrangements were made for services during both the afternoon and evening of the next day. These meetings were well-attended and to the joy of us all in the afternoon we were caught in the first shower of a broken drought. Many people who had driven to meeting in big wagons were drenched but no one was sorry. The meeting is interesting.

There is a strong Christian Endeavor Society. And the Sunday School is in a flourishing condition. People know how to go to meeting in this country. In a radius of five miles over three-fourths of the population attend meeting regularly. The meeting house is well-built and has what equipment the community can afford at this time.

Now here is the immediate opportunity which caused me to head this article as I did. The Sunday School room has a book case built in the wall but there isn't a book in it. The young people are eager to read but there are no books. The nearest library is twenty miles away and the mail comes but three times a week. Isn't there some Christian Endeavor Society or Sunday School class which wants to show its friendship to these young people in Colorado by sending them some good books from your Library, or even better in sending a money order with which to purchase new books for these Friends. They do not ask it but they have assured the Young Friends' Board they would not be averse to receiving a mark of friendship of this kind. Could we not do a very great deal to build up a friendly feeling among all yearly meetings if we would live more for others than for ourselves? There are other places where gifts of this kind could be placed to very great advantage. Anything that is sent should go through the Young Friends' Board.

After the connection has been made we hope a hearty correspondence with the local meeting will ensue. This whole country is full of great opportunities which should challenge any Young Friend to giving his life to Christ as a home missionary. Send all communications regarding this work to the Young Friends' Board, Dunreith, Ind.

BIBLE SCHOOL OCTOBER 8

Subject—Paul Before Felix.
Lesson—Acts 24.

Golden Text—"Herein I also exercise myself to have a conscience void of offense toward God and man always." Acts 24:16.

Thanks to the quick decision of the Military Tribune Paul had been safely transferred to Caesarea. Here he was far removed from the fanaticism of the Jerusalem mob and the regular proceedings of the Roman court could be relied upon to give reasonable protection from Jewish religious prejudice. Final protection, however, was not secured until Paul appealed to Caesar.

Three charges were made against him by his accusers: A mover of insurrections among the Jews, a ring-leader of the Nazarenes and a profaner of the Jewish temple. Since we do not have the details of the proceedings we cannot say how they undertook to prove these charges. Judging from his name Tertullus must have been a Roman and it was probably thought that he would have more influence with the court than a Jew.

Paul in his defense made four points: That the charge of being a mover of insurrection could not be proved. That it was no crime to be a Nazarene. That he had done nothing disorderly in the temple and that the council at Jerusalem had found nothing against him. No decision was reached by the court and Paul was held in ward until the pleasure of the governor might order otherwise.

In a sense the Jews won their point. Paul was shut up and was thus limited in his ability to preach the new doctrines which were so detested by the Jews. Evidence, however, warrants the belief that Paul was active in the ministry. There were many Christians in the city and these seem to have visited him frequently. To these he undoubtedly taught his conception of Christian truth. The officers and soldiers also in large numbers heard him and thus the message of the Christ was promulgated. Bonds and prison walls have seldom silenced our great leaders, often they seem to have promoted the faith.

We need not follow the other opportunities Paul had with Roman officers. He was always able to boldly declare his faith and in most cases move his hearers. He so conducted his life that he felt himself void of offense toward God and men ALWAYS. A most happy way to live.

There is an interesting reference to the "Sect of the Nazarenes." Evidently the Christians were known by this term in and around Jerusalem, but it later gave way to the more appropriate name Christian. More appropriate because it refers to the person rather than the place from which he came.

What know we greater than the soul? On God and Godlike men we build our trust.—Tennyson.

A Distinctive Reason

What is the chief reason for the superiority of Royal Baking Powder?

There are several good reasons, but there is one which distinguishes Royal from other baking powders.

This reason, which every woman should know, is that Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, which comes from grapes. This means a healthful fruit origin. It means natural food as distinguished from mineral substitutes used in other baking powders.

There is no alum nor phosphate in Royal Baking Powder.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR October 8.

Topic—What new work should our Society undertake? Ex. 14:8-15.

Every Society that wishes to be up to date, and the biggest thing a Society can do, is to adopt the Efficiency Campaign, and PUSH it. Send to the Young Friends' Board for an Efficiency Chart and get busy right away.

Every wide awake Friends' Christian Endeavor Society will want to observe Rally Day, and support the Young Friends' Work of the Five Years' Meeting. Enroll all your young people in the Young Friends' Directory. Subscribe for the CONFERENCE NEWS-BULLETIN, 25 cent per year. This will keep you in touch with the work of the Board. Take up some systematic study for the coming winter months.

We ought to have a class studying Expert Endeavor and graduate a large class of Christian Endeavor Experts.

Did you ever have a wait in an unattractive depot and wish for something to read? Perhaps there is a literature rack, but upon investigation you found some old time tables, or magazines, five years old! Or maybe, very likely, it will be full of up-to-date Christian Science literature! Get busy! Pass your American Friends, Christian Endeavor World's and other fresh magazines on.

GET BUSY! Do some real aggressive work this fall and winter. Write the Young Friends' Board for further suggestions and plans.

NEWS NOTES

E. Howard Brown and wife have accepted a call to remain as pastors at Westfield, Indiana, for another year.

Clarence E. Pickett, pastor of the meeting at Toronto and Emma Cleland visited Friends at Uxbridge, Canada, on August 23.

Corda Nathan, widow of Albert J. Nathan, known to many Friends throughout America, died in the early summer at Warren, Pa.

Errol D. Peckham, pastor at Brooklyn, N. Y., had acceptable services at the Friends' meeting in Toronto, Canada, on August 6, 13 and 20.

Alfred Young, of Newmarket, Canada, visited the meetings in Pelham and West Lake Quarterly Meetings during the month of August.

Charles M. Woodman, of Portland, Maine has moved with his family to Richmond, Indiana, and preached his first sermons on September 17, as pastor of the West Richmond Meeting.

Edna Goodwin, of Puget Sound Monthly Meeting, Washington, has accepted a call to the pastorate at Leesburg, Ohio, and is now in charge of the work there. She comes with the best of records.

Robert W. Douglas, who is confined to his home by illness, was greatly missed at the sessions of the Indiana Yearly Meeting last week. A letter of greeting and sympathy was directed to be sent to him.

Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, attended prayer meeting at West Richmond meeting, Richmond, Indiana, on the evening of September 14 and addressed the chapel services at Earlham College the next morning.

BORN

Kepner—At Converse, Indiana, August 13, 1916, to Guy and Bertha Kepner, a daughter, Esther Veil.

DIED

Henley—Ruth Ann Henley, daughter of Reuben and Sarah Bentley, was born August 17, 1825 and died at her home in Carthage, Indiana, August 1, 1916. She married Micajah Henley in 1843. She had been a long and faithful member of the Friends' church. She is survived by seven children, three grandchildren and three great grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by J. Edgar Williams, a former pastor, assisted by the present pastor, Harry R. Hole.

Howland—Robert Bowne Howland died at Bedford Hills, N. Y., August 17, 1916, in his 91st year. Together with his gifted wife, he had established the Howland school for young women at Union Springs before the days of Vassar College. It was a financial failure, but an educational success. To bear adversity without bitterness and to keep his mind and heart young was his life's philosophy. Burial was in the old Friends' cemetery at Chappaqua, N. Y.

Lowback—Charles Lowback, a member of Stella Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma, died at the home of Sarah Bishop near Cherokee of typhoid fever on August 10, 1916. He was brought up in the Lutheran church, but was converted while attending Stella Academy, since which time he has been an earnest Christian and died in the triumph of a living faith. Funeral services were conducted by Alvin Coppock.

Madden—Edwin L. Madden, son of John S. and Ruth W. Madden, was born in Harding county, Iowa, December 11, 1860, and was suddenly killed on July 11, 1916, by falling from a load of wheat, which passed over his body. He was a member of Stella Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma, and a teacher of the Bible class. He was a Christian of sterling integrity and much loved in the community. Funeral services were held at Stella, conducted by the pastor, A. N. Gibson, assisted by Alvin Coppock.

Overman—Amanda M. Overman, wife of Joseph H. Overman, was born in Grant County, Indiana, November 27, 1846, and died at the home of her son, Dr. Charles J. Overman, of Marion, Indiana. She was a member of the Friends' church for over fifty years. She married Charles Albert Small in services were held at the Second Friends' church of Marion.

Small—Alice M. Small, daughter of Norman and Harriet MacLane, and wife of Charles Albert Small, was born in Lynn, Massachusetts, March 31, 1880, and died at their home at LaGrande, Oregon, September 3, 1916. She was a graduate of Oak Grove Seminary, took a two-years' course at the Gordon Bible Training School and a short-term course at Boston University. At one time she was assistant matron at the Y. W. C. A. at Lynn and about a year was church-visitor of the First Friends' church at the same place. She married Charles Albert Small in 1908. She has been a great sufferer, but has borne it all with Christian patience and courage. She is survived by her husband, two children and her mother.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

We Give thee Thanks

By Robert Bridges.

We give Thee thanks, O Lord!
Not for armed legions, marching in their might,
Nor for the glory of the well-earned fight
Where brave men slay their brothers, also brave;
But for the millions of Thy sons who work,
And do Thy task with joy, and never shirk,
And deem the idle man a burdened slave;
For these, O Lord, our thanks!

We give Thee thanks, O Lord!
Not for the palaces that wealth has grown,
Where ease is worshiped, duty dimly known,
And Pleasure leads her dance the flowery way;
But for the quiet homes where love is queen
And life is more than baubles, touched and seen,
And old folks bless us, and dear children play;
For these, O Lord, our thanks!

TAKE IT TO GOD

Hast thou care within so deep
It chases from thine eyelids sleep?
To thy Redeemer take thy care,
And change anxiety to prayer.

Hast thou a hope with which thy heart
Would almost feel it death to part?
Entreat thy God that hope to crown,
Or give thee strength to lay it down.

Whate'er the care that breaks thy rest,
Whate'er the wish that swells thy breast,
Spread before God that wish, that care,
And change anxiety to prayer.—Ex.

IN THE MATTER OF NEWS

We are confident that there are many activities among Friends throughout America which are allowed to go unnoticed and which, therefore, have altogether too limited influence upon the church as a whole.

The American Friend is anxious to have a report of the real and vital news about the activities of the church and its various departments. Report of routine matters is unimportant and usually not worth recording.

If, however, a service, even though it be the usual service of worship on Sunday morning, is particularly edifying and inspiring, the chances are that a brief report of the particular thing that brought the inspiration will prove helpful to other people who read about it.

Frequently some plan is being tried in the Bible School that is proving to be peculiarly helpful, and in all probability a report of the thing that makes it helpful will prove equally beneficial to those who may be permitted to read about it.

Christian Endeavorers are usually a live body of people and there are many excellent things which ought to be reported to The American Friend that it may pass the matter on to others who are waiting for just such an inspiration as such a report will bring.

The American Friend solicits brief news accounts of all such important activities. In almost every congregation there is generally one or more persons who have the news instinct. These ought to be given the task of reporting briefly and concisely the really important things. We are anxious also to have statements about the work and movements of leading Friends for record in our columns.

Some meetings wonder why no mention of their work ever finds place in the columns of their church paper. There is only one reason for it and that is that no account is ever sent in to the editor.

We trust that pastors will busy themselves with getting some one who has the news instinct and ability to pick out the really essential things, who will be made to feel the responsibility of reporting these matters for publication in the church paper.

We cannot use long news articles and we do not care to print the news after it gets real stale. Brief reports sent in frequently are far more preferable than reports which cover several weeks or months of time. All matters intended for publication in the paper should be sent to The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

Many years ago there was a young lawyer who went home one day and told his wife that he had become a Christian. They were going to have some company that evening, and he said: "After supper I want the servants to come into the drawing-room, and I'm going to read and pray." His wife was a professing Christian, but she said: "My dear, you know that these lawyers who are coming to dinner are scoffers or skeptics, and it will be very embarrassing to you if you should not succeed in your attempt to pray. Don't you think you would better put it off until after they are gone, or go out into the kitchen and pray with the servants?" She seemed to think it would be well to pray with them. The man thought a little while, and then said: "Well, wife, it is the first time I have taken Jesus Christ into my heart, and I feel that I should ask him into the best room in my house." So after supper he said to the gentlemen there that he had that day accepted Jesus Christ, and would like them to go with him while he prayed. They went into the drawing-room, and the young man led in prayer. That was Judge McLean, one of the finest judges of our Supreme Court, who stood for Christ constantly over forty years. Wasn't it a grand confession? Would to God that we could have men coming out like that now! Let our young men start out like that and declare that they will be on his side; it would help turn the spiritual tide of any city.—Christian Herald.

Time is lent us to be laid out in God's service, and we can not be too diligent in it, if we consider that time is precious, short, passing, uncertain, irrevocable when gone, and that for which we must be accountable.—Cowley.

The Great Objective

In recent weeks we have been endeavoring to stress in these columns both the value and the meaning of the Christian life, expressed in terms of character and quality, believing that righteousness in personality is the first concern of the gospel. An examination of the basis of life must lead inevitably and first of all to that quality of soul that determines what man is. The emphasis of Jesus was continually being placed upon that divine moral goodness which transforms men and women into a new creation and makes them children of the household of God. It is that product of faith in Jesus Christ which makes men to be partakers of the Divine nature. It is this purity of soul, this holiness in life that establishes a true basis of fellowship with Christ, and it is this companionship with him that is the guarantee of permanency in Christian experience.

Our concern primarily has not been the methods by which soul life is to be cleansed. Unfortunately the way to Christ has too often been clouded in a maze of uncertainty by the controversies of the theologians. They do violence to the gospel and the yearning heart of the Master who came to seek and to save that which was lost who circumscribe and limit the avenues of approach by which men find Jesus Christ. We have a consuming faith that not more surely did the revelation come to George Fox that one Jesus Christ could speak to his condition than that every earnest, sincere seeking soul, conscious of its need, can, through surrender and obedience and faith, find its way to the Savior of the world. Men are not saved through formulas; through the magic of mental assent to any dogma, through obedience to tradition, or through faith in liberalistic pronouncements. Let us hear again in the words of Jesus this message for all the ages and for all of life: "And this is life eternal, that they should know thee the only true God, and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." By searching the scriptures, through faith in Christ, by following the guidance of the Spirit, by being obedient to the heavenly visions that point unerringly to the place of divine forgiveness, through beholding the holy lives of consecrated men and women, and through a conscious revulsion from the pollution of a sinful life, we are made to feel the impulse for better things and are brought into the experience of that rebirth that makes us new creatures and joint heirs with our Lord.

But it is not the province of regenerated life to consume its energies upon self enjoyment. Personal salvation is not the object of life wholly, but the equipment for life. The yearning heart of the shepherd goes out after the lost sheep, not alone for the sake of the lost one, but because its restoration adds to the value of the entire flock. Christianity has been given a setting in a world whose first concern is materialistic rather than spiritual, in order that through the lives of Godly men, the whole social order may feel the impulse of new and better ideals and ultimately have a consciousness of the regenerating influence of a gospel that saves to the uttermost. He who would save his life, for his own sake, is bound to lose it, but he who is willing to lose his life, for the gospel's sake, is sure to find it. Pure religion can have no agreement with selfishness, but must express itself in a ministry of loving service for the sake of the kingdom and the enlargement of the family of God.

Social regeneration must be the inevitable product of personal regeneration. No man can live faithfully according to the pattern of our Lord, without begetting in others an impulse for the same experience, and it is the multiplication of personal religion that will beget social and industrial and national and world betterment. The command was to go and make disciples of the nations, and the mission of the church today is to effect this consummation.

It must never be forgotten that religion must be a religion of love, else it is not religion. The Good Samaritan was governed by the law of love, else he would not have been the good angel to the man who fell among thieves. The Christian man should not only love other men, but he should be able to help other men love not only himself but still others as well. This is the fundamental law of Christian service, and accounts for the winsomeness of sainthood when exemplified in the lives of Godly men and women. The great objective of Christianity in the world is that ultimately through the ministrations of Godly lives, the kingdoms of this world, civilized and heathen, shall actually become the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Christ.

Christianity Analytically Considered

By LUKE WOODARD

Christianity may be defined as a trinity, comprising, first: HISTORY and DOCTRINE; secondly: EXPERIENCE; thirdly: PRACTICE. Each of the foregoing is essentially related to the other two, and as a complete whole are inseparable. What God hath joined together let not man put asunder.

The written expression of Christianity in its completeness is embodied in the New Testament, which is related to the Old Testament as the foundation in architecture is related to the finished structure. In the New we find the fulfillment, largely, of the prophecies contained in the Old; the antitype of its types, and the reaffirmation and enlargement of its essential doctrines and moral precepts.

The so-called great religions of the world are historical. They had their founders, succeeded by followers who perpetuated and promulgated them to succeeding generations, incorporating them in their sacred books. This is true of Christianity and in this respect it is historically distinguished from them all. It had its Founder whose life from Bethlehem to Olivet, together with the principles He taught, were chronicled by divinely inspired witnesses chosen before of God and directed by His Spirit in the accomplishment of this work. He to whom these facts are made known, is morally bound to believe them, and denying, disbelieving them, he is not entitled to the name of Christian, though outwardly he may conform to the rules of common morality.

It is not uncommon in this age of loose thought to hear creed spoken of as something objectionable. Taking the etymology of the word, credo, "I believe," we can safely say every sane man has a creed; he believes something. There certainly may be creeds to which one ought to object. But taking Webster's definition of the word—"A definite summary of what is believed, especially a summary of Christian doctrine," there can be no valid objection to a creed which simply incorporates the doctrines of the New Testament. As such it is synonymous with a declaration of faith, such as the Society of Friends has ever had, and has at the present time, and one cannot avoid the conclusion that the objection to its adoption is grounded in a disbelief in some of the doctrines incorporated therein. There can no more be a Christianity without doctrine, than there can be a human body without bones, and a church without some such basis of union would be like an assemblage of anarchists.

Not that it is expected that a church composed of various grades will have only mature theologians. Distinction should be made between essential and non-essential points; and proper discrimination be made between those who deny fundamental truth, and those who, on account of immaturity or limited capacity, or want of opportunity, may be classed as non-believers rather than disbelievers. The apostle seemed to have something like this in mind when he enjoins consideration for an over-scrupulous class: "Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations." Rom. 14:1. But it will be observed he says: "In the faith." He also distinguishes between the privilege of merely being a member and fitness for responsible office.

I have used the phrase essential doctrines. Such are those the denial of which will exclude one from the kingdom of heaven: "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." And of those who reject the preached gospel, Christ says: "He that believeth not shall be damned." "He is anti-Christ that denieth the Father and the Son." "He that believeth not is condemned already because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God." Essential doctrines are those which relate to God and to the Lord Jesus Christ and His work, and to the Holy Spirit in His various offices.

II. Experience

Important as is belief in sound doctrine, it is readily admitted that something more is essential than the mere assent to a correct interpretation of scripture truth. Soundness in doctrine does not constitute one a Christian. Orthodoxy and Christianity are not synonymous. Belief such as we have been considering, in other words, faith, is the indispensable condition of Christianity as an experience. To the awakened penitent's question—"What must I do to be saved?" the only right answer is, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." But saving faith is more than the acceptance of the truth about Jesus; it is the acceptance of Him, surrender to Him and reliance upon Him. The Scripture term is believing with the heart.

Guilty and condemned we stand in need of pardon. It is provided in Christ. "We have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins." Him "hath God set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past through the forbearance of God." Dead in trespasses and sins, we stand in need of life. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life."

The servant of sin, we need deliverance. To such the Great Emancipator calls: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Defiled, as well as guilty, we stand in need of cleansing. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Do we long for the gift of the promised Spirit? He assures us: "He that believeth on me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the Spirit that they that "believe on Him should receive."

Whatever may be one's profession, whatever his church association, and acceptance of articles of faith, however outwardly moral, he is not a Christian in the New Testament sense of that term unless he has been converted, spiritually re-born. For this we have the word of Christ Himself: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

III. Practice

But Christianity is practical as well as doctrinal and experimental and it is not to be supposed that because works, even works of righteousness, are not saving, that therefore they are unimportant. They are the fruit and to men the evidence of Christianity. They are enjoined on the believer under the most solemn sanctions by both our Lord and His apostles. "Not everyone that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Paul, the champion of justification by faith, and who says, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saveth us," also says, "These things I will that thou affirm constantly that they which have believed in God be careful to maintain good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

Practical Christianity is the theme of the apostle James. "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Faith without works is dead."

Peter says the believer "should live no longer the rest of his time in the lusts of the flesh, but to the will of God." And John says: "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God." Indeed the New Testament throughout gives emphasis to Christ's injunction: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven," and while we are saved by grace, we are to be judged and rewarded according to our works.

It is safe to say if we do not reduce our profession to practice we have no right to claim to be Christians. Let it not be thought, however, that none are Christians who fall short of perfection. There are various grades in the family of believers, all the way from the one who is wholly sanctified, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, down to the weakling whose life is marred by frequent backsliding. Can a man be a sinner and a Christian at the same time? To this it may be answered: There are many things in the experience, often, of Christians, that are no part of Christian experience. Backsliding is not apostasy. That one after the experience of the new birth, commits a sin, does not involve the necessity of a repetition of the work of regeneration. Robert Barclay, speaking of a Christian who thus falls into sin, says: "Every sin weakens him, but does not wholly destroy him." He certainly is a disobedient child, and while the relationship is not destroyed, communion is interrupted, and in order that communion may be restored, he must needs repent and confess and be forgiven. The attitude of the heavenly Father toward such is represented in the parable of the prodigal son, and to such applies the text: "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."

Varying degrees of light involve corresponding degrees of responsibility, and may manifest themselves in the outward life, so that two persons equally loyal to God according to their respective understanding of His will, may be unequal in their outward life as measured by the standard of a perfect law. Man judgeth by the outward appearance, God by the heart. For this reason it becomes finite beings in judging of another's state to remember that the very finiteness which precludes the possibility of absolute perfection in another applies as well to themselves in their capacity to estimate with infallible accuracy the heart of another.

While it may be allowable for us to make charitable apologies for the diverse views and practices of individual Christians and Christian denominations, on the ground of an honest difference of understanding of the Scriptures, we should avoid carrying our apologies so far as to invalidate the authority of those sacred writings or tend to establish some post apostolic authority. While we freely admit that the difference is immense between a conscientious mistake in an apprehension of the mind of Christ, and a deliberate contempt or neglect of it, still we should not for a moment allow that conscientious error is equivalent to Christian obedience. There is no magic in a particular denominational name or profession, that can change the nature of truth or the obligation of duty.

WORKING FOR ETERNITY

Never mind where your work is. Never mind whether it be visible or not. Never mind whether your name is associated with it. You may never see the issues of your toil. You are working for eternity. If you can not see results here in the hot working day, the cool evening hours are drawing near, when you may rest from your labors, and then they may follow you. So do your duty, and trust God to give the seed you sow, "a body as it hath pleased him."—Alexander MacLaren.

Christians Hunting Work

By SYLVESTER NEWLIN

In the world's work the complaint is frequently heard, and is sometimes very loud, that thousands want work, and cannot find anything to do. Mills shut down, factories close their doors, corporations decide to curtail their out-put, and armies of workmen are thrown out of employment, and are hard-pressed to keep the wolf from the door. There are many factors which may help to produce such conditions, but it is not the purpose of this article to enter into an analysis of the possible causes.

We are hearing complaints something like that in the religious world. From some pulpits and religious journals there is a cry that the membership of the church must be given a worthy task, or there will be decay in spiritual life, and a certain loss in membership.

Usually, the pressure is brought to bear upon the pastor. He is told the members of his flock are suffering for lack of employment. Or, Christians are wanting work and cannot find it. And they are supposed to be losing spiritually, because no work has been assigned them. The question is sometimes asked: "What is the use of receiving people into the church unless you give them something to do?" And often the pastor accepts this criticism as though he deserved it. This pressure by leaders in the religious world, this urgent demand heard in conventions, conferences, and assemblies has been a potent factor in creating numerous organizations.

That meeting is supposed to be especially fortunate which has a pastor who has a gift for organizing societies and movements. One result is that we have Men's "Clubs", and "Leagues", and "Brotherhoods", "Fishermen's Clubs", "Gospel Teams", etc. The women have their "W. F. M. S.", "H. M. S.", "Auxiliaries", "Dorcas Society", the "Ladies Aid", "The Federation", "The W. C. T. U.", "The Y. W. C. A.", and "The Camp Fire Girls", etc. There is the "Senior C. E.", the "Y. P. S. C. E.", the "Intermediate C. E.", the "Junior C. E.", The "Win One Circle", The "L. T. L.", and the Bible School with its "organized classes", and its well equipped departments.

But after all there is a general complaint from platform and press and pew that the great mass of Christians have nothing to do. One man says: "If when I joined the church there had been given me some definite Christian work to do I would have had a living interest in the church, but as it is I was given nothing to do and I have drifted along taking little interest in the affairs of the church." Something like this recently appeared in one of our own religious papers by a correspondent: "Give the men a task that is worth while, give them a vision that is large, and world-wide, for in no other way can you give our young men a conception of the fact that the Friends church offers to them a field for a life investment."

The "Men and Religion Forward Movement", "The Laymen's Missionary Conventions", "The Men's Conferences", The "Women's Federations", The "Five Years Meeting", have been educational, inspirational, and dynamic, but they have touched but a small fraction of the church members. Helpful as all these are, ought we be dependent upon them for our dominant stimulant for Christian activity? Do we need a new vision as much as we need to open our eyes and look at the things which are staring us in the face? We can get help from the bible along these lines. Jesus and the apostles had something to say about how to get a motive, and how to find work.

The greatest need of the saved individual is the personal gift of the Personal Holy Spirit. Do you want a vision and a message? "When He the Spirit of truth is come, He will guide you into all truth." "He shall teach you all things." Do you want a stimulus that will stir you to a great task and a wide field? Then live under the magic spell of that prophecy: "Thine eyes shall see the King in His Beauty. They shall behold the land that is very far off."

Here is for us emancipation, transformation, victory, growth, and fruitfulness in an unbroken fellowship and partnership with the Divine:—"Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." For, "We all, with unveiled face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit."

Do the young people want something to do? Paul will help them to find it. He has them in mind. "Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right. Honor thy father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise." "Neglect not the assembling of yourselves together." "Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good." Obedience to parents and teachers, and loyalty to the church needs no new vision, no new message, neither a new method, yet God offers a premium for that kind of work.

Are the men looking for some Christian work to do? Let them turn to the Sermon on the Mount, and they will find the much talked of "man's job". If they can do such loving of enemies and such forgiving and such fruit-bearing, and such praying and quiet alms-giving; if they can live such care-free, trusting, such faith-filled, such helpful every day Christian lives that they will be like "light" and "salt", as they will find there enjoined, they need not spend time racking their brains in search of anything more distinctively Christian to do. What is there to prevent our accepting our daily routine duties as divinely assigned tasks and then doing them heartily as unto the Lord? That is the scriptural ideal of the Christian life. Do Christians want work? God has placed it right at their hands.

Instead of saying: The church should provide a channel broad enough for the gifts of its members, rather say: The church is a channel big enough for the exercise of all talents and diversified activities of all its membership.

The great majority of our members do not feel their personal responsibility in using their powers for the edification of their fellow members. The mid-week meeting could be made a mighty spiritual force in the community. And there seems to be no danger of disorder arising from the eagerness of individuals to take part.

Most of us can keep busy on our own initiative by stimulating the faith of other people. To have a genuine and constant faith in folks is often the secret of getting things done. We owe the one very much who tells us what we can do, and whose prophecy helps us to do what he expects of us.

The children of the church and of the community comprise the most hopeful field for our highest service. The young people in the formative period of life offer to us an appeal which is a challenge for our ablest efforts. Here is needed character, knowledge and preparation enough to tax to the utmost the consecrated ability and skill of all.

In the face of these tremendous tasks, and with the urgent and constant call for Bible School teachers and leaders of young peoples organizations and for visitors to go to the sick and shut-ins, the lonely, the stranger and the un-churched masses, and for faithful committees of the Monthly Meeting who can be depended upon, for leaders of mission study classes, and for those who will solicit subscribers to our own denominational paper, and for those who will act as faithful correspondents of the same, it seems too bad that any Christian is hunting work, and deploring the fact that he is losing out spiritually because he has nothing to do.

Instead of the wail—"I have nothing to do", the writer hears more often something like this: "I'm overworked." "I'll have to give up something." "I can't be a specialist in two things: I either slight my medical practice, or have to neglect my work as a teacher in the Bible School." "I have too many irons in the fire." "Seven nights in the week are not enough for all the meetings I'm expected to attend." "This nervous strain is too heavy; I'll have to unstring the bow in some way for fear it will snap."

Beloved co-laborers: we can all find employment in cultivating our own spiritual growth. May the will of our Heavenly Father be our delight! Let us be afraid of an experience which has ceased to grow. May our "love abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all discernment, being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God."

WAR'S FINAL CURE

By FRANK BARRETT

War germs cannot survive in the light of vital religion. A thousand causes have been given for the present European struggle—old grudges, racial hatreds, evil suspicions, territorial ambitions, commercial greed, self-seeking rulers, interlocked world armament trust, race for the proud position of premier of Europe, France mindful of her lost provinces, Russia's eternal struggle for an ice free port, too much preparedness, secret diplomacy—name them all, and yet the cause of this European hurricane can be stated in one word—irreligion.

Where in history did irreligion make the ancients any more wicked? Never since the days of the flood has there been a spectacle on earth that has come as near grieving God at his heart as this international Vesuvius. And never did the old Hebrew prophets warn their nations of impending danger with clearer vision and greater accuracy than have the peace prophets warned Europe of the impending awfulness of this hour.

Talk about the war increasing infidelity. The fulfillment of the prophecies of our peace advocates will convince the deepest dyed-in-the-wool nationalist in any European university or out of it that a live devil has been turned loose in Europe. He will now argue that any man who disbelieves this is a heretic. If "war is—", what General Sherman said it was, who is the commander-in-chief of that war zone? Let the military criminals, who are responsible for this hemisphere of blood, listen to the words of Jesus Christ: "Ye do the works of your father, the devil, for he was a murderer from the beginning." And yet they dress themselves in gilded uniforms with paraphernalia and say to us who follow Christ: "Fall down and worship me."

Preparedness will not keep peace. If it will why is not Germany at peace with the world? Legislation will not keep the peace. If it will, why do armies commit murder and arson in defiance of laws against murder and arson? Education will not keep the peace. If it will why did the Sanhedrin pass the death sentence on Christ when they knew he was innocent?

We are not discarding wise human efforts to keep the peace, Blessed are the peacemakers but these efforts alone are inadequate. Though they palliate, they do not cure. Drummond says: "Time doesn't change men, will power doesn't change them, Christ does." This change will be war's final cure.

Why do not the great missionary organizations of the world "prepare" to attack each other and to ward off attacks from each other? These men are subject to like passions as we are. What has rendered them immune from the passions of war and organized devastation? A specific that will cure one organization ought to cure a world of organizations.

IS THE CHURCH SOLVENT?

(Editorial In The Continent.)

"PAY TO THE ORDER OF HUMANITY."

Thus are written out the sight-drafts of heaven on God's church in the world. And in every age the church's most crucial question is whether it is solvent enough to meet all such drafts as presented.

Paul inventoried his spiritual books of account thus:

"I am debtor both to Greeks and to barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish."

Yet neither Greeks nor barbarians had ever done for Paul anything that could command his lifetime of service. The real Creditor who had heaped Paul with benefits was the mastering Christ who gave him "the heavenly vision."

But Paul soon discovered that the Creditor had assigned the account. A vast deal the apostle realized that he was called to pay on a claim that had mortgaged all he was and hoped to be, but it was not to any place celestially exalted that he was to make remittance. Instead he found the promissory notes of his consecration in the hands of strangers all around him here on earth—strangers of all sorts—strangers of every kind that in his Pharisee days he would have refused to look at.

And he could not deny that it was the authentic blood-sign of his own Lord's cross which indorsed every one of these claims for collection out of his debt to Jesus.

So Paul in the ledger of his soul took all his debt to Christ off Christ's page and registered it on the pages of the Greek and the barbarian. And for an "acceptance" he wrote across the face of every sorrow and need and sin that confronted him in all the worn and torn and weary human life of his time this personal acknowledgment:

"I am debtor.....I am ready.....I am not ashamed of the gospel."

The apostolic character of the present-day church can be tested in nothing else so searchingly as by the inquiry whether it keeps books of its debts in the fashion that Paul did. And the measure of the Holy Spirit's power in the church is the promptness and fullness in which it pays these debts as they fall due.

But how fatally easy it is for the church in any age to imagine that all the debts it owes can be paid to heaven direct. Its worship and its praise and its observance of the sacraments it offers God as due and expected return for all the benefits of salvation which he has provided.

The truth is, however, that the adoration which the Christian brings to the throne of Almighty Majesty is, though an absolutely imperative part, yet an utterly minor part of his obligations to his Redeemer. The major obligation, looming vastly larger in bulk and consequence remains.

And the substance of that obligation challenges Christians out of every sin and woe and grief and loss and heart-hunger and dismay that distorts or afflicts any life among men.

Nor has the church the mind of its Lord unless it looks on all these troubles of humanity with a consciousness of debt pricking its soul.

It seems, no doubt, very holy and virtuous that a Christian's heart should recoil with horror from the sinful—that his soul should be hot with indignation at the wicked. But it is not Christ-like. Christ never recoiled from vileness.

The reaction of genuine Christianity toward the sinner is not accusation and condemnation, but an eager longing to help the erring. The reaction of genuine Christianity to all that is wrong in the world is a passionate and compassionate determination to make it right.

Is then the church doing all it can do for men?

If not, it is a delinquent debtor.

Any need of the human spirit which the church is not exerting itself to meet will be filed against it as a bill of bankruptcy in the eternal judgment court of God.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION AT THE ENSUING FIVE YEARS MEETING

Conservation is one of the great watchwords of our government and is especially applicable to the western portion of the United States.

Conservation does not mean holding its own, as the word might seem to indicate, but it does mean the wise husbanding of resources so as to create internal energy which is positively necessary for permanent progress. Many and urgent are the problems facing the Friends' church in America. Our educational institutions need to be more adequately equipped. We need a better trained and better supported ministry. There is a positive demand for a quickening of spiritual life both in pulpit and pew. We need to see more clearly our responsibility in the great world evangelization movement. These and others are pressing in upon us.

Perhaps the greatest need and the one with which the coming Five Years Meeting ought to grapple is a large and comprehensive program along Home Mission lines, commonly called Church Extension and Evangelistic Work.

Many fields containing some finances and large possibilities are open to Friends all over the west. These cannot be occupied because of lack of funds. As a result we lose the field and the partial support which is in the field. Many of our young men are coming from colleges, universities and seminaries well trained to do large things, no fields are open that offer even a bare living, hence they find their way into other churches and other lines of work. Another asset is gone. For that reason it is more important that we provide a suitable field for our young men, than it is to train our young men for other fields. There are many communities where there are one or more families of Friends who would be glad to throw their religious efforts, both spiritual and financial, into building up a Friends' congregation in such community. Not being able to carry the whole burden and Friends not being organized to assist them, they usually drift into other churches, or, saddest of all, grow cold and indifferent to better things. More power is lost.

If the coming Five Years Meeting would inaugurate a campaign to raise an endowment fund of $1,000,000 for home missions, and Friends all over the United States would heartily unite with such a movement and turn their attention largely for the next five years to creating such a fund, we would have done much toward conserving energy for our future growth and usefulness along all important lines.

Many of our small churches would take on new life and become a real power in the community if they had a little financial backing just at the right time. Further, they would eventually become an asset to the church at large and contribute to the other great movements.

It seems a self-evident fact that this is the crying need of Friends just now. Some would love to see American Friends united on a big program.

We should not quibble over which is the most important thing to do and do nothing but quibble. We should single out one great undertaking and unite on that one thing. Let that be our major thing to be done in a material way during the next five years.

GEORGE D. WEEKS.

THE HIGHER LIFE

"NEW EVERY MORNING"

"Count your mercies, my dear," was good old Grandmother Comforts's never-failing advice when things went wrong with those around her. She was not unsympathetic or unkindly—quite the reverse; but she was a philosopher in her homely fashion. She knew that if she could only get people to count their "mercies," the list would be so long that it would crowd out altogether the ill that at first sight loomed up so large. It is a simple remedy for real or fancied ills, and easily applied—"Count your mercies."

MORE RELIGION

The greatest need of America at the present hour is more of the religion of Jesus Christ. It is not enough that we have better sanitation, or more knowledge, or committees on the rural problem, or on housing in congested quarters. Man shall not live by bread alone and there has been a famine of the Word of God. There are cheering signs of an awakening to a perception of this great need. There is heart-hunger in many of our churches for a more deeply spiritual presentation of the Gospel. There are men, and many of them, who have been seeking to fill themselves with philanthropy and with social reform, who are finding more and more fully every day that these things concern the outside of the cup and the platter. God has made the soul of man for himself and it is homeless till it finds him. Let us have sociology and hygiene, but let us put farther to the front and higher in the lead the saving Gospel of the Son of God.—Advance.

THE MINISTRY OF STRUGGLE AND TEARS

A calm sea never made a skillful mariner: A sheltered life never became morally mighty. The ore must pass through the furnace to come out steel. Statues of grace and beauty do not leap from the block of marble by soothing touches. Clay must enter the fire before it turns out the priceless porcelain. Ghiberti spent twenty years in beating into beauty the scenes upon the bronze doors of the baptistry of the Duomo in Florence. God spends fifty years in fashioning a human life into grace and beauty upon the anvil of trial and adversity. The man who meets the discipline of trial grows strong and kingly. The trumpets of God forever herald the truth that man must battle for his crown. Canaan became an actual possession of Israel after hard fighting and heroic effort. The promised land of the Christian is won by conquest only. Froude says: "You cannot dream yourself into character; you must hammer and forge yourself into one."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

CHRIST AS A YOKEFELLOW.

A fatal mistake in life is to drag its loads in a single collar. No one was ever intended to bear his burden alone. Christ has no single collars; he only deals in yokes. A yoke is a collar for two, and the Lord himself pleads to be one of the two. He wants to share the labor of any galling burden, whether it be when we come to the exhausting ascent or to the equally exacting decline. The secret of life's peace is to drop the single collar and to accept the Master's yoke.—J. H. Jowett.

CHRIST'S PEACE

The serenity that marked the life of Jesus as he walked among men was one of the evidences of his faith in his Father's care and love. Although he was often tired and hungry and thirsty and in pain, he never appeared anxious or fretful. Perfect peace marked his every word and action, and anxiety had no place in his life, as it ought to have no place in the life of any one of the children of God. One of the precious legacies which he left his people was this promise: "My peace I give unto you."—Ex.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Indiana Yearly Meeting convened in its ninety-sixth annual session at Richmond, Indiana, on the morning of September 19. From several standpoints it was regarded as one of the best sessions held in recent years. Those who were privileged to be present evinced a determined purpose to face certain important problems of the church which appear to be pressing for settlement.

At the meeting on ministry and oversight, which convened in two day sessions on Monday, the 18th, there was an earnest and intelligent discussion of the state of the church, and a number of suggestions were made which will be of practical benefit in the community work of the various congregations. The subject which claimed most attention, however, was that of better ministerial preparation and training, which resulted in the adoption of the report of a special committee appointed to consider this matter a year ago. This report, which was ultimately adopted by the Yearly Meeting with practical unanimity, will be found on another page of this issue. A proposition was introduced to ask the next Five Years Meeting "to give earnest consideration to this subject and to develop a plan that will insure the proper training and education of those who are being called into the ministry."

When it developed that the last Five Years Meeting had referred this matter to the joint consideration of the Evangelistic and Educational Boards, it was decided to ask these committees to give early attention to the question and the members of these committees from Indiana Yearly Meeting were instructed accordingly.

There were a number of visiting ministers and workers present from other Yearly Meetings as follows: Charles M. Woodman and wife of New England Yearly Meeting, who have just entered upon pastoral work at West Richmond Meeting; Charles and Lenna Lescault, Naomi Harrison Jay and Ida L. Curtis, who has recently accepted the pastorate at La Porte, Indiana, of California Yearly Meeting; Zeno H. Doan, who has just entered upon pastoral work at Knightstown, and Elwood Hadley and wife from Iowa Yearly Meeting; E. Howard and Ruth Brown, Enos Harvey, Jesse I. Phillips, Aquilla H. Einfeld and Charles Axton, who has recently accepted the pastorate at Jonesboro, of Western Yearly Meeting; Ida Allen and Ellison R. Purdy, of Wilmington Yearly Meeting; Eli Reece and J. Elwood Cox, of North Carolina Yearly Meeting; Evangeline Reams, of Ohio Yearly Meeting; John Kenworthy and wife, of Kansas Yearly Meeting, and Edgar T. Hole, missionary to Africa, at home on furlough. The services of these Friends at the morning meetings, on Sabbath and on special occasions, were helpful and appreciated.

Those who served at the clerk's table last year were reappointed for service this year, Robert L. Kelly, presiding clerk; Mary A. J. Ballard, recording clerk, and Edwin P. Trueblood and Edith J. Hunt, reading clerks, while Parvin Bond was appointed announcing clerk in place of A. J. Furstenburger. The reports on the state of society were, for the most part, encouraging and indicated that a spirit of reverence and unity prevails among the membership, while members in most meetings are active in the work of the church. Lack in concerted methods for church and community building was admitted. Young Friends are active in most meetings in their various lines of Christian work. Some meetings report an increased attendance the past year.

Charles E. Tebbetts had made an investigation from the reports in recent years and found that in Indiana Yearly Meeting there are 19 congregations in cities, 50 in towns and villages and 75 in the country. Seven of the city meetings show considerable gains within the past years, while five show considerable loss. Thirteen of the town and village meetings had shown gains and six losses, while eight of the country meetings indicated gains and 15 considerable losses. Some other meetings have vacillated, gaining at one time and losing at another. He cited one country meeting, which four years ago had a membership of 76 and now has 136 members with well organized departments.

The report of Southland College mittee was most interesting and beneficial in that it revealed with unusual accuracy conditions in a number of the Quarterly Meetings. The report emphasized the need of capable leadership and said that too much of the work is carried on mechanically. It is recommended that the different boards and committees interested secure a secretary during the year to give his time in field work for the benefit of the whole church.

The report of Southland College developed more than the usual amount of interest. An increased appropriation was asked for on the ground that all materials and food stuffs cost more than formerly. The report of a government expert was presented, which, while highly commending the work of the institution, pointed out some needed changes. Fifty dollars was pledged by individuals present to pay the next installment on a new engine for the buildings, and all Sabbath Schools in the Yearly Meeting were asked to raise $1.00 each additional during the coming year over and above their ordinary contributions with which to purchase needed fire extinguishers. George N. Hartley presented the report of the committee on Indian Affairs and explained that almost all the religious work of the government schools has been turned over to the Friends' missions. At the close of the report Susie Meek, an Indian girl now a student at Earlham college, sang a hymn beautifully.

The Book and Tract Committee made a most interesting report, which indicated the distribution of a great deal of literature. A strong address was given in connection with this report by Harry R. Hole, pastor at Carthage, Indiana. The report on Home Mission Work was a valuable presentation of the claims of home missions upon the church as a whole. Professor Herschel Coffin, of Earlham College, the chairman, gave a strong address, in which were enumerated the modern evils which tend to divorce church members from a more complete prosecution of their faith, and suggested that a more intimate social service program be adopted. Quarterly Meetings reported greater advances along lines of church federation and community reform.

The temperance report indicated that a good deal of work had been done, and took a strong stand for state and national prohibition. Addresses on the subject were given by DeWitt Foster, pastor at South Marion, and S. E. Nicholson. Young Friends were given two evenings. On Wednesday night the meeting was in charge of Thomas E. Jones, Field Secretary of Young Friends Activities, and strong addresses were given by Eldon Mills, Lawrence Lindley and Gilbert Shambaugh, students in Earlham College, and Roy Wollam, pastor at Spiceland. The young people were in evidence throughout the Yearly Meeting with their tent, with morning lessons and at the Christian Endeavor session on Saturday evening.

The report of the Peace Committee naturally was one of the features of the Yearly Meeting. Professor Allen D. Hole made a strong showing of practical activity throughout the year and the proposition coming from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting and other sources for unity of action on the part of all Friends was heartily endorsed. Charles M. Woodman gave a strong address on "The Background of Our Quaker Faith." It is hoped that a national conference of Friends on peace will be held in the near future. The epistles from London and Dublin Yearly Meetings contributed greatly to the interest in this particular subject.

The Bible School report was presented on Thursday evening with Ancil E. Ratliff in charge. A number of schools have taken rank as "front line" schools during the past year, and these were awarded pennants. Emphasis was laid upon teacher training work. Thirteen thousand six hundred and seventy-five pupils were recorded as attending the Bible Schools of the Yearly Meeting the past year. A number of stereopticon views were presented showing the classes in many of the schools throughout the Yearly Meeting. Charles M. Woodman gave an inspiring address on "The Vision of the Bible School."

The report of the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Committee was read by the superintendent, Truman C. Kenworthy. Sixteen of the 100 pastors in the Yearly Meeting are women. The one hundred and thirty-six Monthly Meetings pay $36,000 in salaries. One thousand five hundred and seventy-five conversions were reported during the year. Family worship has showed substantial gains in a number of the meetings. The religious community canvass was advocated. Truman C. Kenworthy was reappointed general superintendent. By action of the Yearly Meeting he becomes an ex-officio member of the committee.

Foreign missions claimed large attention during the Yearly Meeting. Charles E. Tebbetts and Edgar T. Hole gave strong addresses at a public meeting Thursday evening. An elaborate report of the Yearly Meeting and the Five Years Meeting Boards revealed the activities upon the foreign field. The members present voted unanimously to endeavor to raise the contributions during the coming year to at least $1.00 per capita for the total membership. Unanimous approval also was given to the plans of constructive work which are being considered for Mexico. Edgar T. Hole gave an interesting account of the work in Africa and Charles Edwin Bradt, District Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, gave an able address, and brought a vision of possibilities in the foreign field if only the church will furnish the means for its redemption.

The educational session was held on Saturday afternoon, when reports of the work at Fairmount and Spice-land Academies and Earlham College were read. President Kelly's report of Earlham was a feature of the occasion. He was followed in a brief address by Alexander C. Purdy, now head of the Biblical Department in the college. The report was substantially the same as presented at Western Yearly Meeting the week before. Joseph A. Goddard and Leander J. Woodard were reappointed trustees of the college.

The meeting declined to grant the request of certain Friends in Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting that they be annexed to Oregon Yearly Meeting. In answer to an appeal from Van Wert Quarterly Meeting that the Yearly Meeting adjust certain internal troubles, the Yearly Meeting trustees were directed to take over the property of Van Wert meeting, but later a committee was appointed to visit Friends at Van Wert in an attempt to adjust the differences. Twenty-six delegates and ten alternates were appointed to attend the Five Years meeting next year. The list of delegates will be found in another column of this issue. Memorials were read for David W. Dennis and Elisha B. Ratcliff. The Yearly Meeting voted to join with Kansas Yearly Meeting in the erection of a suitable memorial at the old Shawnee mission in Kansas.

It is impossible within the limits of this report to chronicle a number of most interesting events throughout the week. The various services on Sunday were a fit climax to the important events of this ninety-sixth session of Indiana Yearly Meeting. Strong sermons were preached in the house and on the grounds, the speakers being Charles M. Woodman, Alexander C. Purdy, Robert L. Kelly, Charles Lescault, Eli Reece, E. Howard Brown, Charles E. Hiatt, John Kittrell and others. All devotional periods were times of spiritual refreshing, and the presence of the Lord was manifest throughout the various sessions.

FRIENDS ORIENTAL NEWS

The summer number of "Friends Oriental News", published at Nanking, China, in the interest of American Friends missions in Asia, is at hand and is an interesting number. From it we glean the following items:

The girls boarding school at Nanking had a very satisfactory close on June 22. There is a class of ten to begin high school work in the fall and ten girls to begin intermediate work.

The one hundredth anniversary of the American Bible Society was observed with appropriate exercises at Luho on May 12.

An interesting incident is given in the testimony at the close of a woman's meeting to the effect that God had taken care of a mother and her son during a severe storm.

Charles and Catharine De Vol returned to Luho from Nanking on June 10, where they had a good year in the school for missionary children. Work has begun on a new house for Dr. De Vol.

May 22 was memorable day for the girls' school in Luho. Three of the oldest students were graduated and these read short essays, while the higher primary students sang hymns.

The women and girls at the station at Nowgong, India, are at work making handkerchiefs. It is planned to use some of these for Christmas presents and they will cost about thirty cents delivered in America.

The third graduating exercises of the Nanking Bible Teachers Training School took place at the Friends' church on June 14. There were only two members in the class, but the house was well filled, showing the good interest that is felt in this institution.

The marriage of Mangalwadi and Jai bai is announced, the former being the faithful, efficient teacher of the boys' school at Nowgong. The bride is an attractive young lady from the Canadian Presbyterian mission girls' school at Neemuch. She is also a teacher.

I beseech thee, Lord, teach me to seek thee, and show thyself to the seeker, because I can neither seek thee unless thou teach me nor find thee unless thou showest thyself to me.—Saint Anselm.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

A WORD TO MISSIONARY COMMITTEEMEN AND WORKERS.

In your work this year, how do you propose to increase the number of persons in your meeting or society who are vitally interested in missions and how deepen the interest of those already mildly interested?

In the first place, you will, of course, hold missionary meetings which are interesting, instructive, inspiring. Let us help you make them so. If you will write to the Board of Missions office in Richmond, the secretaries will gladly send suggestions and helps for the particular kind of meeting you propose to hold.

Second, you will, we hope, form one or more small groups or classes to meet each week for eight or ten weeks to study a book of missionary biography or a book about some foreign country. The board of Missions stands ready to help also in making this class a success. Next week on this page we expect to publish an article bearing the title "An Echo of Mission Study." The article contains a suggestion which you may wish to carry out. It tells what one Mission Study class has accomplished and it is well worth reading.

If you have reason to doubt the possibility of making either your missionary meetings or your study class effective, you are invited to write the Board of Missions (see address above) for printed helps and to find out how they have been successfully held in other places.

HOW A MEXICAN GOVERNOR HELPED.

I wish to mention the active interest that the former Governor and Secretary of State took in our behalf last June when it was thought that intervention was a fact. The military chief of the place was going to confiscate our cows and turn the cavalry horses into the fields. The secretary of State opposed the move, saying, "Those people are not here to exploit the Mexicans nor to get gain, but are here for the benefit of Mexico as their many years of work among us abundantly prove." When they were about to come to blows concerning the matter, it was referred to the Governor who promptly sided with the Secretary and placed a man in charge to prevent the committing of depredations. The latter, however, abused the confidence thus placed in him to the extent of turning his own two cows into the fields and ordering the man in charge to milk them and deliver the milk at the house. About two weeks later, this fact came to the Governor's ears and he ordered our man to turn them out into the road and, if any one came to ask about them to refer that person to him. No one ever came. Upon the first opportunity, I shall express our sincere appreciation to these two gentlemen who so kindly intervened in our behalf. I was very sorry not to be able to do so during my recent visit but they both were out of the city.

HAPPY GROVE BOYS NEED MORE ROOM.

In January, 1915, the boys' department of the Happy Grove School in Jamaica occupied the new boys' building for the first time. The building has two stories and a basement, but owing to lack of funds the basement has never been entirely excavated and none of the basement rooms have been properly finished. The time has come when the officers of the school feel that they must have the use of the basement rooms. Heretofore the tailoring class has had to meet in the dining room and the wood-working classes have used a small space in the basement which the boys themselves dug out.

When the entire basement can be used, it will provide six additional rooms besides the veranda—a space 34 feet by 52 in all. This will include two bath rooms, a tool room, stock room, a large room for the wood-working division, a slightly smaller room for the tailoring division, besides the long veranda room to be used as a workshop.

Much of the work in fitting up the basement rooms can be done by the boys in the school, so the total cost of these extensive improvements will probably be little if any more than $250. For equipment, at least $150 more will be needed.

Montclair Hoffman, who graduated last spring from Howard University at Washington, D. C., and who returns to Jamaica this autumn as a teacher in the Happy Grove School, has been asking a few Friends in Baltimore and Philadelphia Yearly Meetings to assist in providing for these improvements in the school building. The Board of Missions appreciates very heartily the response which these Friends have made. Our treasurer will be glad to receive additional offerings from any who are interested in the work of this Christian school which seeks to develop the highest type of Christian character in the young men of Jamaica and to teach them how to help themselves and their fellow countrymen.

MISSIONARY WORK IN PICKERING COLLEGE.

Canadian terms are sometimes misleading to Americans, so it should be explained that Pickering College is a preparatory school, like Westtown or Oak Grove. This makes its problem different from those of the other Friends' colleges, for the students are of High School age. There is, however, a student Y. M. C. A. and a Y. W. C. A., as well as the Sunday night prayer meeting through which missionary work is done.

The Y. M. C. A. during some of the cold weather last year provided some funds for an old couple in the town, who needed help. Some of the regular meetings of the Association were on missionary subjects, and a joint meeting of the two Associations was held at the close of the World's Week of Prayer, February 27. A Bible study class was carried on during the first term, and this time was used in the spring term, for a study of missionary biography. During the latter part of March a band of Student Volunteers from the University of Toronto held meetings at Pickering.

The Y. W. C. A. has regular monthly Missionary meetings, in which the text of "The King's Highway" was followed. These meetings are educational; no effort is made to raise money in them. A mite box for small pledges of one cent a week is hung up on the girls' side, but the main contribution is made at the Sunday night meetings.

These Sunday night services are planned to come once a month. The program consists of some missionary biography, story, lantern pictures, or sometimes an address by a visiting missionary. Last year a Presbyterian missionary family from Japan lived in the school, and now, although they have returned, three of the students are missionaries' children. The contributions made at these meetings were last year sent to the Friends' Mission in Japan, and amount to thirty five dollars.

EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT

At Nebraska Yearly Meeting last June the Pastoral and Church Extension Board presented a report as follows which was approved by the Yearly Meeting:

The Committee met June 6, 1916, and elected the following officers: President, Philip Stein; Secretary, Ralph Clem; Treasurer, Wilbur Roberts.

The Board presents the following policy:

Realizing that the church is truly efficient and really productive in its efforts to build up the Kingdom, only as every part is working to the very best advantage, we urge that each Quarterly Meeting at some time during the year, or possibly through the entire year, arrange for and conduct a simultaneous efficiency campaign among its constituent meetings. The purpose of this shall be to bring up every department of every church to the very highest point of efficiency. This work shall be in charge of each Quarterly Meeting superintendent, who shall co-operate with the local pastors. We suggest also that a report of this special effort be made to our next Yearly Meeting.

As soul-winning is the great task of the church, we urge that special effort be made by each Quarterly Meeting to hold revival services at each point within its limits, for the purpose of awakening the unsaved and winning them to Christ.

We recommend also that the following prayer calendar be printed on the back cover of the Yearly Meeting Minutes.

Pray daily that five hundred human souls may be saved within our limits this year.

Sunday—For the pastors of Nebraska Yearly Meeting, that they may be wise and tactful in their work, and empowered by the Holy Spirit in the presentation of the Gospel of Christ.

Monday—For the weak meetings, that they may become strong, for the strong meetings that they may become stronger.

Tuesday—That the Bible Schools and Young People's Societies of our Yearly Meeting may be soul winning agencies.

Wednesday—For the Evangelistic Board of the Five Years Meeting; for the Evangelistic Board of Nebraska Yearly Meeting; for the Yearly Meeting Superintendent; and for the Quarterly Meeting Superintendents.

Thursday—For Church Extension, that God may lead in its development, and that the joint $100,000.00 endowment campaign may be a success.

Friday—For all departments of the Five Years Meeting and of Nebraska Yearly Meeting and for Nebraska Central College.

Saturday—That four hundred new members may be added to our church. For the advancement of Christ's Kingdom throughout the world.

JOINT ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

At Nebraska Yearly Meeting last June the following plan was presented to the Yearly Meeting and was unanimously adopted:

To Nebraska Yearly Meeting:

The Nebraska Central College Board and The Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of Nebraska Yearly Meeting met in joint session to consider the advisability of entering a campaign for a joint permanent endowment fund. These two boards are united in the belief: 1st, That a campaign should be entered upon to secure an endowment of $100,000.00 before the Five Years Meeting of 1917. 2nd, That efforts to secure this fund should be pursued along the lines of Endowment funds or notes; annuities, bequests, or other legitimate methods.

Absolutely Pure
Made from Cream of Tartar
NO ALUM—NO PHOSPHATE

3rd, That the income from such endowment should be used by the two boards as nearly equally as can be; giving to each donor the privilege of designating a preference to which line of work the gift shall be devoted. 4th, These boards unanimously request this Yearly Meeting to consider and adopt the provisions of this plan.

On behalf of the united boards,
S. L. Hull, Chairman.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

August 28 marked the golden wedding anniversary of Daniel W. and Amanda Allen Bundy at their home near Woodland, Idaho. The day was an enjoyable one. To live the wedded life for fifty years is a favor conferred upon comparatively few people. On the evening of the 30th several of their friends and neighbors came in and the evening was passed very pleasantly in a social way with servings of ice cream and cake. One of the cakes, an angel food cake, was sent by their old friends and neighbors, Chilon and Sadie Carter, of Galena, Kansas, who are widely known as home missionaries.

They received many letters and postcards of congratulations and good wishes, together with a number of presents. They were married fifty years ago at Toledo, Kansas, with Joel Willis as officiating minister.

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE FOR PEACE

By ELIZABETH W. POST

The Peace and Arbitration Committee of New York Yearly Meeting has decided that work for Peace must be organized among the children throughout New York Yearly Meeting, feeling that Christ's ideal of love for our neighbors and the Quaker principle of the sacredness of human life should be taught to the children.

An effort is now being made to have Peace Bands of the Children's Crusade for Peace organized in the meetings that have Bible Schools.

The Crusade bases its opposition to war squarely on four statements:

1. War is wicked.
2. It is un-Christian.
3. It is wasteful.
4. It is unnecessary. There is a "better way of settling disputes between nations. We demand that a court of arbitration be permitted to settle all disputes."

Everyone who signs the pledge, "We follow Jesus and we work for Peace," becomes a member of the Crusade and is entitled to wear its button and is obligated to work for Peace.

The Bands are run by the children themselves, under the supervision of an adult advisor. They have their officers, committees, and a regular order of business, including a short peace program, at their meetings, which are held at least once a month.

If the children already have a Junior Christian Endeavor Society it is suggested that once a month a Peace Band Meeting might be held.

May not we have Peace Bands throughout all our Yearly Meetings? A booklet giving more details of the work may be had by applying to headquarters, Whittier House, Peace Band, Swarthmore, Pa.

Westbury, Long Island,
September 8, 1916.

Editor's Note.—The following extract from the booklet referred to will show what is being done in some places in this movement:

"Because of the success of this movement in one locality, where in six weeks over a thousand joined the Crusade, it has proved an effective method of arousing the interest of the young in the idea of peace and of securing their help in the furthering of the work."

THE LINE FRIENDS SHOULD FOLLOW

By ANSON COX

All seem to admit that the Friends' Church is meeting a grave crisis by the recent military enactments of Congress and the acts of the New York legislature and the possible action of other state legislatures.

I notice some Friends think that a negative position should not be followed. If by a negative position is meant that we should not bear a testimony against war as being contrary to the spirit and teaching of Jesus Christ and his Apostles, which was confirmed by the early Fathers for the first two hundred years of the Christian Era, I should seriously object. No substitutes for our doctrines which are in perfect harmony with their teaching can possibly meet the need of the present.

It seems to me that the greatest service possible which Friends can render bleeding Europe and military-crazed America today, is clear, definite teaching and practice of these precepts, abstaining at the same time from everything of a military character. My experience in bearing testimony against war during the Civil War, taught me that no compromise will stand the test before military authorities. With these, no mere sentiment, no opinion as to useless waste of life and property will avail. There must be positive teaching, showing, on Scriptural grounds, the sinfulness of this training of boys in the act of killing, and of girls to worship the hero who can kill the most. Just so long as these are taught, war, with all its savagery and brutality, will continue. Can Friends find a greater field of usefulness than to stand firm against this tide which has been thrust upon our country? Friends should not look upon a stand like this as an arbitrary stand on our part. It was thrust on us and if our position is in harmony with Gospel standards we cannot do less than stand by it though it costs position and loss of property, imprisonment and even life itself. Otherwise we shall be guilty of having a great work for the welfare of mankind committed to us and we to save ourselves from the consequences have, like cowards, betrayed our trust and left the poor old world to wallow in her own blood and groan out the miseries of the battlefield. All because God could not get a people to help him to show the world a better way. I am impressed with Mordecai's words to Queen Esther, "Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the King's house, more than all the Jews; for if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then there shall enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed; and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

Let us, as the only church in Christendom which has strongly advocated these principles, say with Esther, "I will go and if I perish, I perish."

A CONSTRUCTIVE, NOT A PASSIVE STAND, MOST NEEDED

Seal Harbor, Me., Sept. 9, 1916.

Allen D. Hole:

Dear Friend—In response to your article in last American Friend, I would say that it is most important that Friends (and all real pacifists) take a constructive and not passive stand on the subject of compulsory military school drill, etc. To be loyal, good citizens, we must help and obey the State, except in so far as it conflicts with our religion, then we must offer a real substitute. I think Red Cross work and Hospital Corps a perfectly legitimate and suitable substitute; even in war, such workers would help to succor the wounded and the maimed, not only for their men but exactly in the same way, the enemy-wounded. They seek to save, not destroy.

Friends must take greater and deeper interest in all civic and public questions, lending their education, time and ability in bettering conditions and raising the tone of public opinion. There has been too much indifference and aloofness; active constructive peace and public work must be encouraged.

Very truly,
RICHARD J. WHITE,

SPECIAL WAR RELIEF DAYS APPOINTED BY PRESIDENT WILSON

The following notice, printed in the American Friend of September 14th, is reprinted because requests have been reaching us asking what days have been designated and how material can be secured to prepare addresses or programs for the occasion. The address of the Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is 105 East 22nd Street, New York City, N. Y.

"By Act of Congress, the President has appointed October 21 and 22 as days for the relief of the suffering among the Armenians and Syrians. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will send out the appeal to all the churches for a generous response. The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief will seek to reach every community in the land, in an effort to relieve a distress greater than any the world has ever before witnessed.

"Pastors are urged to set apart Sunday, October 22, for this purpose. Sermon material will be furnished to all the pastors by the Federal Council."

MINISTERIAL PREPARATION

The following report was given full consideration by the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight of Indiana Yearly Meeting week before last, and was finally adopted substantially as read. The Yearly Meeting also approved the plan, and a Board of Ministerial Counsel and Preparation was appointed as provided for in the report, which is as follows:

Report

To Yearly Meeting of Ministry and Oversight:

Your Committee appointed last year on help in training the ministry propose the following:

Plan for Board of Ministerial Counsel and Preparation

The Yearly Meeting to appoint a committee of six persons, to be known as the "Yearly Meeting's Board on Ministerial Preparation." In order that they may be representative of the different departments of work, one shall be nominated by each of the following: 1. Evangelistic and Pastoral Committee; 2. The Foreign Missions Committee; 3. Home Mission Committee; 4. The Bible School Committee; 5. The Efficiency Committee; 6. The Indiana Yearly Meeting Trustees of Earlham College. These shall be ratified by the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, before being presented to the Yearly Meeting.

NOTE. The persons nominated need not be members of the Committee making the nomination. It is desired that they be persons best capable of training in Department work. The Home Mission nomination should be made with reference to Community or Social Service and Reform, including such subjects as Peace and Temperance. The Efficiency nomination should have reference to congregational organization for efficiency on the financial and business side. The nomination by Trustees of Earlham College should have in mind educational qualifications.

Soon after appointment the Board should organize itself and divide the members in three groups: one group to serve for three years, one for two, and one for one; and thereafter appointments should be made for three-year terms. They should formulate a course of study to meet the needs of present-day work and be ready to render such assistance as suggested in the following considerations:

Important Considerations

1. The duties of this Board shall be to serve as a standing Board of Advice and Counsel to those looking forward to the ministry, to advise them as to their preparation therefor, and assist them in that preparation, and to pass upon their qualifications in the matter of education and ability to take a proper leadership in fostering the departmental interests of the church. They shall also give assistance to those already ministers who desire help in better preparation.

2. The report of this Board in any case shall be given due weight by the meetings that have the authority of acknowledgment; but this should not in any degree remove the responsibility of those meetings to judge of the personal and spiritual qualifications of the party under consideration.

3. Persons having the ministry in view should be urged to get in touch with this Board as early as possible, for their sympathetic counsel and help. This introduction to their care may come through the persons themselves or through any meeting or friends who perceive the budding of the ministerial gift.

4. Such persons should be advised as to their educational preparation; and if they give evidence of a real call and gift should be assisted as may be needful in such educational preparation.

5. It should ever be borne in mind that such preparation does not in the least degree take the place of the divine call, and the divine preparation; its aim should be to secure the best possible equipment upon the human side for efficient service.

6. The purpose should always be the development of the highest possible efficiency in the ministry; but it should not in any degree block the proper exercise of all the varied gifts of the church, however humble they may be. It should rather cultivate in our more public ministry the desire and ability to make way for all gifts.

7. We suggest that the testing of the person's preparation should be upon a line of suggested topics as well as by a series of questions, so as to develop capacity for clear statement and individuality of method.

8. It is also the duty of this Board to advise ministers who seek it as to suitable books and literature for helpful reading courses, and libraries or publishers where they may be secured. And if it be found advisable they are authorized to inaugurate steps toward establishing a Yearly Meeting Library for such books as may not be otherwise within reach of our workers.

On behalf of the Committee:

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS,

Chairman.

MARY DOAN HOLE,

Secretary.

A FINE EXPERIMENT

On a recent Sabbath in a Friends meeting it was announced that the clerk would give an address at the Monthly Meeting on the next Wednesday night. When the time came he was greeted by a fine audience of older and younger people. A large well trained company of young people gave some excellent music in the way of sacred hymns. A number of people took vocal part in the devotional meeting and the clerk gave a most helpful talk about transacting business with dispatch and life. Following this the clerk exemplified what he had been talking about, with the result that everybody there wants to go back the next time.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DAY.

November 5, 1916.

We are again approaching the day of all days in the year that the young people love. A day set aside for special attention to young people and their activities. We again appeal to all pastors and presidents of Christian Endeavor and leaders of all groups of Young Friends, to set aside November 5 for these special services. Send to the Young Friends Board for further program, posters, and literature on the subject.

On this day the pastor will find his opportunity. What a privilege! Indeed, we do not presume to dictate what the pastor shall do. To preach a morning sermon applicable to Christian Endeavor or some phase of young people's work, is left to his prerogative. The fact that there is a new awakening among the young people, and that they are ready and anxious to be used in the service of Christ, and ready to dedicate their lives to some form of public service, presents a unique privilege to "draw the net."

We are secure in the loyalty of our pastors, and they will know as to the best method of procedure, which is left to their good judgment. One pastor, in planning to observe Young People's Day, prepared a program for the entire day. At the session of the Sunday School the president of the Christian Endeavor Society brought the greetings from his young people to the school and at the same time presented the advantage of Christian Endeavor as a training school, and its relation to the Sunday School as a teaching school. At the morning service the pastor preached to his congregation a sermon on "The Scope of Christian Endeavor." During the afternoon a reunion of the old and the new members of the Society was held. Many former members were present. This meeting was called a "remembrance meeting." The evening service of the church was united with the Christian Endeavor meeting. Here a splendid program was rendered. At the close of the day this congregation knew what Christian Endeavor meant.

However, such a program is not always possible, but the evening in this particular event should be used to celebrate the day.

Speakers may be secured from outside, from the congregation, or from the leaders of the Meeting. And here is another opportunity for the pastor to give a talk on the work of his young people and their relation to the church.

The Young Friends Board is preparing a program to be used on this day. These programs are to be ready by October 7 and can be had in any numbers upon receipt of application only. Other material also will be ready for boosting the day. Send in your orders for this material at any time, allowing time for preparation.

In the event that this program is not used the regular Christian Endeavor prayer meeting topic for the evening, "The Consecration of Social Life," 1 Cor. 9:19-23, will furnish abundant suggestions for a rousing talk. This, too, would be a splendid opportunity for the president, in a bright talk, to present "A Campaign for Millions" and the work of Increase and Efficiency. We ask that this day be used exclusively for Young Friends in some way, and that the offerings for the day and subscriptions be taken for the work of Young Friends throughout the Five Years Meeting.

This day will also open the work of ingathering. It will be work under the direction of the lookout committee. It will mean looking both ways, out and in. Of course, the whole society will work on this committee, because the field is large, and the harvest simply awaits reapers. Plan to single out your prospectives; make the point of contact intelligently; meet the members on their own level. Be tactful, diplomatic, and above all, do not forget to pray. Without prayer there will be no power. Your field is the Sunday School, your village, your town, your district, your city, your neighbor. Make your slogan, "The Entire Church at its Entire Task," then GET BUSY! A campaign of this kind, well planned, with a system to follow up with an earnestness and thirst for souls, will help to make this day both memorable and fruitful.

THE STUDY CLASS

The purpose of foreign missionary study is "to know the adaptability of our Christian faith to the minds and souls of the non-Christian people." By this means we shall acquire the conviction and vision of its universality, and be fired with the desire to set up the Kingdom of God both at home and abroad. Our faith will take hold of us with a reality and dynamic power unknown before; and, at the same time, move us to play our right part in the evangelization of the whole world.

Missionary study is essential as a preparation for service, wherever that service is to be done; for, "without the missionary outlook, there is lacking an essential element in the full understanding of the Fatherhood of God, the revelation of Jesus Christ, and the brotherhood of man." In a day when the contact between East and West is becoming continually closer, and when the nations of the East are rising to play a more important part than ever before in the history of the world, a right attitude towards the non-Christian races and a knowledge of the impact of Christianity upon them are very needful. To acquire these a study of the non-Christian countries or faiths is suggested. The course will include an examination of the geographical features, the social life of the people, their history, and their religions. Upon this will be based a study of the history of Christian missions in that country, the peculiar problems involved, the present position, and the prospects and outlook for the future. During the course it is hoped that no difficulties will be shirked, and that there may be full opportunity for free and frank discussion. Christianity has nothing to fear from such a procedure; rather will the very fulness of our knowledge of other religions reveal to us all that is laid up for us in Christ.

If Quakerism is, as many of us believe, a return to pure Christianity, and thus shows peculiar affinity and adaptability to the Eastern religious genius, the responsibility is the more urgently laid upon us of studying that type of mind and the means of laying before it the true message of Christ.

CHURCH AT WORK

Long Beach, California—The Friends meeting here has an excellent standing among the churches of this city. Andrew F. Mitchell, who has served us as pastor since June 1906, has been president of the city ministerial association of about twenty-five pastors for the past two years. The church auditorium has been retinted and painted and looks very cozy and clean. During the past ten years three hundred and sixty-four new members have been received and the membership has furnished a large part of two new Monthly Meetings which have been established within that period. The meeting has a printed prayer schedule running throughout the year, giving the date, the topic, the scripture reading, the name of the leader, the name of the leader in song and the name of the person arranging for the service each month. During October the topics are "Service," "How to Abolish War," "Constant Prayer" and "Knowledge."

Seiling, Oklahoma—Lindley A. Wells and son, Charles, held revival services here for eighteen days beginning August 24. The attendance and interest were both good. The ministry was clear scriptural and uncompromising. Church members obtained a broader and more practical view as to Christian experiences and service. Charles Wells is a success as a singing evangelist. Quite a number were at the altar for renewal and sanctification and claimed the blessing. While the immediate results were not as great as we had hoped for, we feel that the "seed sowing" has been a great blessing to the church and community. Since the meetings closed new seats and a new piano have been put into the church building.

North Weare, N. H.—Salem Quarterly Meeting which has been held here in October for one hundred and two years will this year be held at Lawrence, Massachusetts, on October 21, with sessions all day. There will be no Bible School Conference.

Russiaville, Indiana—On Sabbath, September 3, Rosa E. Lee, returned missionary from Ram Allah, Palestine, was with us at the evening service. Her message was very interesting and instructive as well as spiritual. On the following afternoon Miss Lee received callers informally at the home of the pastors, Walter W. and Mellie M. Brown. Over thirty ladies were

Announcement is made of the engagement of Eleanor Wood to John Pratt Whitman, of Tamworth, N. H.

George J. and Ethel Welker have given up pastoral work at Archdale, N. C. and will teach in the school at that place.

Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Young Friends Board of Activities, has entered upon a year's work at Columbia University.

Evelyn White of Knightstown, Indiana, has accepted a position as general secretary of the Y. W. C. A., Greensboro, N. C.

A successful revival meeting, held at Deep River, N. C. about a month ago resulted in about fifty conversions, mostly young people.

Professor Irving King, who is teacher in the Department of Education at Iowa University, spent a few weeks at Richmond, Indiana, during the latter part of the summer.

There were twenty-five Earlhamites at the University of Chicago and eleven at Columbia University attending the last summer session.

Robert E. Pretlow, pastor of the meeting at Seattle, Washington, together with his wife, attended the sessions of Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings.

Charles and Martha Wooten, after a month's rest among relatives in North Carolina, are back again in mission work among the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma.

Lewis W. McFarland, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work in North Carolina Yearly Meeting, is beginning the new year with great earnestness and systematic activity.

W. P. Haworth of Lawrence, Kansas, visited the Wyandotte Indian mission in Oklahoma during the month of August. He brought a very helpful message which was greatly appreciated.

Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Young Friends Activities, visited a number of meetings in North Carolina the latter part of August and the early part of September. His services were very acceptable.

The two brothers, Thomas Newlin, President of Guilford College, and Sylvester Newlin, pastor of High Point meeting in North Carolina, exchanged preaching places in a real brotherly spirit on September 24.

J. Walter Tebbetts, son of Chas. E. Tebbetts, was recently notified that he has successfully passed the fourth and last examination for admission to the Acturial Society as a fellow. He expects to remain a mathematician for The Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company at Newark, N. J.

Guliford College opened its eighth-ieth year on Wednesday morning, September, 6. There are several new members of the faculty, including E. Partington, Professor George and Professor Edwards. On the evening of the 13th, President and Mrs. Newlin tendered an informal reception to the faculty, the board of trustees and the advisory board.

BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD

Report to the Yearly Meeting

The Bible School Board met during the Yearly Meeting and organized, as follows:

President—R. R. Newby.
Secretary—Viola Smith.
Superintendent of Literature and Supplies—W. I. Kelsey.
Superintendent of Teacher Training—Anna Smith.
Superintendent of Adult and Secondary Department—Richard Haworth.
Superintendent of Elementary Department—Anna Swallum.

Ora W. Carrell immediately entered upon his work as Field Secretary. This has been done in conjunction with the Missionary and Christian Endeavor work, but they are all so closely allied that success along one line only aids the others and his work has proved very satisfactory to the Board. A plan of work pursued by Ora Carrell has been that of the conference method. He has conducted fifty-two conferences in as many different places, seeking constantly to better standardize our schools. He has also visited twenty-seven regular Bible School sessions and given a number of special addresses. Besides this he has distributed a large amount of literature and taken many orders for publications furnished by the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting.

Reports show that there has been more than the usual gain in the individual schools and doubtless this gain has been in no small measure due to the splendid work of our Field Secretary.

The work of the Board has been lessened because of the hand to hand, heart to heart, and mind to mind touch of the worker in the field. This has meant so much more than even the well-prepared letters which all too often have found their place in the waste-basket. The Board, however, had to do with opening the way for this direct service. They have also urged that Denominational Day be observed and Denominational Offering taken. Statistics have been gathered and various interests of the work promoted as it has been possible so to do.

It is a pleasure to be able to say that reports have been received from each school in Ackworth, Bangor, Bear Creek, Greenville, Honey Creek, Lynn Grove, Oskaloosa, Salem and Springdale Quarters.

Two Quarterly Meetings, Bangor and Salem, have this year reached the ten points in Quarterly Meeting Standard and are designated as Front Rank Quarters. This makes a gain of five points for Bangor Quarterly Meeting during the past year. Besides this they have organized three new schools which have been kept up during the summer.

Four Quarterly Meetings, Honey Creek, Greenville, Bear Creek and Springdale, have each made six or more points in the Quarterly Meeting Standard and are designated as Banner Quarters. This makes an increase of three Banner and two Front Rank Quarters.

Arnolds Park stands alone this year as a Standard School. Earlham, Des Moines and Center came within one point of reaching the Standard, and Oskaloosa, Marshalltown, Bangor, Stanford, Cedar Creek and Stockport were behind only two points.

Reports show that the work done by our Departmental Superintendents, together with the personal touch of the field Secretary, Quarterly Meeting Superintendents and the faithful workers at home, has brought results in the various departments. There has been a gain of 19 schools having Cradle Rolls, 10 having Home Departments and 10 using Graded Lessons; a gain of 32 Adult Organized classes, 13 Secondary Organized classes, 39 classes using Graded Lessons; a gain of 260 in the Cradle Roll, 140 in the Home Department, 78 in Teacher training, and 560 in the total enrollment; and a gain of 13 workers' conferences regularly held, and $20.32 in the Denominational Offering.

There have been 150 decisions for Christ from our schools and 105 have united with the church.

We have contributed $863.11 to missions and $115.81 to county and state work.

The following schools have contributed to Denominational Work, the total amount received being $84.19.

We would conclude our report with the words of our Field Secretary in his report to the Board: "It has been the united support of the workers of our schools, which has, in a human sense, made the work of this year possible."

Ora W. Carrell, Field Secretary, urged the necessity of definite goals for the Bible Schools for the coming year.

Ancil E. Ratliff spoke on Teacher Training.

W. D. Stem, General Secretary of the Iowa Sunday School Association, gave a helpful address on "The Growing Vision." He urged that we bring the Bible Schools to the place where they really meet the needs of every individual in the community.

PROHIBITION DEPARTMENT

The Committee on the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic organized September 1, 1916, by electing Philip Slack, Hillsboro, Iowa, chairman, and D. B. Cook, Earlham, Iowa, secretary.

The committee further organized by electing the following superintendents for departments of work:

Speakers, Philip Slack. His duty is to secure speakers for local and field work. Any locality desiring the services of a speaker may correspond with him and ask his assistance.

Literature, E. F. Hoag, Muscatine, Iowa. He is the official correspondent for the committee to The American Friend and other periodicals. Also can supply temperance literature for free distribution or for sale.

Legislation, George J. McClellan, Ackworth, Iowa. He will look after the enactment and enforcement of temperance and prohibition laws. Any locality wishing assistance in work of this character communicate with him.

Education, Hannah O. Conover, Oskaaloosa, Iowa. This department includes all educational work outside of public speaking, contests, programs, etc. If you wish assistance on these she can be of service to you.

Robert Lincoln, Grinnell, Iowa, is not yet assigned a department.

The report of the outgoing committee to the Yearly Meeting contained a brief tribute to the memory of Robert H. Williams, whose tragic death in the Penn College fire had deprived the committee of its valued chairman.

Also a resolution was presented and adopted by the Yearly Meeting endorsing the candidacy of E. T. Merideth for governor of Iowa.

AT SMYRNA, IOWA

Anna M. Farr and Mary E. Allen were with us on September 17. Their talks on missionary subjects were much appreciated. While here they organized a W. F. M. S. which started out with very bright prospects. Our work for the new year holds other promising features. The young people through their C. E. committees are starting the work energetically.

Subject—The Appeal to Caesar.

Lesson—Acts 25.

Golden Text—It is enough for the servant disciple that he be as his teacher, and the servant as his Lord. Matt. 10:25.

The misguided zeal of the Jews drove them to renewed efforts against Paul as soon as there was a change in government. Few better examples can be found illustrating the seriousness of a wrong course. Their belief that they were right did not save them from the condemnation of history. Their rejection of Jesus, Paul and the new faith has caused the race untold suffering and shame. Their record is no more bloody, however, than that of the Christians, whose persecution of the Jew continues in some sections of Europe until this day. Misguided zeal is a disastrous force, whether in nation or individual.

MOSES BROWN SCHOOL

Paul found it necessary to always be on the alert. The cunning of his enemies, the Jews; the duplicity of the Roman officials and the helplessness for the most part of his Christian friends made his position a trying one, but he found God's grace quite sufficient in those trying months.

The adverse conditions gave him some opportunities he might not otherwise have had. Hailed before different governors and visiting officials and their servants, he had splendid opportunities to preach to high and low. His behavior reveals to us the qualities of the man and the effect the faith had upon his soul.

His appeal to Caesar is an interesting precedent. To what extent a Christian should seek the protection of a civil, and in this case a non-Christian government, has been a mooted question. We are told that Ezra was ashamed to ask for military aid when crossing the desert from Babylon to Jerusalem. Jesus offered no resistance and little defense when arrested and brought before Jewish and Roman officials.

A certain Christian denomination has as little to do with temporal powers as possible, feeling that the Christian citizenship is in heaven. Many Christians are troubled over this dual situation. Paul's precedent and the general attitude of Christians indicate no scruples of conscience in this matter. To Friends an active participation in civil affairs raises a question of consistency when we refuse to bear arms in defense of the state. Our historical attitude has been consistent. We have always been ready to support civil affairs but opposed to military force, trusting rather to righteousness and justice.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

October 15

Tonic—"Public Spirit and How to Cultivate it." Ps. 22:1-9.

Christian Citizenship Sunday

Decorate the room with the American Flag. Arrange for a short address by some noted citizen: the mayor, a doctor, the superintendent of schools, or a teacher.

The following subjects may be given to the Endeavorers for short talks or papers:

"The Public School System."

(Its history, School Board, Teachers, Examinations, Discipline, Textbooks, Sanitation, Promotion of Scholars, Truancy laws.)

"Streets and Country Roads."

(How a new road is laid out; how kept in repair; how paid for. Sidewalks, Lighting of Streets, Importance of Better Roads.)

"The Temperance Laws."

(Local ordinances, State laws, Probable expense of saloons, Temperance education in the schools.)

"The Sabbath."

(New Sunday laws that should be framed, Church attendance, The theater and Sunday, What stores may remain open? The Sunday Saloon, Why these questions should interest the citizen and especially the workman.)

"The Social Evil."

(Attempt to find out just how matters stand in your community, both as to law and to fact.)

Sing patriotic songs and close with prayers for Universal Peace, Nationwide prohibition, and for the President of the United States and other officials who have to do with laws.

"Citizens in Training," by Amos R. Wells, is full of helpful suggestions. For sale by the Young Friends' Board at 35 cents.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

A Prayer for Peace

By MARTHA SHEPARD LIPPINCOTT

O, dear Lord of love and mercy
Send us peace upon the Earth;
Teach Thy children who are fighting
It's far more than gold is worth.
Teach them love will bring the blessings
Every living mortal needs;
Teach them love and peace to value,
E're another nation bleeds.

O, dear Father, let the war cloud
Pass forever out of sight,
That no more will men be fighting,
Happy homes and lives to blight.
Pity all the orphaned children
And the widows left to strive,
So that they may just be keeping
Their poor families alive.

Stop the war of greed for power
And the selfishness of men;
Let them try to earn life's blessings
Through the laws of love again.
O, dear Father, stop the carnage
And the awful deeds of war
Let the horrid, cruel war spirit
In this world be seen no more.

THE ROCK AND THE SANDS

Matt. 7:24-27.

By JENNIE E. HUSSEY

I built my house upon a rock,
In youth's abounding prime,
Where faith assured me it would stand
The ravages of time.
The air was clear, the outlook wide
O'er mountain, plain and sea;
Through open doors on every side
The winds of heaven swept free.

With windows toward Jerusalem
Each morning I could pray
The benison of God to rest
Upon the opening day.
And when the golden sunset light
Through western windows glowed,
It seemed to open to my sight
A glimpse of heaven's abode.

As time passed on I craved a change;
The path that reached my door
Was all too steep for oft ascent,
And many came no more
Who once had trod its heights with me
And shared the outlook fair;
They dwelt beside the restless sea,
And time passed lightly there.

I left my shining heights one day
And joined the throng below,
That I might walk and talk with them
And help their souls to grow.
We sought the Universal Good
And taught the law of love;
The deity of Christ withstood,
Placed human mind above.

I took a house upon the sands,
And many thronged its halls;
We studied social uplift there,
And higher duty's calls.
We quite forgot that sinful hearts
Had need of pardoning grace;
That God the light of life imparts
To men in Jesus' face.

But soon I found my spirit's health
Was being sapped away;
I missed my wide horizon's bound,
The winds of heaven at play;
And much I feared the storms of life

That beat upon the shore
And lashed the waves to angry strife
And boomed with sullen roar.

I climbed once more the old-time path
And sought my heart's true home
With firm resolve to there abide
And henceforth never roam.
And some who dwelt upon the shore
Have scaled the heights with me,
Where stands the Rock forevermore
Above time's changing sea.

Henniker, New Hampshire.

WITH THE EDITOR AND MANAGER

Quite a number of persons are taking advantage of our special offer and are sending in their subscriptions to receive The American Friend the balance of this year and all of next year for $1.50. This offer is still open and applies to new subscribers.

A minister at Western Yearly Meeting said that he would not take $5.00 for his copy of the Men's Conference proceedings. He said there is one address in it which is worth more than the fifty cents he paid for the entire book. A few more copies are still left. Price, paper cover, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Send orders to The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

The American Friend wants the really important news about the happenings in all Friends' meetings, Bible Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, missionary organizations, etc. Routine happenings are unimportant. We want brief accounts of the occurrences which have brought special blessing and inspiration to the local community. Send all news matter, together with contributed articles and correspondence about advertising to The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

The remittances for the relief work, which English Friends are continuing, have fallen off somewhat during the past week or two, yet the necessity for help increases and is likely to continue for some time to come. The American Friend will be glad to receive and forward all contributions for this purpose, whether intended for ambulance unit work, relief of aliens, the destitute in France, Belgium, Holland, Russia and Serbia or any other of the particular lines of service in which English Friends are now busily engaged. Send to The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

New subscribers can get The American Friend for one year and Charles M. Woodman's book, "The Present Day Message of Quakerism," for $2.00, thus saving 50 cents. Send orders to The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

Christianity In Deeds

When Jesus imposed upon discipleship the obligation of living in such a manner as to win others to the kingdom he paid rare tribute to the value of conduct in the realm of spiritual affairs. It was a new doctrine for Judaism, whose blind, machine-like obedience to law was wholly for its own sake. The Jew had not yet learned to be a missionary, not even among his own people. If he could succeed in keeping the law himself, he was satisfied, and it was a rare soul indeed who had any comprehension of the moral values of conduct in its relation to the lives of others.

Unfortunately, the Judaistic spirit has not yet perished from the earth. What multitudes there are today, in whose lives there is a complete divorcement of practice and precept! It is far too easy to overlook the line of connection between the room of prayer and the ballot box, between the sanctuary and the market place or between the roll of membership in the church and the arduous tasks of busy life in the domestic, social, industrial, commercial, political and diplomatic world. We have fallen upon an age in which professionalism in religion is a passport to respectability, and in which consequently the claims of the gospel upon deportment are discounted overmuch. Even the church is ready to tone down the standards of our Lord and assumes to be apologetic for the shortcomings of its members.

The program of Jesus involves not alone the preaching of the gospel, but the living of the gospel as well. By no other interpretation can we understand the meaning of his words: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Men are to be won to the kingdom through the lives and service of other men. We want to become like that which appears to be more perfect than ourselves. The exemplification of truth begets a desire for truth in others. The merchant who is willing to incarnate the gospel in his mercantile life will render valuable service to humanity beyond the selling of honest goods with which to meet legitimate needs. The farmer who impersonates spiritual truth at every turn of his farmer life will kindle a flame of spiritual zeal in the entire neighborhood. A Christian mechanic who carries the joy of the Lord into the workshop will send a glow into the lives of the entire circle of workmen about him. The contagion of a holy life is the most wholesome of all infections.

The church needs to learn that it is more than a fellowship, that it is a militant instrumentality for the spread of righteousness in the earth, that it must preach in deeds as well as words, and that faith and works are the dual parts of a practical program by which Jesus expects this world to be won for the kingdom of God. The world should be able to know by a man's business or professional life whether or not he is a Christian, quite as well as by the character of his countenance in the place of worship on the Sabbath day. When the moral life of the community is at stake, a man's ballot is the index of his Christian experience quite as much as the manner in which he sings the songs of Zion at the prayer meeting. The deportment of the student at the parlor social or at the football game registers the value of his Christian professions equally as much as does the character of his testimony in the Association hall.

The times demand a type of virile, practical, positive, Christian living that is able to express itself in terms of holy conduct, else the command of our Lord to go and make disciples of the nations must go unheeded. It is the time of all times when the Christian world cannot afford to be negligent of its obligations at any point. The civilizations of the Orient and the dark Continent and Latin-America are only now germinating. They must have the impress of Christianity now, or world Christianization must be doubly hard for centuries to come. Within a few months the broken civilization of Europe will be in the melting pot for refashioning. Whether or not it shall bear the stamp of the gospel or of materialism must be determined by the ability of the church to exemplify in practice the program of our Lord for the government of his world.

The call is coming to the Christian world to make good its professions in acknowledgment of the binding claims of the whole gospel propaganda as set forth by Jesus himself. No less a standard will suffice to save the world to Christianity. But the gospel program will become effective only when it finds expression here and there and everywhere in holy personality, obedient in word and deed to all the demands of righteousness in human life.

Young Friends and the Ministry

By MILO S. HINCKLE

If it is true, as it seems to be, that young Friends are not moving forward toward the ministry or exercising the gift in the ministry, there must surely be a cause. This cause, if definitely located, should receive the most profound consideration of concerned Friends, and all should be concerned.

Is it that God is not calling the young as formerly to this particular kind of work, or is he calling them to other phases of Christian activity, such as "social service," or is it that the young are not sufficiently spiritual to be subject to such call or to hear it, or is the work and worship of the church of such a character as to fail to produce the proper spiritual atmosphere or to discourage the development of the call, once it was recognized, or is the responsibility mostly on the eldership and ministry present, or have the rising standards of efficiency lessened the responses among the young and timid? What a many-sided question it is and how broad and careful must be any thorough consideration of the problem! It seems to us that upon neither of the possible causes suggested above can the whole blame be placed, and yet all of them, possibly more also, are jointly responsible for the present conditions that give interested Friends cause of deep concern. Briefly and only suggestively are these subjects discussed below.

First, is God calling them? We cannot believe that He is not, in the face of the great need of the world for the Gospel message. Home fields and foreign are suffering for lack of ministering servants. Most certainly God is anxiously yearning over the youth, that they might be thrust out into the harvest. But the many new lines of Christian work recently opened up to young people of talent, services that do not require the gift of preaching, have undoubtedly claimed a goodly number that otherwise would probably have become ministers. But the ministry of service in these other lines is not so conspicuous to us who feel keenly along the lines of this discussion.

Again, the recent Christianizing of avocations strictly secular, or rather emphasizing the ministry of work in secular activities as Christian service alongside of the ministry of preaching, which was formerly held to be the distinctively Christian service, has to our mind, had some bearing on the choice of life work of some earnest people. Finding that they could serve Christ in the profession or calling so dear to them, some possibly have gone that way who might have been ministers, under the impression that entire consecration would make either a minister or a missionary. No doubt many of these have been swallowed up in the secular phase of their calling and have failed to make it an avenue of service for the Church. In this, no doubt, English Friends have excelled us, for a great portion of their preaching is now being done by laymen, business and professional men, who hold uppermost their responsibility to Christ. We would encourage this type of ministry fully as much as the "recorded" or professional type, especially among Friends.

That a low degree of spiritual life answers our question is a sorry commentary on the fruits of our recent Young People's Activities, Organized Bible Classes, Christian Endeavor, Student Volunteers, Summer Assemblies, etc. In one meeting where a large number of young Friends were recorded ministers, the chief agency, or one of them, seemed to be an active Christian Endeavor Society. For some reason that Christian Endeavor Society finally dwindled and ceased to exist. There has been a corresponding cessation in that meeting of those coming forward in the ministry, due, we shall not say altogether to the loss of the Christian Endeavor Society.

Nevertheless, in the whirl of all the attractions of today, our most difficult task is to secure a deep, overpowering consecration on the part of our youth, that not only is a safeguard against the enticements of sin, but is a fertile soil for the reception of so tender a plant as the divine call to preach the Word. We are persuaded that a deeper spiritual life among our youth is the goal of our endeavor and will produce a much larger number giving themselves to special service for the Master.

Now, to the work and worship of the Church. Here we believe is a place for much thought. So much of the work of the Church is done almost irrespective of young people. Particularly in Monthly and Quarterly Meetings those who have done things, no doubt because they were used and so trained, are continually selected to do other things. Young people have a small part, if any, and hence are largely absent and disinterested. We note with gratitude signs of improvement, especially in our East Main Street local meeting.

But more discouraging than this to young people is the not infrequent wire-pulling, caucusing, doing things in a spirit and manner that do not manifest much of the bearing of Jesus as we preach him and testify of him. So it was in the meeting mentioned above that ceased to produce young ministers.

Little enlarging is needed here to make clear that the consecration of youth to the most sacred of callings is not born of strife and confusion in the body of Christ, for so the Church is to be. When we would rather lose any point of argument or advantage than run the risk of "offending one of these little ones," bruising a tender spirit just ready to bud and soon to bloom out into the exquisite beauty of timid though loving devotion to service, then will the Church bear fruit and love will find its own. One unfortunate contention might ruin forever the possibility of a youth dedicating the life for service.

As to the meeting for worship, the responsibility is no less, possibly greater. Our meetings have taken on so much of the "delegate body" effect that comparatively few individuals seem to feel any responsibility beyond listening. Possibly there is too much to listen to and so becomes distracting. No hard and fast rules can be offered to govern a meeting for worship, either that it be on a basis of silence or otherwise, for such makes it a formal affair immediately.

But, if our meetings are becoming mostly preaching and singing, is not the responsibility more on the older Friends than on the youth or even the ministry? Young Friends most generally follow the example of the older, both in activity or in silence or even inactivity, for the last two are not necessarily synonymous. As for the minister he is the servant, not the manager of the meeting. Friends should therefore be perfectly free in conserving the best interests and liberties of the meeting for worship. This means a close walk with the pastor that will make mutual counsel the most natural and acceptable thing. Certainly no minister is wilfully monopolizing a meeting to exclude the service of others or to emblazon his own. If he is and will not relent, save the meeting at the expense of removing the pastor.

A meeting for worship should be as free and spontaneous in its exercises as it can possibly be made. Service to fill a program or because of the compulsion of embarrassment is hardly a voluntary offering and can never reach the volume of power that spontaneity affords. There should always be ample opportunity for the free exercise of every one's gift, even if the preaching of the pastor be sometimes shortened or even omitted occasionally. But older Friends should, it seems to us, be reasonably prompt in the right use of such opportunities. The young will rarely go ahead of their elders and superiors. It is possible that a negligence of older ones to speak in meeting, or an impatience to hear the sermon may have a serious bearing on the activities of the young that means so much to their development. We, therefore, feel that a large degree of responsibility rests upon older Friends who know the Lord and are capable of speaking, at least briefly, in the public meeting. Especially is this true at times when special opportunities or appeals are made for public prayer and testimony, a kind of service that ought always to be perfectly agreeable in a Friends' meeting for worship, and acceptably consistent with our modern ideas of propriety and order. We believe it to be true that whatever value has been gained in the regular pastoral ministry, it has come at tremendous cost in the loss of free expression on the part of non-ministers.

The problem is then, clearly, the adjustment of a consistent pastoral system in our Friends' democracy. We believe that such satisfactory adjustment is not impossible. Much responsibility rests with the elders in guarding the ministry against pastoral officialism on one hand, and in seeking a perpetual freedom of expression and service on the part of others, being extremely careful to be faithful themselves.

However, it is possible and likely that no one person is so responsible as the "pastor in charge." That is the difficulty that he or she is too often "in charge," a situation not productive of the best returns in a Friends' meeting. When Friends borrowed the pastoral idea from other denominations, they borrowed also too much of his relationship to the meeting, which in most churches is one of "official charge," a sort of "master of ceremonies," the leading spirit and spokesman of the congregation. This idea will never fit harmoniously into the democracy of Quakerism, unless Friends surrender that sacred democracy to a "one man" leadership and become content "to be like others."

A Friend recently expressed most admirably the better idea of pastoral relationship among us when he introduced his pastor to a stranger as "the pastor IN our meeting." A world of difference lies between "IN" and "OF" as regards the adjustment of pastors to Friends' meetings. This Friend's conception, expressed by "IN," makes the pastor only one of the workers and responsible leaders in a meeting. His line of activity is only one of those that make up even a meeting for worship. In harmony with this, our Discipline does not recognize any official prestige as belonging to the minister, even though he be a pastor. This consideration is brought alike to the attention of ministers and elders, for both are responsible for the proper adjustment.

On the minister's side, the problem is complex. He faces a congregation that is increasingly impatient for the sermon and the special music, and likewise indifferent or opposed to the congregational services. Not infrequently, if the minister happens to hold their special favor, they object to the ministry of visiting pastors or evangelists. Especially do they grow restless if a Friend in the meeting has a concern to speak in the pastor's stead. All of this brings a sort of unpleasant compulsion upon the pastor and makes him serve so constantly that he grows unconsciously into the place of directing the entire meeting and taking most all the time. Too often the eldership shares the congregational spirit mentioned above, and passively submits to the infringement of Friendly liberties. At any rate, it is the present-day problem of the eldership to seek a proper adjustment, both from the standpoint of the congregation and the pastor.

But that is not all of the pastoral problem. Not all of our pastors have the conception of Quaker democratic ideals. Some of them have come from the ministry of other churches, and naturally have retained much of their former pastoral officialism. Many have not taken the pains to study carefully the mechanism of a Friends' meeting and ideal, so as to get hold of their own proper relationship to it. With these, the pastor is the head of the meeting and the preaching is the most important factor of the service. The natural result is that the congregation does nothing but listen and try to obey specific directions from him. Their own gifts are dwarfed and finally lost. The idea of individual worship is almost forgotten. There is little left to call forth the talents or develop the capabilities of other individuals. If one felt the call to the ministry, the chance to move forward in its exercise and development is exceedingly small, if it exists at all. Indeed, this is not an overdrawn picture of quite a considerable number of present-day Friends' meetings. Does it not seem reasonable that our productiveness, especially as relates to the supply of ministers, should materially decrease under the foregoing conditions? One of the best possible remedies for the foregoing situation, it seems to us, would be to see that pastors come in touch with the Friends' Conference at Winona (now Cedar Lake). Another would be a study group, including the pastor, on the history and ideals of Friends.

Another factor in our problem may be the rising standards of efficiency in the public ministry. Realizing the increasing demands made upon the ministry in harmony with the ever-growing intelligence and visions of the congregation, we have moved forward (and properly so) in the preparation and training of the minister. This has proved good and measurably successful for the purpose that led to it, the better instruction for the congregation. On the other hand, it has increased the distance between the ability of the minister and that of the average young person in the congregation, developing a timidity on the latter's part that keeps him from attempting service in the presence of one who can speak so much better. And when he attempts to go out and help some other meeting, they meet him with a demand for a high grade of work, and again he is made to feel the lack of room.

All this is not as it should be. Efficiency in our ministry should be encouraging rather than discouraging to our youth. The matter here seems to be one of attitude and tact on the minister's part. Possibly his occasional absence from the meeting without placing an expert in his place would afford opportunities for the development of others.

All in all, we are persuaded that various forces are playing on our meetings with a tendency to decrease the number coming forward in the ministry. It is a matter of serious concern and should receive the most devout attention and application of our best endeavors to re-establish such conditions as will be fruitful of a much larger number of consecrations to the service of the Master.

AN IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL

By HELEN VOTAW M'KAY

I attended the funeral of Charles Coffin and wish I had words to tell of my impressions. The Quaker church is a very old two-story building with the meeting room upstairs. There are ten rows of benches in the center section and seven on each side, with a long bench across the platform in front for the older people. The entire west side of the room is a yellow glass window. The church is on a busy street, but the harsh sounds that came into the solemn quiet of the room as we waited for the funeral party were strangely far away. The silence was scarcely broken as the funeral party entered.

I cannot describe the service or the atmosphere of that little room. My heart had that intangible swollen feeling and my throat ached as I sat through that thanksgiving meeting, for such it was. There was nothing to regret; he had lived long and they said well. They called him their father, lovingly spoke of him as one who had been their counsellor and guide. A gray-haired man who had sat beside him at the head of the meeting for thirty-four years paid him a high tribute. He said that during all those years they had not once made an agreement as to which should preach the sermon. Sometimes one and sometimes the other received the message. There had been times when neither felt called to speak, so they held their peace and the whole meeting was silent unless some one else was moved by the Spirit.

Here, then, was a quiet place where the moving of the Spirit had been obeyed in this city of hurry and confusion. The little reed organ droned out his favorite hymn, "When the dear Saviour shall bid me come in, I'll enter the open door." There was a long period of impressive silence only broken by the hymn, "Abide with Me," sung by a male voice accompanied by the organ. The sun was low in the west and the mellow light which poured into the room seemed softest around the casket as it was opened and we walked past. I cannot describe my feelings as I gazed on his face for the first and the last time.

Such gentleness and refinement! I have never seen another face like him. He surely was one of the elect. I could realize why they had given thanks for him and why they said he was not dead. I cannot find words to express the effect it had on me. It was like a beautiful picture from first to last. It was not sad any more than some wonderful scene which brings tears to the eyes, or music which brings a lump in the throat. It left the impression of something great and beautiful and unspeakable.

THE PRIESTHOOD OF BELIEVERS

By AARON M. BRAY

The doctrine of The Priesthood of Believers is poorly understood by many of our members. In order to understand this doctrine we must study the methods of approach to God that have been used during the entire time covered by the Bible.

The duty of the priest is defined in Hebrews 8:3, "For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices." That is, gifts and sacrifices for himself and for other people. The first account of worship found in the Bible is that of the offerings of Cain and Abel. No other direct reference to the matter of offerings is made prior to the flood. In the case just mentioned the individual acted as his own priest. Following the flood and continuing during the patriarchal age, the head of the household acted as priest for his entire household, including his retainers. The most notable of these are Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Job.

When Israel was called out of Egypt and received the law at Sinai, a marked change was made in the priesthood. All religious functions were confined to one tribe, and the duty of making offerings was confined to a single family, and all the male members of said family were made priests by reason of birth. It was further made a serious crime for any but the descendants of Aaron to attempt to make offerings to God. It is well to bear in mind that the priests became such by birth, but that they were not allowed to perform priestly functions until after the lapse of about thirty years, when the body was made ceremonially pure by the washing with water and the head was anointed with oil and the priestly garments put on.

The priests now became the only means of access to God. Rites and ceremonies in endless round were all the poor hungry sinner could see, and yet these did not satisfy, as can be seen in the heart-cry of many, as recorded in the Old Testament. When Christ cried out on the cross, "It is finished," the old ritual law ended and on the day of pentecost the new dispensation, the dispensation of the Holy Spirit, began. The old priesthood was done away and a new priesthood instituted.

A new high priest was chosen, "Seeing, then, that we have a great High Priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession." "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchizedec." For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. The high priest being changed, and the law governing the priesthood being changed, the lower order, the common priests, must be changed. Peter, writing to the strangers in certain countries who were "elect according to the foreknowledge of God, the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you and peace be multiplied," said: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

While the priesthood has been changed, and the law has been changed there remain some things that are alike. Under the old law each person became a priest by reason of birth; under the new law the priest becomes such by reason of the new birth. In either case the office is held for life. Under the old law while birth determines his office, yet the official duties are not performed until after the anointing services at the age of thirty; under the new law while the birth inducts the person into his office so that he may offer such offerings as may be possible, he is not fully set apart until he receives the baptism with the Holy Spirit, receives the cleansing of the heart and puts on the robe of righteousness, all typified in the ceremonies connected with the induction of a priest into his office.

Under the old law the priest must offer for himself and for others, under the new law the priest can offer for himself only and never for another. Under the old law the high priest made an atonement for the sins of himself and then for all the people once a year; under the new law our great High priest has made an offering for all the people once for all, this he accomplished by offering himself.

Since the change of the priesthood and a special class with special duties connected with a ritual has been done away and all who have been born of God are priests unto God, it follows that all rites and ceremonials can no longer continue, because rites and ceremonies belong to the old dispensation and have no place in the new, because there is no one in authority to perform the rite or engage in the ceremony.

The doctrine of the priesthood of believers can be stated in a sentence as follows: The sinner in the depths of despair, without God and without hope, can go direct to God and receive from him all that it is possible for God to bestow upon a human soul, and all this can be done without the aid of priest or the imposition of priestly hands.

It may be put even more forcefully, such a seeking soul will find that he will have to do just as stated above. This does not mean that intercessory prayer is not helpful, or that proper teaching is not beneficial, but it does mean that in the final analysis the soul must go direct to God for himself.

If the foregoing truth concerning ordinances were generally accepted by the Christian world it would be the greatest step ever taken and would greatly lessen the task of bringing salvation to the great mass of lost humanity.

WORLD CONFERENCE OF FRIENDS

Swarthmore, Pa., Ninth Month 21, 1916.

Dear Friends:

The following matter on a proposed Conference of all Friends is sent to you as a matter of information with the hope that your interest and co-operation may be extended in carrying out the plan when it takes official form.

Very truly thy friend,
Benjamin F. Battin.

Minute of London Yearly Meeting 1916

Third-day Afternoon, 30th of Fifth Month.

88. A suggestion has been made that a Conference be held of all those who bear the name of Friend, with the object of giving full consideration to the deeply important subject of how to secure a general and lasting peace. In connection with this we have been reminded of the loving expressions of sympathy contained in the American Epistles, and particularly of the offer of co-operation in the Epistle from New York Yearly Meeting, held at Glen Falls in Fifth Month, 1915.

The proposal has met with a good deal of support, and we decide to refer it to the Meeting for Sufferings, asking it to consider how far it is desirable and practicable, and giving it power, if thought well, to take steps to carry it out.

This minute was referred to the Peace Committee by the Meeting for Sufferings in 7th Month.

Isaac Sharp.

Recording Clerk, per W. S.

Minute of the Meeting for Sufferings London Yearly Meeting

4/VIII/1916

Benjamin F. Battin, of Swarthmore College, Pa., is present today and has told us that in the course of his travels both in neutral and belligerent countries he has found a general opinion that the Society of Friends should have a valuable contribution to the problems of reconstruction. He, therefore, welcomes the idea of the proposed conference of all Friends, and thinks it might well meet in England. If English Friends should see their way to invite such a Conference to meet here the arrangements must be taken in hand in good time. He feels sure that his own Yearly Meeting at 15th and Race streets, Philadelphia, would welcome such an opportunity, and believes that the experience of Friends in belligerent and neutral countries would be mutually helpful.

A suggestion has been made in view of the work at present demanding the time and strength of English Friends, that possibly American Friends would be willing to organize the Conference should this course seem best.

We are thankful for Benjamin F. Battin's presence and help today, and ask him to convey to American Friends our sense of gratitude to them for the sympathy he has expressed.

Isaac Sharp,

Recording Clerk, per W. S.

Cablegram from London dated Ninth month 1st, received at Swarthmore Ninth month 2nd, 1916.

Meeting for Sufferings decides peace conference of all Friends probably London after close of war.

Sharpe.

Addressed to Benjamin F. Battin, Swarthmore, Pa.

At Elm Ridge, Darlington, 10 Aug., 1916.

My Dear Dr. Battin:

I was hoping I might be able to have a word with thee about the proposed Friends' Conference. I am sorry I did not get a talk when we met, but a line is better than nothing.

I am glad thee is taking the matter up and I hope that we may be able to move forward together. I shall be very much interested in hearing how the plan is received in America. I am chiefly concerned in writing to mention two matters.

(1) If the conference is held, it is all important that we should gather together the very best minds in the Quaker community. I hope that it will be a very carefully chosen gathering, that every person chosen will be enabled to attend. Colleges, Friends' firms, etc., should liberate their members and funds should be provided where needed, to secure substitutes. This may be the largest service Friends have ever been called on to render and we are lacking in constructive statesmanship. We need to summon all we have. We need, further, to meet in a deep spirit of expectancy and in humble waiting upon God; for without His manifest guidance we cannot make any contribution in the least degree adequate to the situation.

(2) We need very thorough preparation — and for this we cannot begin too soon. Small groups of Friends should at once begin to prepare memoranda on certain broad principles that we should agree upon. We ought to think out the particular line along which our special contribution can be made, and what we cannot do as a religious Society. We ought to get clear on such questions as disarmament as a national policy, the international use of force, relation of a Christian nation to the less civilized peoples, especially in the British Empire, etc. There are many questions on which I don't think this generation of Friends have done any really constructive thinking. I want to see very careful preparation in the form of memoranda that would be read and studied by all before the conference.

I hope these two points will be very fully before thy mind in bringing the proposal before American Friends.

Ever thy friend,

Henry T. Hodgkin.

A TIME TO DARE EVERYTHING

(From The Continent)

Election day of 1916 is to be one of the most crucial of all battle grounds between American sobriety and the American saloon. In all states where the issue is directly joined, it behooves Christian people to be up and doing as never before, and out of all other states every possible encouragement should be sent across state lines and every possible prayer sent up to heaven.

What today the world—even the world of liquor-makers and liquor-drinkers—expects of the church is to make good on its avowed enmity to alcohol.

When the question is up there is nothing for church people to do which will get them any honor in the communities where they live but to stand out in vigorous, virile, vehement, even violent fighting antagonism against the whole drunkard-making occupation.

And it won't suffice for just the ministers and a few church officers and the militant women of the Christian Temperance Union to make the fight alone.

The credit of the church goes down unless every private member, young and old, is out in the open with every hazard staked on doing all the harm he can do to the saloons.

Particularly is this imperative in the new, comparatively unformed community conditions of Montana, Alaska and parts of South Dakota, where as yet churches are weak and their prospects uncertain. In all such regions this can be set down as a bankable proposition:

If all church members solidly make an uncompromising fight against liquor while this fight is on, then, win or lose, the churches will acquire with their non-church neighbors a respect and influence of better value than any other human asset in reach.

But if church members in this test try to walk cautiously and not offend anybody—content themselves with voting right secretly and making no outspoken attempt to swing the vote of their fellow-citizens—the church will lose more than mints of home mission money can repair.

For the church that isn't alive and fearless enough to go hard against the whiskey trade when it has a chance is too spineless and aimless a concern to interest the American west.

Not simply for the sake of temperance but for the sake of religion in its highest reaches, the churches are bound to put forth the extreme of their energy in every one of the critical prohibition battles of this autumn.

Naturally the saloon bandits will use every possible means of intimidation and even of persecution to keep church members silent through campaign time and away from the polls at election.

But such as encounter threats and troubles of this sort must ask themselves what they would do in the trenches in Europe.

Would they slink off when somebody threatened to hurt them?

Men over there enlist to give their lives for their native lands. They would rather die than see their nations perish.

America will be destroyed if the saloon masters this nation.

Will they, then, quail at anything necessary to preserve it?

ANNUAL BOARD MEETINGS

A number of the Boards of the Five Years Meeting will be in annual session at Richmond, Indiana, next week. These will include the Executive Committee, the Foreign Missionary Board, the Peace Association, the Board of Young Friends Activities, Publication Board, Committee on Arrangements, Committee of Seven appointed at the Men's Conference, and probably others. On Thursday morning, at South Eighth Street meeting house, there will be a conference of all the Boards present, and the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting will hold its opening session that afternoon.

THE HIGHER LIFE

THE MEANS OF GRACE

There can be no expectation of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, nor of achievement on the part of the Church, unless she make diligent use of the means which God has appointed for her growth in knowledge and her advance in grace. Many a Christian and many a church are in a shriveled condition because they do not use the means which God has appointed for their development.—Presbyterian.

PRAYER AND POWER

If you want your spiritual life to be more healthy and vigorous, you must just come more boldly to the throne of grace. The secret of your weakness is your little faith and little prayer. The fountain is unsealed, but you only sip a few drops. The bread of life is before you, yet you only eat a few crumbs. The treasury of heaven is open, but you only take a few pence. O man of little faith, wherefore do you doubt?

Come boldly to the throne of grace, where the Father is ever waiting to give, and Jesus stands by Him to intercede. Come boldly, for you may, all sinful as you are, if you come in the name of the great High Priest. Come boldly and ask largely, and you shall have abundant answers, mercy like a river, and grace and strength like a mighty stream. Come boldly and you shall have supplies exceeding all you can ask or think. Hitherto you have asked nothing; ask and receive, that your joy may be full.—Bishop J. C. Ryle.

OKLAHOMA INDIAN MISSIONS

WORK OF THE ASSOCIATED EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FRIENDS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

OUR OKLAHOMA WORK

By CLARK BROWN

The old time idea of the American Indian, such as we read of in our histories years ago, held him up as a real savage, almost naked or dressed in buckskin, wearing some kind of head gear decorated with feathers. His weapons of warfare were the bow and arrow, the tomahawk, scalping knife and warclub. He was considered a good-for-nothing Indian, ready to take any one's life in order to wear the scalp-lock at his belt. This may in some measure have been the case during the early settlement of our country when the white man was most generally the cause of Indian troubles, but it will not do for this day. While the older and uneducated ones still cling to many of their old customs, they are a peaceable people, even among our most primitive Indians. The old accoutrements of warfare have long since been laid aside. It is very seldom that you can find an Indian that can make any better bow and arrow than a common schoolboy.

Friends Mission work among the Indians in Oklahoma consists at present of seven mission stations with missionaries at each point. Two mission properties, Iowa, from which the Indians have removed until it was deemed advisable to close the mission, (this may be sold ere this is in print) and the Ottawa property where they are expecting to furnish their own pastor. Our mission stations supported by the Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs are as follows: Seneca and Wyandotte eighteen miles apart in the extreme northeast corner of the state, Otoe and Osage in the north-central part, Shawnee, Kickapoo and Big Jim slightly east of the central part.

Seneca is near the Missouri line four miles from Tiff City, an island postoffice where the missionary receives his mail when he makes the trip after it. This mission has a nice church building and home for the missionaries on 40 acres of land. Harvey and Elizabeth Wallace have been there eleven years and the people are wanting no change in missionaries. Whites and Indians attend services. It is fourteen miles to rail-way station.

Wyandotte, two miles from the town of Wyandotte, is nicely located near the Wyandotte Indian agency and school. Services are held at the school building and once each month in the town of Wyandotte, in the Friends church, which congregation is made up principally of whites. Isaac and Laura Frazier are on their fourth year. Their work is among the school children, Bible school and evening services, and visiting the Indians and whites in their homes. A few acres of ground belong with the mission.

Otoe Mission is located near the Otoe Agency and school. Frank and Allie Hatcher are nearing the close of their first year there. Their work is with the school children in Bible school and evening services. They also attend services occasionally at the Indian camps, giving them the gospel by an interpreter. They are seven miles from Red Rock, their post office, though their mail is delivered daily R. F. D. They visit in the homes of the Indians also. Services are held in the school chapel, the mission farm, 40 acres, being about a half mile away.

Osage Mission is located in the town of Hominy. A good dwelling but no farm and no church. Daniel and Hat-tie Williams are the first and only missionaries there, having gone from Otoe mission to this work over seven years ago. This is one of our most primitive Indian fields. Wealthy but "heap Indian ways." They look with disfavor upon any kind of an organized effort to get the children to train in "white man's ways." Visiting Indian camps and in the homes they are made welcome.

Kickapoo Mission is some 15 miles from Shawnee near McLoud on the Rock Island Railroad. Charles and Martha Wooten are on their second year, having come from the Iowa mission. 160 acres belong with the mission. The church work at the mission is a white work almost all together, Indians have to be reached in their homes and at camps. Elizabeth Test who started the mission and Lina B. Lunt for many years associated with her reside at this mission.

Big Jim Mission, 21 miles southwest of Shawnee is, like Kickapoo, a white work at the mission, Indians very seldom coming. These, like Osages, are of the old type of Indian and are hard to change to white man's ways. Austin and Irene Hatcher have been here since 1912. They reach the Indians in their homes and occasionally at camps. Many Indians visit them during the year. 40 acres with the mission.

The Superintendents live at Shawnee. This is like the Psalmist describes Mount Zion, "beautiful for situation." Our mission is located two and one-half miles south of the city of Shawnee, and two and one-half north of Tecumseh, the County seat of Pottawatomie County. We are along side of the Shawnee Indian School, carried on by the government. We have a farm residence and barn and a cottage for the sexton who looks after the cemetery, the records of which we have to keep in shape. 120 acres of land at this mission, some have 40, while others have more even than we have. The missionaries are supported by contribution from the Yearly Meetings and individuals who are interested in the Indian work.

The Associated Executive Committee mostly made up of members from each Yearly Meeting look after collecting in and paying the monthly support of the missionaries, which is very small as compared with what an ordinary business man has to live upon, besides he must be ready to divide time and money and eatables with any who shall call upon him. He does his own janitor work, pays his own fuel and light bills and makes up if the collections are not enough to pay out on Sunday school literature, and yet you will never hear him murmuring. He would not be a good missionary if he did.

If time would permit we should like to say many things about our missionaries, but can only say a few. We have a real consecrated, sacrificing lot of missionaries in this work. Many privations and many hindrances, but with faith and will they move on. The results are so immeasurable that it seems discouraging at times but the only way to look at this kind of work is through years or decades, then you will see results.

We have been for years in pastoral work and have seen some large sacrifices made in this line, but we do not think they will compare with this Indian work. A pastor can lay out his work with some regularity, a missionary never can for his work is so varied that he can do only what is right before him. He may decide to work on his farm today, in a short time some one comes for some kind of assistance and he has to go and lend aid, it may be to visit some one, or to meet some one who is on the way to visit him, any way your work is forgotten in other matters.

Then we never know when we are to have visitors. Indians come at any time and especially about meal time, and just drop in and get a meal and go on, or maybe come in the afternoon and say, "Want to camp (stay all night, supper, breakfast, maybe to dinner, then go home.)" The Indians visit a great deal among themselves and whether they find any one at home or not they visit. If Little Ax goes over to visit with Jo Big Horn and finds no one at home, they having gone to visit another tribe, Little Ax just goes in and lives there maybe a week if it suits him and helps himself to any luxuries he can find and nothing thought of it, but when they visit missionaries they usually tell how long they wish to be your guest and if you say "No, give supper, camp, and you must move on" they are not at all insulted, and will say then they start, "Come again sometime."

Some real business-like Indians never think of "camping" unless invited, no more than you would think of doing so without some kind of invitation.

There are many hindrances to work among the Indians a few of which we shall mention. Friends suffer to some extent in mission work because the other churches have some kind of outward ordinances which appeal to the average Indian. In places, doctrinal differences are very marked.

Our work is slow on account of the restlessness of some of our tribes, they spend a few months here and then off to Mexico or somewhere else.

Many of our middle aged men in some tribes are Peyote eaters and this is of no help whatever to any missionary. The peyote is a dried cactus which grows in Mexico and while it is a violation of law to sell it to Indians yet it is smuggled in some way and they have it at their meetings to pass around and they eat it mumbling some kind of prayer, if a Christian it will be a Christian prayer, if a heathen, then some heathen ceremony. They also have the mescal button or bean, which steep into a strong drink and it makes drunk and is used in some of their meetings. The peota keeps them awake and they will sit for hours while eating it, but when it dies out in them they are dead asleep for hours and they claim it causes them to see visions, helps them to keep from whiskey drinking and many other wonderful feats. It is their holy spirit that brings blessings to them.

The "bootlegger" is also a menace to the work, as well as the money shark who is after the Indian's possessions.

Often some well educated Indian will join in some of the old-time dances with those who can never be changed it seems to civilization and it is hard on the missionary to argue that education and Christianity change people's lives.

But with these and many other discouragements, there are many things in all our mission fields to cheer our hearts. Many Indians have good homes, are good farmers, and year after year new members are added to this industrious army. They are being taught by the Government and missionaries many sanitary precautions as well as how to get the most out of their farming. Many are well able to give reasons why they do certain work on the farm, plant certain grains, etc. The children in school are taught many industrial traits, such as judging stock, grains, fruit, etc., also how to care for same. The future of the Indian depends upon the training of the children, so our missionaries are all zealous for the children.

Now the children are what we are mostly interested in for they are our congregation. From six to sixteen years old. All Indians, about 90 to 110. All dusky faced, some good looking, some not so much so, but real rough featured Indians. We have our chapel just across north of our residence, about 100 feet away, and adjoining the government school grounds. The children come at 10:00 a. m. to Sunday school, some get good lessons, some do not. We use Cook's papers and quarterlies and these supplies are kept up by the weekly contributions as well as the first Sunday of each month sent to our missionary treasurer. We use the crayon and paper in chalk talks to the children, and also use lots of good stories as they like either a chalk picture or a mental picture that they can grasp. Oh, how the missionary longs for a "grown-up" audience once in a while to preach to.

Some of the children have money of their own, some work and earn some to spend, but an Indian does not know the value of anything it seems. The government furnishes them with good clothes, food, books, etc., and is doing a good work, and in most places is helping in the Sabbath school and church work all the officials can.

Indians are usually very slow to take up with strangers and of doing anything different from the old ways of their fathers. A missionary can hardly get into their homes at all for a year or so, and they do not hesitate to tell him "We do not want to learn white man's ways." Then later when they form an attachment for the missionary they want no change. And a new man would have to begin and learn it all over and get them to take to him.

Many of the old-time superstitions have about disappeared. One is that if one is sick a white man must not be permitted to come into the house or teepee, "Bad luck." This is fast disappearing unless it is in some old Indian home who never can be taught anything. Among one of our tribes they had a custom of burying with the face to the south. "Come from north, go south, face south" (sitting posture). They also killed a pony at a funeral and gave away all property, but our missionaries staid and preached to them and instructed them until now they bury like other people. They would put up a large American flag over the grave and whoever went first to the grave on the fourth morning could take the flag and keep it. Our missionary told them that he would like a flag so they said "You be first, get him" so he went not very early but got the flag as it was understood among them that he should have it.

Among some of our tribes they still wrap their dead in bark for burial. In spring when elms can be peeled they cut round a tree and slit the bark up, making two pieces. This they take off and when it is needed they soak it in water so as to make it conform to the body and after wrapping it well with narrow strips of bark, they bury just where they take a notion at the time, in the yard, field or cemetery. These still cling to the idea of giving away all property of the deceased and generally the "Medicine Chief" has this in hand, and we doubt not but that he gets plenty for his work. While the Indian's make-up is of a stolid matter of fact kind and it is not always easy to joke him, yet he likes a joke if he understands it and likes to get a joke on the other fellow. Many of them can tell funny stories of their experiences changing from Indian's ways to civilization.

John Snake tells us the following which happened when he was a boy. He is now one of the main interpreters for the Shawnee Government Agency. When a boy he came to Shawnee in company with his father, Jo Billy and others. It was a cold time and they had been housed at a boarding house, and having their own eatables along, wished to cook some for supper. A cook stove was arranged in one room for all who might wish to do their own cooking. They were all ignorant as to a stove, having never had any experience in running one, but Indian like, instead of getting information, Jo Billy went and got quite a wisp of hay and stuffed in to the oven of the stove and touched it off. The hay burned fine, but somehow the house filled with smoke instead of going out at the pipe. The abundance of smoke soon brought the proprietor to the rescue. He then gave the proper instructions and they had their meal. John has been well versed in cook stoves since he now has a wife who is the cook at the Government school and John is there quite often.

How You May Help.

You may ask, "What can I do, or what can our Sunday school, Missionary Society or C. E. do to help out in this work?" And we can only partly answer as there are so many ways.

1. Cash is always in order, and costs very little to send it. It will always be used to best advantage and reported to senders, and also in our monthly reports to the Committee. (Don't send any money to turn over to the Indian, as all Indians who will take care of their money are well cared for by the government, and those who will not do so are not fit to handle money of their own.)

2. Good Stories will be a great help to the missionary, who has to talk to Indians, as he can often fasten truth upon their minds with a good story. (We have the David C. Cook papers and stories from them are read by our boys and girls.) Clippings of stories or short truths outside of the above will be greatly appreciated.

3. Pictures which illustrate some good truth will be enjoyed by both old and young, for you must remember that an uneducated Indian, be he old or young, is looking for easy lessons.

Do not send anything until you write to Clark Brown, Shawnee, Oklahoma, as oftentimes goods sent there are to be forwarded on and it is easier to send direct if you will tell him what you have and who for. Now while the Indian is cared for, the Missionary could be helped much from some of the good libraries, which have been read and just standing idle doing nothing in many Friend's homes and the owners are wishing someone had the books to use. Try it and see.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

Friday evening, September 22, in connection with the formal opening of Pacific College for the year, the friends of the institution celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of Pacific for college work. Friends Pacific Academy was organized in 1885, but it was not until 1891 that college work was undertaken and Pacific College incorporated.

The gathering was presided over by Ezra H. Woodward, who was president of the original academy board, has been on the board of managers ever since, and is now and for many years past, president of the college board. He interspersed the program with many interesting reminiscences of the earlier days.

The audience, especially the new members of the college community, both faculty and student body, were greeted by Mayor Jesse Edwards, who was also on the original academy board and has been in the work of the institution ever since. He gave interesting memories of the old academy days, and on behalf of the city spoke of the appreciation of Newberg for the college and its work and influence. Prof. Mark C. Mills, the new head of the history department of the college, responded to the mayor's greeting on behalf of the faculty and students, and spoke appreciatively of the impression made upon him by the college and the town. He mentioned especially the way in which the college management and faculty have evidently been able to make much out of little, and with meager equipment do a work that many schools with many times the advantages do not accomplish.

Clarence J. Edwards, a son of Mayor Edwards and one of the two members of the first graduating class of the college in 1893, spoke for the alumni and the old students, and gave interesting anecdotes and incidents of the earlier college days. His address was listened to with great interest, especially when he dealt with some of the former students of the college, one of whom, Herbert C. Hoover, is head of the Belgium Relief Commission, and feeds millions of people every day.

Messages were read from the former presidents of the college, which were very touching to those who had worked with them during the pioneer days of the college. There have been three former presidents, Thomas Newlin, now president of Guilford College, after years spent at Whittier College as president; H. Edwin McGrew, who went from Pacific to the pastorate of Whittier meeting, California; and Prof. W. Irving Kelsey, now teaching in Penn College.

The closing address was given by President Levi T. Pennington, who spoke on "The Present and the Future." He reviewed the progress of the past six years, during which the college has raised over $150,000, much the largest part of which came from the same few Friends who have been supporting the college from its very beginning. The progress has been remarkable in the past six years, and President Pennington predicted a still greater advance, under the blessing of God, during the coming four years. It is hoped that before the present Freshman class are graduated that Pacific College may be an institution whose standard will be recognized throughout the country. It will be necessary to raise not less than another $100,000 to accomplish this, but it is believed that Friends in America will come to the aid of Oregon for the accomplishment of this end.

Music for the anniversary occasion was furnished by the faculty of the School of Music of the college, and the evening was a most enjoyable one.

The college has opened with promise of a very successful year. Already the enrollment is greater than for the entire year of 1915-16, and there will be several more entering yet this semester, with further additions the second semester. The new business course is proving attractive, and the other departments are well filled. The entering Freshman class is much the largest in the history of the college.

"PUTTING THE BIBLE INSTITUTE ON ITS FEET"

The Cleveland Bible Institute has prospects for one of the best years in its history if present indications mean anything. A much larger number of applications for admittance has been received than is usually the case and it seems now that our capacity is to be reached before the opening of school, October 3rd. The Faculty is now all arranged for and several members are already on hand, making preparations for the year's work.

The buildings are being thoroughly cleaned from basement to roof, and everything put in first-class order.

No one can estimate the forces that have been set in motion by this institution during the last quarter of a century for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Practically without resources, naturally speaking, this work has gone steadily forward, often in the face of prediction of failure and even stubborn opposition, and God has wonderfully answered the prayers of consecrated hearts on its behalf.

It is altogether fitting that this, the 25th year of the Institute's existence, should be the crowning one so far. At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees the financial needs of the Institute were carefully considered and the decision reached that we should undertake the raising of $25,000.00 as a 25th Anniversary Fund, and our secretary, Edgar A. Wollam, was liberated for this task. This amount would clear the institution of the $10,000.00 debt which it has carried for years, leaving the balance for the beginning of an endowment. Although this seems a small amount of money for such a work yet we only want to undertake what we are able to do, and this we feel sure can be realized. Ohio Yearly Meeting made an appropriation for the work this year for the first time.

Plans are now being perfected for the celebration of our 25th anniversary with suitable exercises. A conference of pastors and evangelists is to be an outstanding feature of this occasion. Joseph H. Smith, Dr. H. C. Morrison and others will be present. We are anticipating a time of great blessing for all who love the truth. We also want that this occasion shall be a time of reunion of former students. Now is the time to begin to lay your plans to come.

There are hundreds of people throughout the country to whom the Institute has ministered either directly or indirectly but who have never had the opportunity to share in the work. Now is the time for such as these to help. Give of your money as well as your prayers that this institution may fill a larger place in the work of the kingdom than ever before. All subscriptions are to be made payable on or before June 1st, 1920. Any amount, however small, will be gratefully received.

CLINTON CORNERS

From a recent number of the Albany, N. Y. Journal.

Ever hear of the Friends? Some used to call them "Quakers," and some do yet. Away down south, in Dutchess county, live quite a number of live wires wearing the plain grey of the Quaker faith. They have established a real church in the face of real obstacles, and are doing good work right where it needs to be done—at home, in the rural districts. To these people the problems of maintaining the "faith of their fathers" have been partly solved by arousing deep interest among the young people of the church and surrounding country in simple Christian living. And they get a lot of fun out of it, too. Straw rides, hay rides, auto rides, sleigh rides, wagon rides, surrey rides—to say nothing of ice cream and lemonade and watermelon and cake, and pie and doughnuts. Are the young people really interested? Twenty-five came out along hot, dusty roads to a hot, breezeless church to attend the regular Sunday evening meeting on Aug. 6. Remember that night? Where were you? Ten to one you were not in church. But these young people were. It's a real thing to them, in fact in the rural community the church has wonderful possibilities. It's up to the young people to make them realities.

How long did these twenty-five stay? From 7:30 until 9 p. m. None of your three-quarters hour meeting for the Quakers! The evening meeting is theirs and they know it, and this was a consecration meeting! Do you comprehend?

Who are they? The pastor is Mr. Hoffman, a man who has given valiant service in this church and has won the respect and support of his members. Henry Burkowske is president of the society; Edward Sitzler, vice-president; Mary Bedell, secretary and assistant organist; Harry Lovelace, treasurer, serving as organist. The committees are: Lookout, prayer meeting, social, missionary, flower, temperance.

The church is happy in its ability to command the services of Miss Drumm, Sunday school superintendent, and one of the most efficient district school superintendents in New York state; a teacher, in church and public school, worthy of the honors that are hers.

If you have never joined your thoughts to a live Christian Endeavor society in a section of the country away from home, do so. It will make you regret those occasional lapses into the gloom that hides your finest prospects whenever you lower your vitality and weaken your faith.

A WIDELY KNOWN FRIEND

Ipswich, S. D., Aug. 30—Dr. Ellwood Chappell Perisho, president of the South Dakota State college at Brookings, and Inez E. Beebe of this city were married here today at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Marcus P. Beebe. The simple service of the Friends' church was used, with Dr. Earle Pierce of Minneapolis, formerly of Ipswich, officiating. After the wedding a public reception was held at the Beebe residence—a large number attending. Mr. and Mrs. Perisho will take their honeymoon trip over the Great Lakes.

Mrs. Perisho is a graduate of the State university and of the National Y. W. C. A. Training School of New York. She was for some time associated with her father in the bank of Ipswich, after which she served as college Y. W. C. A. secretary of South Dakota; later as general Y. W. C. A. secretary at Kansas City; and still later as general Y. W. C. A. secretary for the Southern states.

Dr. Perisho, now president of the South Dakota State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, and a life long member of the Society of Friends, was formerly dean of the college of Liberal Arts at the University of South Dakota. His work as State geologist, his successes on the lecture platform and director of institutes has made him one of the most widely known men in the Northwest.

THE IOWA PAGE

"THE MEANING OF MISSIONS"

ORA W. CARRELL, Field Secretary to the Missionary Committee.

We are just entering upon another church year. Wherever we live or wherever we serve, to proclaim the Gospel will be our common task. Throughout the year the one great work in which we shall all be engaged is that of Missions. A clear idea of the meaning of missions is absolutely necessary if our work this year is to be effective.

There are those who do not have a clear idea of the meaning of two very common terms, Home and Foreign Missions. Because of this there is confusion in the making up of Statistical Reports and amounts often credited as "Home Missions" should not be so included. Prayer for our home fields is often weak and inadequate because there is no clear understanding of the term, "Home Missions." In this article I hope to make clear the true meaning of Home and Foreign Missions and present them from the viewpoint of the Missionary Committee of our Yearly Meeting and the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions.

First of all, what do we mean by Foreign Missions? There is little if any confusion on this point. Clearly, whatever land or people is removed from our own would be considered as a Foreign Missionary field. Such countries as India, China, and Africa are for us foreign fields. There is little danger of misinterpreting the term "Foreign" Missions.

The meaning of the term, "Home" Missions is not always so clear. Many people consider that when they help to build or repair their parsonage or Church building, or when they help in the support of their pastor they are helping to support Home Missions. Our Missionary Boards, however, would hardly so regard it.

Let us consider a truer illustration of Home Missions. A struggling Sunday school in a Western State is meeting in a school-house. They undertake to build a Church adequate to their needs. Now if a Meeting here in Iowa decides to send them $50.00, such an amount could properly be regarded as contributed to Home Missions.

Or, if one of our Meetings should contribute to the support of work among the Mountain Whites, such support should be considered as Home Missions. Or, if we, give of our time and money to the uplift of the American Negro, such service would be regarded as Home Missions. Similarly, work among the Indians would be that of Home Missions.

Up until the present war, the immigrants of well nigh every Nation under the sun have poured into our country at the rate of one million every year, and so we have the great immigration problem. We do not grasp the enormity of this problem here in the Central West but if we go a little to the East or to the West the tremendous needs of these peoples will be apparent. Yet right here in the cities and country places of Iowa we have many more of these peoples of foreign birth than we realize. Survey your own city or neighborhood and see if this is not true. Some of our Meetings in the West are carrying on work among the Chinese and Japanese while those in the East are engaged in work among the Portuguese and peoples of other nationalities. Such service is the work of Home Missions.

At the beginning of this year I urge that we strive to see what the Home Missionary problem is as related to our own country and to our own neighborhood. It may be that you should organize a Sunday school in some neglected portion of your city; it may be that there are peoples of Foreign birth living near or within your neighborhood to whom you can carry the Gospel message. It may be that God would lay upon your hearts the burden of the Mountain Whites, the Negro, or the Red Man. With the same entreaty I urge that we listen yet more carefully to the words of our Master—"Go ye—into all the world—and preach the Gospel to every creature;" and going, that we render full and rich service on the foreign field.

I dare not close this article without adding one more thought. It may seem contradictory to all I have been saying. I have thus far been speaking of Home and Foreign Missions as though they were two separate and distinct things. I wish to say here that in reality there is no such thing as Home and Foreign Missions. They seem to be necessary terms that we may make our meaning clear, (although often we do not understand them when we use them!) But they are but relative terms at the very best. It depends upon where I stand as to whether I am inside or outside my home. The location of the house is not altered in the least by where I may be. I was reading the other day of the new law here in Iowa affecting Insurance Companies. No foreign Insurance Company can send out their agents or do business within our State unless it has established a Home Office in one of our towns or cities. And what does the law mean by a Foreign Insurance Company? One of the London or Russian Companies? Most assuredly such a concern would be so considered. But the law simply means that any Company located outside the State of Iowa is a Foreign Company. Accordingly, a Company of Hartford or even of Chicago is a Foreign Company. That is, it is foreign so far as Iowa is concerned. In this sense, the word "foreign" is simply a relative term.

A Chinese Christian now living in Peking learns of the great needs of his people who live in San Francisco. He says to himself, "I must become a Foreign Missionary and go to America." But we would not so regard it—we say that such work in San Francisco is Home Missions.

One of our young men comes to feel in a keen sense the needs of the peoples of India and goes in response to the call of His Master. We call him a Foreign Missionary and his work that of Foreign Missions—but it is not such to the Christian converts of India who are seeking to get their neighbors saved. It is Home or Foreign according to where we stand. How must it all look to God who has created of one blood all the nations of the earth? God's viewpoint forbids that we define His work in exclusive terms of "Home" and "Foreign."

The work of the Kingdom is just Missions to the heart of the Father. He would that "all men, everywhere, should repent and come to Him." He would that we, His followers, should help to win the peoples of all nations back to the heart of God. This is His summons to us—particularly to us of thrice blessed America—"Ye shall be My witnesses both in Jerusalem," (beginning at home,) "and in all Judea and Samaria—and unto the uttermost part of the earth!" How largely will Iowa Yearly Meeting fulfill her obligation this year in the contribution of Money, Men, and Prayer?

C. E. DEPARTMENT

Ackworth C. E. has sent in the following items.

Cecil Hefley went as a delegate to the Young Friends Conference at Cedar Lake, Ind.

The C. E. of Indianola held a joint meeting with us here in July. August 1st our Society held a joint meeting with the Indianola Society and one with Motor August 27.

Our young people went to Middle River and held a meeting the second Sunday in August.

The way Ackworth Society is working with the other Societies is commendable. Such interchange of visits does much to stimulate interest. Other Societies may well follow their example.

The resolutions adopted by the C. E. Union at Yearly Meeting follow. We hope every Society will have them read and discussed at an early session. The third resolution is quite important, and in order that it may be more easily carried out, our secretary will mail to each Society a suggested budget plan. If you will try it we feel confident it will assist in raising funds for all lines of your work.

Please report to Cassa Conover, Oskaloosa, Iowa, the amount your Society will pledge for the work of the Union this year.

Resolutions.

Feeling the need of a forward movement in the work of the young people for Christ and the church, and desiring to encourage definite achievement, we propose the following goals.

First, That prayer be made a definite part of each committee meeting.

Second, That groups from each local Society visit other Societies and meetings which have no Society, and conduct services for young people.

Third, That each Society adopt the every member canvass. The executive committee should make out a definite program of work and decide on a budget to provide for local and Union expenses, the support of the Young Friends Board, and an offering for missions.

Fourth, That the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent of young people's work arrange for at least one young people's rally during the year.

Fifth, That we raise $850 this year, $400 for work in Jamaica, $50 for the Young Friends Board, $350 for the Field Secretary, and $50 for other home expenses.

Sixth, That we secure the enrollment of all Young Friends for the Young Friends Board, and for the C. E. Union of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Seventh, That we continue our work in the Millions Campaign on the points proposed last year, with the addition of some points suggested by the Young Friends Board. The following standard to be reached this year:

200 New converts.
225 New church members.
100 New Endeavorers.
12 New C. E. Societies.
20 Societies using Efficiency Charts.
140 New C. E. experts.
180 New members of the Peace Union.
40 New comrades of the Quiet Hour.
80 New members of the Tenth Legion.
80 New Life Work Recruits.
8 Quaker study classes.
8 Mission study classes.
4 Peace study classes.
40 Subscriptions to The American Friend.

The Executive Committee shall be responsible for the direction of the work proposed and shall divide the duties among its members as they see fit. We urge that they secure reports of the work accomplished to be published in The American Friend, and give further recognition as they may plan.

We desire to express our appreciation of the work done by Ross Hadley, Mary McPherrin and Clarence M. Case in conducting the study classes at the Yearly Meeting, and also for the services of the Oskaloosa Endeavorers in arranging for the social hours.

CEDAR FRIENDS' CHURCH

Last Sunday was a day long to be remembered at Cedar. George J. McClellan, who has been pastor of the church for the past three years, preached his farewell sermons to very large audiences, about 200 being present at the morning service and 125 at the evening service. The subject of the morning sermon was "Forward," using Ex. 14:15 as his text. The spirit of God was wonderfully manifested during this service. At the close nine persons, three men and six young people came forward and bowed at an altar of prayer and gave their lives to Jesus Christ. It was a most wonderful and touching scene, there was scarcely a dry eye in the large audience. At the close of the sermon George McClellan read a few verses of his own composition entitled "Forward," which appears in this issue of the News. The subject of the evening sermon was "He Sought to see Jesus." Quite a large number of people were present at the morning service from Salem and Mt. Pleasant. Mr. McClellan has pastoral charge of the Friends' church at Ackworth, Iowa, the coming year.—Salem, Iowa News.

FORWARD

By GEORGE J. McCLELLAN.
Ex. 14-15—"Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."
Forward! be our watch word.
Steps and voices joined;
Seek the things before us,
Not a look behind;
Burns the fiery pillar
At our army's head;
Who shall dream of shrinking,
By Jehovah led?

Forward through the desert,
Through the toil and fight;
Jordan flows before us,
Zion beams with light!

Forward, when in childhood
Buds the infant mind;
All through youth and manhood
Not a thought behind,
Speed through realms of nature,
Climb the steps of grace;
Faint not, till around us
Gleams the Father's face.
Forward all the life time,
Climb from height to height
Till the head be hoary,
Till the eve be light.

Forward, flock of Jesus,
Salt of all the earth;
Till each yearning purpose
Springs to glorious birth,
Sick, they ask for healing,
Blind, they grope for day;
Pour upon the nations
Wisdom's loving ray.
Forward out of error,
Leave behind the night;
Forward thro' the darkness,
Forward into light!

Glories upon glories
Has our God prepared,
By the souls that love Him
One day to be shared;
Eye hath not beheld them,
Ear hath never heard,
Nor of these hath uttered
Thought or speech or word.
Forward, marching eastward,
Where the heaven is bright;
Till the veil is lifted,
Till our faith be sight.

Far o'er yon horizon
Rise the city towers,
Where our God abideth,—
That fair home is ours;
Flash the walls with Jasper,
Shine the streets with gold,
Flows the gladdening river,
Shedding joys untold.
Thither, onward thither,
In Jehovah's might!
Pilgrims to yon country,
Forward into light.

NEWS NOTES

The October issue of Friends Missionary Advocate is a Jamaica number and is most interesting and instructive.

Friends should not forget to tell others that new subscribers can get The American Friend the balance of this year and all next year for $1.50, the price of a year's subscription.

Later visitors at Kansas Yearly Meeting last week included George H. Moore, of Bloomingdale, Indiana; Edgar T. Hole, missionary to Africa, at home on furlough, and I. Gurney Lee, of Vermilion Grove, Illinois.

A largely attended reception was given the new pastor, Charles M. Woodman, and family by members of West Richmond meeting, Indiana, on the evening of September 28. About two hundred persons were present and it was a most enjoyable occasion.

There is a Real Difference

Cream of tartar, derived from grapes, is used in Royal Baking Powder because it is the best and most healthful ingredient known for the purpose.

Phosphate and alum, which are derived from mineral sources, are used in some baking powders, instead of cream of tartar, because they are cheaper.

If you have been induced to use baking powders made from alum or phosphate, use Royal Baking Powder instead. You will be pleased with the results and the difference in the quality of the food.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO.
New York

October 20, or until the business coming before the Committee can be transacted. If Thursday afternoon should be needed for a second session of the Conference of members of all Boards, the first session of the Executive Committee will be held at 7:30 P. M., Thursday.

It is also understood that the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board will meet some time within the week, but information as to the exact time has not reached the undersigned.

Very sincerely,

ALLEN D. HOLE,

Chairman Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting.

CHURCH AT WORK

Millbrook, N. Y.—Millbrook Meeting and Sunday School have had much encouragement from the interest and earnestness recently shown by members and attenders. A series of sermons on the messages to the seven churches was given by George B. Evans, which pressed home the duties and the rewards of the consecrated church. On September 24, Carolena M. Wood, L. Hollingsworth Wood and wife were acceptably present, and on October 1, we had the help of a brief message from Alfred Garrett, who was present with his family. This day was Rally Day for the Sunday School, which had been closed for several weeks by the Board of Health as a precaution against infantile paralysis. The young people had beautifully decorated the room with flowers, and special exercises of speaking and singing had been prepared. Most of the old scholars and a number of new ones were present and enthusiastic. The Sabbath evening meetings have been conducted by George Evans on evangelical lines, and have steadily increased in numbers and interest. After an earnest sermon, founded on the story of Naaman, "But He Was a Leper," five hands were raised for prayers and at a little after meeting for seekers, one young man accepted Christ. The earnest work of George Evans and his wife, who is the efficient superintendent of the Sunday School, is making itself felt by the blessing of the Lord in the whole community.

One thing is clear in regard to every trouble—that the natural way with it is straight to the Father's knee. The Father is father for his children, else why did he make himself their father?—George MacDonald.

AN ECHO OF MISSION STUDY

One Sunday evening last May, I visited the Berwyn Presbyterian Church, twelve miles southwest of Chicago, in order to attend a public meeting of a certain Mission Study Class which had recently closed a six weeks' study of Burton's "Comrades in Service." The enthusiasm of this class had been felt even outside of its membership (which was limited to twelve), and the pastor had requested a public meeting that all might hear a little of what the class had found so interesting.

The leader of the class, a girl who is a Friend but living far from Chicago Friends' Meeting, explained that they had met Sunday afternoons in the homes of different members, had enjoyed Sunday evening lunch together after each meeting, and had gone together to the C. E. meetings later. She promised us a reproduction, as nearly as possible, of one of their meetings, including even an echo (though censored) of some of the frank discussions they had had upon practical problems of present-day Christianity raised during their study.

With their chairs grouped about a little table on the platform, the class then told over again and discussed for our benefit the story of "Chundra Lela, a Pilgrim of India" who, they told us, had been one of the favorites of their course. Perhaps you, too, know the story, which came to us bit by bit from the ten members present, of the seven-year-old bride, the nine-year-old widow, the long weary pilgrimages and self-inflicted tortures which dragged out Chundra Lela's girlhood and young womanhood yet brought no peace to her seeking soul; and then how Light came, came through an American missionary, and Chundra Lela found the Christians' God. The terrors of breaking caste were explained and we marveled at the courage one woman may have, thrilling with wonder at her later life of service and joy which even to the last pled for "a house by the side of the road, where the races of men go by," that she might even from her bed tell the good news of the Gospel! One young man in the class won a spontaneous burst of applause from the congregation when he illustrated his remarks upon dress in India by donning before us the native costume, including the turban, six yards long, which he wound deftly about his head and held erect with amazing ease.

The leader told us that the class had made the acquaintance also of Jacob Riis; of Burns, the "Man of the Mountains"; of Li Bi Cu, a woman physician in China; and of other "Comrades in Service," whose lives had impressed them deeply. The constant theme of their course had been, "What did these people do with the gift of life?" and "What will we do?" As a partial answer to the latter question, members of the class told of their resolves to

1. Help from a Junior Mission Study Class for children.
2. Write letters to Dr. Li Bi Cu.
3. Visit and learn more of mission work in Chicago.
4. Organize another study class next fall and have some public debates on vital topics.
5. Send a representative to the Lake Geneva Missionary Conference this summer.

Most of these resolves are already being carried out.

MEXICO TODAY

By George B. Winton.

Price, cloth 60c, paper 40c, prepaid.

Discount of 10% on orders for 10 copies or more.

This is the book recommended by the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions for adult study classes this year. We believe it to be the best single volume now available on Mexico.

Free printed helps will be sent to the leader of each class reporting its organization to the Board of Missions.

All correspondence and orders for books may be sent to the assistant secretary whose address appears at the top of this page.

LIGHTNING KILLS OXEN

Under date of August 6th, Arthur Chilson, acting secretary of our Africa Mission, writes as follows: "I have just received word that lightning struck and killed 22 oxen belonging to the industrial department of the Mission at Kaimosi." These oxen cost about $20 apiece. This notice reminds us forcibly of the necessity of providing a more adequate means of transport for the Africa Mission. The nearest station is 16 miles from the railway, while it is 75 miles from the end of the railway to Kitosh, the station at the northern end of our field. Under such conditions, the problem of transport is at best a difficult one. In the judgment of the Board and the Field Committee, a steam traction engine and freight van will meet the need most satisfactorily. It ought to be supplied at once.

A VISIT TO MATELUALA

During the last few days of September, Solomon Tice found it possible to make the journey to Matehuala in the state of San Luis Potosi, Mexico. This is the first visit to that station by an American worker since last February, and during all this time the officers of the Mission Board have been eagerly awaiting further news from that isolated station. Knowing that many Friends have shared our anxiety, we reproduce here a few paragraphs from Solomon Tice's letter of September 28th, written at Matehuala.

"I find the work here in excellent condition considering all the drawbacks. Miss Castillo is a host in herself. She has kept both this school and the one at Cedral going, looking after the hiring of teachers, and the paying of them, and the taxes, has kept church, prayer meeting, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor going without interruption except in time of the fiercest battles. Even during the intervention excitement last June, they went ahead with their church services, while an anti-American demonstration was in progress in the plaza about a square away. The membership has been very faithful in general,—though some have fallen away,—and has helped much. I have had the pleasure of preaching to them four nights in succession with an attendance of from 28 to 36 and with the best of interest and attention.

"There is little or no typhus here now, only now and then a case, though there is much destitution. There have been no deaths from starvation that I can learn of, but many are in such a weakened condition that when intestinal fever attacks them they haven't sufficient resistance and many die from this cause. The American Smelter people did heroic service in combatting typhus before they left last March and the smallness of the number of cases now is probably due to their campaign against it then.

"Travel between here and Monterey is still rather unsatisfactory due to the irregularity of trains. I was on the road from Monterey two days and two nights when it should have required only one night. Travel from Matamoros to Victoria is about on schedule time as formerly.

"There is a great deal of sickness at Victoria though but comparatively few deaths, mostly among children, I am told. Malaria and intestinal fever are the chief maladies. Yellow fever was reported at Tampico the day I left Victoria, but I give it no credence without better confirmation, since the trains are running as usual and are not quarantined."

Subject—Paul's Defense Before Agrippa.

Lesson—Acts 26.

Golden Text—I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision. Acts 26:19.

Paul was still in chains. The malice of the Jews and the heartlessness of the Romans gave no promise of a speedy relief. The situation, however, was making it possible for him to preach the gospel to some very influential members of the government circle. Paul was learning not only to be content, regardless of his circumstances, but to represent "Jesus Christ and him crucified" even at the court of governors and kings. Gospel success today often seems less dependent upon soundness of doctrine than it does upon the energy of its representatives. It often amazes us when some false teacher arises and builds up a large following, but the secret of it may be found in the zeal with which that teacher propagates his ideas—the children of this world are still sometimes wiser in their generation than the children of light.

Paul in his address before Agrippa showed himself a master of courtesy. It never pays to be rude or uncouth. Some of us may be less fortunate than others in this respect, but "good taste" can be cultivated. A young minister, an able and promising pastor, was recently severely criticised by a sensitive member of his church for his poor English, another was said to select coarse illustrations. In these things we too often offend and offending fail to represent Christ as we should.

Paul was supposed to be defending himself, but so great was his skill and so tactful his speech that his hearers saw the Christ in His glory and felt the power of the gospel truth. So it ought to be. Of some men it is said "he is a great orator." "That was a splendid speech." Of others little or nothing is said or thought, but the hearer goes away thoughtful and determined to do greater things. With Paul it was "less of self and more of Christ," hence the effectiveness of his message.

"Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." A passage variously interpreted. Some think that Agrippa was so thoroughly convinced that he was almost ready to become a Christian, while others see in their statement nothing but a gibe at Paul's religious zeal. This difference of opinion is to be expected. The occasion of the remark makes it impossible for us to know the king's real feelings. He may have been deeply affected by Paul's message. He may have been made angry. He may have thought it great sport to be thus preached to by a "mad fellow." Men fighting conviction often assume antagonistic or baffling attitudes. They may try to drown the accusing conscience by plunging into greater excess. It was hard for Paul to "kick against the goads." Had he mistaken conviction for temptation? Was he endeavoring to efface the vision of Stephen's martyrdom by being more zealous in keeping the law? Probably. But it was impossible. Paul's conversion seems to have been very sudden. It is, however, quite probable that the fires which had been smothered back for some time suddenly burst into full flame that day on the road to Damascus. A young man, according to his own confession, knew he was called to the ministry, he did not want to preach. He quit school that he might not be intellectually prepared. He began to drink—fleeing to Tarsus. He laughed at and tormented young converts, but the conviction would not down. He went to a revival meeting after drinking heavily that he might cause a disturbance. But he went to the altar that night and in drunken speech consecrated his life to God. He is an honored minister today.

We cannot know what a man means by his remarks. Paul waved aside the gibe—if it were one—and preached Christ the more earnestly.

NEWS NOTES

Ida Curtis, of California, has accepted the pastorate at Laporte, Ind.

The meeting at Oakland, California, celebrated its eleventh anniversary on September 10.

The important classes in the Biblical Department of Friends University are all unusually large this Fall.

Paris Newlin, of Haviland, Kansas, is the Republican nominee for the Legislature in his county this year.

Noble C. Trueblood has resigned the pastorate at Laporte, Indiana, and has accepted the pastorate at Cherokee, Oklahoma.

Willis Beede of California has published a series of notes on mission study class work for the use of leaders of classes.

Naomi Harrison Jay of Whittier, California, is spending a few weeks with relatives and friends at Richmond, Indiana.

Francis Wright, Sr., and wife of Kansas City, Missouri, spent a couple of days in Richmond, Indiana, week before last.

Mary Ann Coffin, mother of John and Dr. W. V. Coffin of Whittier, California, passed her ninety-fifth birthday on September 2.

Morris Kimber, son of John S. Kimber, formerly of Newport, R. I. has taken charge of the Biblical Department at Whittier College.

Westtown School opened this week, after postponement for a month as a precaution against possible infection of the infantile paralysis scourge.

Sanford and Blanche Ford Pickering have accepted the pastorate at Huntington Park, California, and began their work about the first of September.

Sarah Ellis of Whittier, California, has accepted the position of Immigration Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. to the Japanese and Chinese women at Angel Island.

Two village churches in Indiana Yearly Meeting are in need of pastors. Communicate with Truman C. Kenworthy, Superintendent, Richmond, Indiana.

Imelda Tebbetts, wife of Charles E. Tebbetts, has been quite ill for the past three or four weeks, but is convalescing in a hospital at Richmond, Indiana.

Prof. Wm. L. Pearson, head of Biblical instruction at Friends University, after spending five weeks in a hospital in Colorado the past summer, is able for work again and is at his post in the University.

Fred Kludas and wife and Florence R. Smith, of California, Evangeline Reams of Columbus, Ohio, and S. E. Nicholson were among the visitors at Kansas Yearly Meeting last week.

We learn from the Pacific Friend that John Henry Douglas of Whittier, California, has so far improved in health as to sit up an hour at a time and occasionally see a few Friends.

Whittier College opened its doors on September 6. A large percentage of the old students have returned and many new students are enrolled. The freshman class numbers about fifty-five.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

OBSERVE YOUNG FRIENDS DAY NOVEMBER 5

If you cannot get ready for this date, use the first Sunday that is convenient; but plan for a Big Day, for the Young People, for the Church and the community. Send to us for plans and suggestions.

It would be impossible to designate a Day that would be applicable to all Churches. We will be ready to cooperate at any and all times. To many societies, this may mean a beginning of better things and a closer relation with God.

Enroll

Now is the time to enroll in the Young Friends Directory. Make a special effort at this time to place the names of all Young Friends in the Directory at Headquarters. Iowa's slogan is "Every Young Friend Enrolled."

Begin this work on Nov. 5, under the direction of the lookout committee, if yours is a Christian Endeavor Society. Send to our Board for the Cards.

Watch these columns for further suggestions, and the program.

We wish to call your attention to an article on the Missionary page of Oct. 12 issue of this paper, by Ruthanna M. Simms, entitled, "An Echo." Miss Simms describes a plan which groups of young Friends in many places might well follow. We urge all young Friends to read it.

For a full report of the Cedar Lake Conference, and final plans for Young Friend's Day, send 25 cents for one year's subscription to The Conference News-Bulletin, Dunreith, Ind.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

"Manliness and womanliness." Neh. 6:1-13; Esth. 4:6-16.

Let the meeting be in charge of a young man and a young woman. The young men might give incidents or read well prepared papers about the lives of men of the Bible, and the young woman, about the women of the Bible.

Arrange for a debate, in which the men are lined up against the woman. Such subjects as: "Resolved, that Nehemiah was a nobler character than was Esther." Introduce some recitations illustrating nobility of character in a crisis.

"Resolved that Mordecai deserved more credit than Esther for freeing the Jews from Haman." Do not decide the contests with judges. Let the debate go on, and the stories live in the hearts and homes of the members, as they may have never lived before.

A true man is brave, loyal, honest, true, strong, and gentle. Pray for such strength of character.

It takes a man to be as honest as was Daniel. Such truth made men martyrs. Pray for this vision.

Many men would sell their souls for money. This meant nothing to Peter. To resist temptation makes us strong. The angels ministered unto Jesus, after His wilderness experience. They will minister to all who fight and win, then do we come out of our trials in power. Pray for courage in all circumstances to do right.

Tabitha was an angel of mercy. Today, women are giving their lives to helping relieve the pain and suffering of the soldiers. Pray for more of this fine spirit.

Man has in all ages, taken the advantage of woman's weakness. Woman has the right to claim her rights. She is not man's inferior, but his equal, his companion. Pray for woman's emancipation from all bonds that hinder her true development.

Women were the first at the grave, where the men had laid their Lord, thought that was the end and left Him there forever. Faithfulness to Christ always pays. Pray for more love and faithfulness to Him.

Nehemiah faced what seemed a hopeless task. He had all kinds of opposition. Paul too had his determination. "I press on." Pray for aim, purpose and firmness to stick to the right.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

Foregleams of the Dawning Day

"The night is far spent the day is at hand." Rom. 13:12.

"Until the day dawn and the Day Star arise." 2 Pet. 2:19.

"Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night nor of darkness." 1 Thess. 5:5.

There's a light upon the mountains, and the day is at the spring,
When our eyes shall see the beauty and the glory of the King;
Weary was our heart with waiting, and the night watch seemed so long,

But His triumph day is breaking, and we hail it with a song.

In the fading of the starlight we can see the coming morn;
And the lights of men are paling in the splendors of the dawn;
For the eastern skies are glowing as with light of hidden fire,
And the hearts of men are stirring with a throb of deep desire.

There's a hush of expectation, and a quiet in the air,
And the breath of God is moving in the fervent breath of prayer;
For the suffering, dying Jesus is the Christ upon the throne,
And the travail of our spirit is the travail of His own.

He is breaking down the barriers, He is casting up the way;
He is calling for His angels to build up the gates of day;
But His angels here are human, not the shining hosts above,
For the drumbeats of His army are the heartbeats of our love.

Hark! we hear a distant music, and it comes with fuller swell;
'Tis the triumph song of Jesus, of our King, Immanuel!
Zion, go ye forth to meet Him! And, my soul, be swift to bring
All thy sweetest and thy dearest for the triumph of our King!

IN ALASKA

Kotzebue, Alaska, Sept. 6, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

Following are reports of the annual meeting of Eskimos and of the Summer Bible School work held at Kotzebue, Alaska, the present summer, which might be of interest to some if you care to publish them.

On behalf of the missionaries,
CARRIE R. SAMMS.

Annual Meeting of Eskimos

Held at Kotzebue, Alaska, July 24-26, 1916.

The two weeks preceding the opening of this meeting were spent in prayerful preparations. Each day the missionaries met together and prayed that it might be a time of great blessing and strengthening to the Eskimo people. On the Sabbath day before the meeting opened, the Lord was present in the person of the Holy Spirit, and graciously touched hearts. At the close of the evening meeting an after-meeting was held at which many sought forgiveness of sins.

Each night of the conference an evangelistic service was held and many of the younger people took a definite stand for Christ. Others who were saved before came into a clearer light and greater freedom of the Spirit. We praise the Lord for His blessed help and presence.

The roll-call of delegates and ushers showed 30 delegates and 8 ushers present at the first session. Each session was opened with short devotional service led by an Eskimo.

Reports of Sunday School work showed an attendance of more than 600 at the four stations where that kind of work is carried on. The meetings for worship are regularly held in all the villages and at the reindeer camps as well as at the sealing places in the spring time; and reports show that definite Christian teaching is given.

Bible classes for the men, the women, the young people, and the children, have been held at all the stations part or all of the year. Some of the results of this work were shown in the meetings, when the older men and women repeated about 75 texts which had been translated into their own language. Two of the reports of the children's work were given by children about 14 years of age. Several songs have been translated into Eskimo and were sung during the conference.

At one session a plan was adopted to send out native preachers from one village to another. These workers are to spend a month or so in a village, teaching the word of God to the people. The natives themselves are to furnish the support of these "traveling evangelists."

The report of the General Superintendent showed that he had visited all but one of the stations at least once during the year. God has graciously blessed at all the stations and we look forward to greater things for this people in the coming year. Pray for us and them.

Summer Bible School

Held at Kotzebue, Alaska from July 27 to September 1, 1916.

For a long time many people have been thinking about and praying for a way to open for a Bible Training School for the Eskimos. At the close of the annual conference this year the way was clear for such work. The school was held four days each week for three weeks; then, as the heavy salmon run came on and the people had to spend more time at their fishing, we met but twice a week for three weeks.

The total enrollment was 65, with an average attendance of 12. Eighteen sessions were held in all. The regular attendance of some showed their deep interest and appreciation of the Bible study.

Fifteen lessons about sin and its results, salvation and its effects, and prayer, were given by Miss Martha Hunnicutt. Seven lessons on Church History and Friends' Doctrine were given by Robert Samms. One lesson on Friends' belief regarding war was given by Miss Elizabeth Stratton. Sixteen lessons on the use and purpose of music and singing, with Bible references, and interpretation of songs, were given by Carrie R. Samms.

We believe much good has already resulted from these lessons in the strengthening in spiritual life and belief of those who attended and we are planning to use these people during the winter, both in their home villages and in sending them to the other places to give the lessons to others.

"If you want to be discouraged, look within; if you want to be distracted, look about; but if you want to be satisfied, look up." Some people live on doubts, because they have nothing else to do. Just be occupied with the Master and His work, and you will have assurance.—D. L. Moody.

Having a Purpose In Service

These autumn days are filled with rallying occasions preparatory to the solid work of winter campaigns. In nature the autumn is the time of fruitage; in society and business and religion, it has come to be the period of preparation. Just why the church should have fallen into the habit of waiting for its revivals until the coming of frost and snow is not at all intelligible, except upon the basis of an endeavor to adjust the operations of the Spirit to the times of man's expediency. But whatever the reasons may be, Christianity no less than the secular world is in the grip of custom and its seasons are marked by the almanac quite as much as are the seasons of heat and cold or of sunshine and tempest.

Christianity will have to learn that the times of God's appointments are not gauged by man's conveniences, but that the secret of a life of blessing is to recognize God when he comes. He who lives constantly in the high tower of the Lord will be able to discern the movings of God's Spirit, but it is he who lives upon the low, miasmatic plains of Christian experience who must test his spiritual temperature by the length of the days or by the height of the mercury in the tube. We can understand the highest truths and receive the richest blessings only when we dwell in the clearer atmosphere that is undimmed by the fogs of human expediency.

It is a weakness of the church that it is prone to subject itself to the cross currents of the social and business world and is not sufficiently anchored as the bulwark of an abiding faith that is able to weather all the adverse winds of human life. Christianity is a force that is entitled to speak with commanding influence and authority upon matters that affect human welfare, and the church and its ministry must be leaders of the world directing it into the higher realms of life under penalty of failure at the points of highest usefulness. It is not in the spirit of cynicism that admission must be made that the church sometimes is a follower and not a leader, that while judging its course theoretically by the Sermon on the Mount, in practice it sets its standards somewhat according to the program of the modern world.

Undoubtedly there is too much of the haphazard in Christian activity. A ministry without a definite aim is a waste of energy and must necessarily be characterized by a superficiality that scatters spiritual energy rather than conserves it. We have too many purposeless meetings, and for that matter too many purposeless Christians. The church does not exist for its own sake, and the maintenance of a local meeting in any community is unimportant, apart from a commanding and definite purpose to build up the kingdom of God by seeking to gather the whole neighborhood into the family of the Divine Father.

Every denomination and every local meeting needs to be the center of a constructive, progressive program that includes a continuous purpose to enlarge the circle of its influence within its sphere of action. Many meetings are unable to report progress, because their efforts partake too much of the nature of "bushwhackers fighting a desultory and bewildered skirmish." While ever and always to the church has been assigned the task of preaching the gospel and of the salvation of sinners, no congregation can afford to be without a definite, specific issue, around which the membership may be always rallying as the expression of their religious zeal and devotion. For lack of it members are falling away with the consciousness that there is nothing in particular to do, while multitudes fail ever to find a place in the ranks of busy discipleship.

Of course the example of positive Christian living, that is the expression of that element of moral goodness that belongs to the body of Christ, will always receive its reward in a fruitage that is superb, but what an enlargement of in-gathering will come from a tilling that is directed by a specific purpose to do a particular thing in a particular way! What a harvest there would be throughout the realm of the Society of Friends, if every local congregation and the denomination as a whole would set out to conquer every bit of territory for the Master upon which the sole of their feet shall tread, that is to win every family for Christ within the circle of their legitimate influence! It is a task worthy of our best consecration, and the field is already white unto the harvest. The test will be our readiness to strive according to the gospel plan.

Home Missions and Social Service

By J. HERSCHEL COFFIN.

The success with which social service and community work can be carried on by any congregation or larger religious body depends upon four factors: (1) the point of view as to the general nature of Christianity; (2) the ideal which the church holds as to its relation to the individual and to society; (3) the intelligence with which a program is planned; and (4) the amount of enthusiastic co-operation which can be focused upon the execution of this program. And these factors are to determine the fate of the movement for social service in Indiana Yearly Meeting.

An incident which occurred during the year just ended may serve as a text for what I feel I ought to say upon the matter. The occasion was a Quarterly Meeting Conference on Home Missions and Social Service. During the discussion which followed the presentation of the problem of social service and community work, a Mother in Israel arose and said: "Ye cannot serve two masters." That was all; but the Biblical sentence summed up in a nut shell her criticism of social service. The meaning of the sentence when thus applied seems to be that social service is service of the world, whereas it is one's duty to serve God. And one cannot serve both the world and God at the same time.

Because there may be others who hold the same view of social service; because there may be some who are doubtful in their own minds as to the merits of this movement; because there are others who are indifferent to it, who do not see the need or the opportunity; and because both opposition and indifference seem to me to be based upon a wrong understanding or an inadequate understanding of the meaning of social service and the place it should hold in the activities of the church, I should like to state again the principles upon which it is based, and the general method by which these principles must be worked out, even at the risk of repeating what to some may seem like an old story.

There are three possible points of view as to the nature of Christianity, and its relation to the individual and to society; and corresponding to each of these points of view is an ideal of church obligation and method. I name them in the order of their historical development, roughly speaking, though they may be found still existing side by side in the church at large. The first is what may be called the individualistic view; the second, the social; and the third, the organic view.

Briefly stated, the individualistic view, which is perhaps the most familiar to us, makes religion an individual matter; it is a personal transaction between each man and God. It emphasizes the fact that the human soul is the thing of greatest value in the universe, and that Christ died that the sinner might have everlasting life. For the individualist the ultimate consideration of life is the forgiveness of sin and the assurance of a home in heaven. And the thing that makes possible this glorious prospect is the Divine love and mercy which prompted the Father to perfect the plan of salvation whereby man might enter into eternal life.

For the individualist the kingdom of God is in the New Jerusalem, and its citizens are the regenerated and resurrected sons of men, while this world is but a testing place and an ante-chamber which must be endured while preparing his holy citizenship. The individualist preaches the renunciation of the world with all of its pleasures, amusements, and its values; we must live in the world, but we must not be of it. Man's whole duty is to serve God and keep His commandments. Serving God necessitates certain definite experiences: one must first have felt conviction for personal sin; second, have repented; and third, accepted by faith the Divine promises of forgiveness, whereupon God remits our sins and gives us the assurance of our acceptance into the family of His children, through the blood of the crucified Savior.

For some, in addition, a whole gospel makes possible a further definite experience wherein the individual is not only saved because of the love of the Father, and the atonement of the Son, but in addition receives the Holy Spirit into his life through sanctification and thus completes the triad of personal religious experience, to correspond with the trinity of the God-head. This is the acme of spiritual attainment, and thrice blessed is the man who thus experiences communion with the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

As for the church itself, it is God's representative in the world; its members are the brands plucked from the burning who should, by the power of their transformed light, illuminate the figure of the crucified Savior so that the world may see and be saved. The hope of society—and its only hope—is that each member may come to the foot of the cross and be saved, and in turn become a member of the church and increase by one candle power the illumination directed toward Calvary. But the church is not to be regarded as merely passive or static; it must be active and dynamic. The church must go out into the world and bring in the lost ones; it must regenerate society by bringing the members thereof into its own household of faith. Hence it is the duty of the church to preach the gospel to every creature so that none may be lost for lack of a knowledge of the plan of salvation.

In later years the method by which the church militant has marched against the world for the purpose of carrying the message of salvation is through the special evangelistic effort. The purpose of the revival is, by one method or another, to start the crowd toward the church, and when there, bring home to them the futility of the worldly life, and through conviction, get them to come forward and renounce the world and accept Christ as their personal Savior.

Such is the individualistic point of view. It has been analyzed in this cold-blooded and impersonal way, not for lack of sympathy or lack of appreciation of its tremendous significance to individual men or society as a whole, but solely in order that we may compare it with the other points of view mentioned.

The social point of view is held—unhappily—not by church members as members of the church of Christ, but rather in their capacity as philanthropist, reformer, social theorist, or social worker. They may be, and usually are, nominal members of some denomination, though church membership is not a necessary condition of their scheme of social betterment. Indeed, many of the leading figures in the social movement are entirely outside of the church, and bitterly criticise the church for what they call its apathy, its class consciousness and its mediaeval methods.

Again, those who take the social point of view are not necessarily irreligious, even though they are outside the church, and criticise it. Indeed, they may claim to be deeply religious, though their religion is not the religion of the churches, and may not consist of the definite experiences which are made the test of religious consciousness by orthodoxy. They claim that their religion springs from humanitarianism rather than from enlightened self-interest; from a love for the world something akin to the love of the Father when He gave His only begotten Son for its salvation, instead of an esoteric relationship whose benefits are private and personal.

The adherents of the social view have been driven to their position by the perception that the Christian church through the entire history of its individualism has failed to Christianize the social order. That it has thus failed is evidenced by two important facts: (1) whole groups of society are outside the church. As Harry F. Ward says, in Social Evangelism (p. 66, ff.), "There is the poverty group, which is not largely present in our churches, for there is an economic standard for church membership. There is the immigrant group which stands aloof from us because of inborn prejudice and suspicion. There is the labor group which, in so far as it is self-conscious, finds its activities lying outside of church circles. * * * The same thing is true concerning a smaller but more powerful group in the community, namely: the "intellectuals" who have become aware of the compelling need for the reconstruction of our economic life on ethical grounds and who have turned aside from a purely formal type of Christianity. * * * There is also the group of luxury who, by their manner of living deny the imperative of the gospel over their lives."

Not only are there these whole groups of society who are outside the church, but, (2), and more significant still, is the fact that the principles of our very social organization are almost wholly untouched by the evangel of Christ. In the realm of government, laws are made by representatives who frequently do not represent, but who are the tools of special interests who use them for personal and group aggrandizement at public expense; the laws of the state, such as they are, are often administered in the interest of these same social parasites, so that it is next to impossible for a poor man to get justice; the criminal, even when justly sentenced, becomes a victim of an un-Christian penal system and more likely than not returns to society a worse man than when he went to prison.

It is also a significant fact in this connection that the highest emoluments in the legal profession go to those keen but conscienceless lawyers who are most adroit in the evasion of the very laws they are supposed to uphold. In the realm of international relations, nations are not actuated by the principle of humanitarianism and mutual service, but by hate, jealousy, envy, and self-interest. In the economic world the same disparity between practice and the law of love is apparent. Business ethics everywhere permit practices which could find no place in the Kingdom of God, and big business is almost always an accessory to the corrupt practices of councilman, commissioner, legislator and judge.

The same is true of the larger social relations. The whole fact of sexual immorality, the social sins of the liquor traffic, the immodesty and immorality of so much of popular amusement—movies, vaudevilles, bathing beaches, etc., add their testimony, if it were needed, to the fact that the machinery of the social process is not only un-Christian but anti-Christian.

These facts have created a group of socialists in religion who hold that the church is doomed to failure in the future as it has failed in the past, as long as it holds to its individualistic ideals and methods. What they wish is an evangel which will transform the social machinery and inculcate into society Christian principles of social organization.

They have an ideal in which the Kingdom of God shall exist not only in the New Jerusalem, but here and now. When they pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," they actually mean just that: that the Kingdom of God, as manifested in governmental, international, economic, and social relationships shall come to the earth—the United States, Indiana, and every community in Indiana in the near future. They have a vision of a world in which God's civilization shall reign. They know that as long as the social order remains as it is, the children of religious homes and members of the church are bound to fall away into these un-Christian practices. And they believe that if society as a whole were regenerated, individual salvation would take care of itself.

And so the social worker establishes his social settlements, his night schools and day nurseries, his labor bureaus and associated charities, his rescue homes and amusement halls, his libraries and social centers. And by these means, inadequate as they are to reach the deeper social and spiritual needs, he attempts to make a beginning upon the social regeneration for which his soul cries out.

And this is his religion: to sacrifice self for the welfare of others; to enlist in the cause of human betterment; to co-operate for the advancement of the Kingdom of God here and now; and with all, to experience the supreme satisfaction of having helped a little in substituting truth for error, goodness for evil, and beauty for ugliness; to have loved his fellow-man, and to be conscious of the approval of the Father of Light to whose service he has pledged his life.

On the one side, then, we have the individualist who is interested primarily in his own salvation and eternal happiness. He feels no burden for society as an organism, but only for the individuals which make up society, that they may be brought into the fold and know the joys of personal salvation and the assurance of eternal welfare. On the other side, there is the socialist in religion who is concerned about the salvation of the race. He has the vision of a society in which the law of love shall become the basic principle of social organization, instead of the law of force, or of competition, or of self-interest, or of mere justice. His ideal is a Kingdom of God in human society, wherein the machinery of government, of production and distribution, of social intercourse and leisure shall lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil.

Which view is correct?

The answer is, both, and yet neither. They are both correct in what they affirm, but incorrect in what they deny; or more strictly, they are both right in what they emphasize, but inadequate in what they fail to emphasize. Individualism is right in so far as it emphasizes the personal and spiritual nature of religion, and that each one must settle his own destiny through a personal transaction with God. But individualism is wrong when it "insists that there is no need of any evangelism other than that which directs its attention toward persons." As Ward says (Social Evangelism, p. 46, ff.): "If the goal of Christianity is entirely in the other world and its purpose is merely to take men triumphantly out of this world, then such a policy is correct. But if the purpose of Christianity is to create the civilization of God, then such a policy is a monstrous delusion. It sounds delightfully orthodox and very pious, but practically, it does not work.

"How long would it take to save the world by merely adding individuals to individuals? Into what millenium will the Christian social order be postponed if we are to wait to accomplish it by units, each unit exerting on the whole simply its unconscious influence? While this process is completing itself, evil gathers its corporate power, puts its hand upon the forces of social control, nullifies and prevents the evangelizing of individuals, effectually interrupts the process upon which this view depends for the saving of the community. In a community organized for evil, Christianity cannot even retain its own youth. Some of them inevitably sink into the saloon and the brothel."

It is a fallacy, therefore, to assert that if you make men individually good you have thereby made society good, because society is more than the sum of the individuals which make it up. It is a form of organization as well as a sum of individuals, and in order to Christianize society the form of organization must also be Christianized. And this is the point at which the individualistic view fails.

But this is just the strong point of the social view. It recognizes the tremendous significance in the making of character and environment, and proposes to Christianize the social order so that the inherent good in every man shall be brought out and strengthened instead of stimulating the inherent evil in human nature. But the weakness of the social position consists in the failure to connect the social betterment movements which it has inaugurated with a real spiritual, personal religion. It has not given sufficient attention to the argument of the apostles of personal liberty, to the effect that you cannot make men good by legislation. Deeper and more universal than the humanitarian impulse in man is the religious impulse, and no social betterment movement which is based upon the one and not upon the other can succeed in the long run, or effect the universal social regeneration for which it strives. The fact remains that to bring the Kingdom of God to the earth now involves the personal salvation of the individuals that make up society, as well as to reorganize the social order; it involves the conversion of the wills of individuals to the ideals and purposes of Jesus Christ, as well as the substitution of new principles of social organization. And the social movement alone cannot create a clean heart or renew a right spirit within man.

This analysis of the individualistic and social views brings us to the third possible view, which I have called the organic view. This view of Christianity and its interpretation of the duty of the church attempts to synthesize the affirmatives of both the other views, and to negate their negatives.

The organic view is based upon the accepted principles of sociology and psychology, (1) that society is something more than the sum of the individuals which are its units; (2) that character, will, and conscience are determined in large degree by community standards, public sentiment, and social conscience; and (3) that while religion is in the final analysis a personal affair, personality is, in the final analysis, a social affair.

The truth of the first point is clearly seen in the economic world. Here, we have men grouped together into partnerships, companies, organizations, corporations, trusts, etc. But the principles of their organization and combination, and the principles upon which they do business—banking laws, systems of credit, sales methods, accounting systems, etc.—are as much a part of the economic order as are the men who form the combinations. And so the organic view recognizes that in order to save the greatest number of individuals from sin and to the perfect life as it is in Jesus Christ, the church must also attempt to evangelize the social structure which constitutes the matrix in which these individuals live. And "it is this something more, this formation and product of the manifold inter-relationships of individuals which is neglected in the evangelism that deals only with individuals." (Ward, Social Evangelism, p. 14.)

But it recognizes with equal clearness that these individuals must experience the saving and sanctifying power of Divine love in their own hearts, or there is no solid foundation upon which to build a regenerated society.

Again, that the character and conduct of the individual are determined in large measure by social pressure is easily seen when a nation sets its will for war and sweeps all individuals before it, or when "good citizens" are swept into acts of violence under mob control or even in evangelistic campaigns where great excitement prevails.

We do not need to draw illustrations, however, from such dramatic instances as these, for the molding force upon the individual of custom, tradition, community standards and ideals also shows the extent to which personal opinion, sentiment, will, and conscience are the resultants of social pressure. And the organic view recognizes that the church is working against a great and unnecessary handicap in its attempt to save individuals as long as social pressure pushes them in the wrong direction.

Finally the organic view admits with individualism that religion is, and always must be a personal matter; but it recognizes with equal clearness that human personality is social in texture to the very core; that it is indeed as fundamentally social as it is rational. The implication of this is that in so far as the individual is a unit in a social whole, in so far as he has necessary relations with others, his religion must be to a like extent a social affair. It is, therefore, impossible for a man to draw a line between his religious life and his social life. Many a man has said "I cannot be a Christian and continue in my business, or in the law, or in politics, or in my amusements." While I would take issue with many of these upon this point, yet I admire the frankness which admits the disparity between Christianity and the present social order. But it remains a fact that we must have business, law, politics, and amusements in order to live. And the problem is so to transform these factors of life that they shall be consistent with the principles of Christ, so that men shall not be under the necessity of rejecting Christianity because they must make for themselves a livelihood in business, law, or politics, or because they demand the relaxation of amusement.

And while I should be the last to disparage the efforts at social betterment which are being made all over the country, I am yet convinced that they cannot give us the permanent and universal results which they seek, because they do not go deeply enough into the organic life of society. They palliate certain obviously undesirable conditions; but these conditions are after all only symptoms of a deeper-lying organic disease which must be attacked by more heroic means, namely, by the Christianizing of the principles of social organization. The most significant and universal fact about man is that he is a spiritual being. And were the organic view of religion actually adopted by the church these welfare movements would be unified and universalized by making them expressions of a spiritual impulse; they would then cease to be merely palliative measures, and would become means in a social evolution which would eventually bring in the kingdom of God.

The organic view of Christianity, then, holds that Christianity is not only a personal experience but a social process; that it not only saves the individual from sin, but that it ought to redeem society from corporate evil; that it not only promises eternal happiness to the individual, but that it ought to hold the promise of a social evolution which should bring the kingdom of God into the social world.

PRAYER OUR STRENGTH

Prayer is the summing up of our Christian life in a definite act, which is at once inward and outward. The power of which on the character, like that of any other act, is proportioned to its intensity. The imagination of doing right adds little to our strength. Even the wish to do so is not necessarily accompanied by a change of heart. But in prayer we imagine, and wish, and perform, all in one. Our imperfect resolutions are offered up to God; our weakness becomes strength; our words deeds.—Jowett.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE

WHAT ONE MAN DID WITH A PEARL

By HUBERT LYMAN CLARK

Scattered throughout the Torres Strait region, between New Guinea and tropical Australia, are numerous islands, the larger of which are inhabited by Papuan races, christianized through the splendid efforts of the London Missionary Society. These people are now all church-goers, most of the adults are church members, and the church is the social center of each island. Real pride is taken in the church building which is usually the largest and most substantial edifice on the island. A couple of years ago the people of Moa decided that they must have a new and better church building, so they set to work to build it. Since they were to bear the expense themselves, the cost was an important matter. The more experienced men felt that a corrugated iron roof was very necessary, for the ordinary thatch-roof decays rapidly and is never satisfactory. But investigation showed that such a roof as they desired would cost nearly four hundred dollars and it was reluctantly decided that they would have to do with a thatch-roof which they could themselves put on at very little expense.

The men of Moa get their income from the sea. Most of them are "pearlers"; that is they dive for pearl-mussels or work on boats whose business is the gathering of these much-sought bivalves. On the island of Badu, adjoining Moa, is the head station of an interesting missionary organization, the Papuan Industries, Ltd. Many of the Pearl-fishers of Moa take their catch to Badu and sell it to Mr. Walker, the missionary in charge there. He keeps a large general store where the natives of the Torres Strait islands can trade to much better advantage than at Thursday Island, the metropolis of the region.

Among the members of the Moa church is a man whom we will call Charlie. He is a quiet, industrious man and has been working towards owning his own pearling-boat. Last fall on one of his trips he was so fortunate as to find a mussel containing a magnificent pearl. Amazed at his good luck, he took the pearl to Mr. Walker and asked him to sell it for him at Thursday Island. This Mr. Walker consented to do. The pearl was one of the finest that had been found in the strait for many a day and the dealers were eager to secure it so Mr. Walker took back to Charlie fifteen hundred dollars, a complete fortune to a Papuan. Charlie was quite dumbfounded, but after a few moments thought, he asked Mr. Walker to keep the money over night and talk the matter over with him in the morning.

When the next day came, it was a very seriousminded man who appeared at the store to discuss with the missionary the disposition of a fortune.

"Well, Charlie," said Mr. Walker, "you're a rich man now! What are you going to do with all your money?"

"Oh, Mr. Walker, I know it's a lot of money for me. I've been awake most of the night thinking how to use it."

"Is that so? What's the first thing you're going to get?"

"I must pay my debts first."

"Yes, that's right, but your debts aren't much."

"Well, there's two hundred and fifty dollars still due on my boat. 'I'll pay that.'"

"Good. What else?"

"My debt here at the store."

"Oh, that's only twenty-five or thirty dollars. You've got lots of money left yet!"

"Mr. Walker, it's not right for me to keep all the money for myself. I want to do something for the men on my boat. I'll pay their debts."

Investigation soon showed that these all told came to about fifty dollars, so Charlie added a cash bonus for each man. Then Mr. Walker said,

"You've only used a small bit of your fortune yet. You've got over eleven hundred dollars still."

Charlie looked up with a smile and said:

"My wife's been a good woman to me. I want to do something for her."

"All right. What had you thought of doing?"

"I'll buy her a new hat!"

So out they went into the store and after some natural masculine hesitation, Charlie selected a light straw hat, beedcked with artificial flowers, for which he paid the munificent sum of seventy-five cents.

Returning to the office, Charlie became very serious and after a moment, said, with tears in his eyes:

"Mr. Walker, I think much in the night. I didn't earn this money. God gave it to me. I want to show him my thanks. I want to do something for him."

"That's right, Charlie, you certainly ought to be grateful to him. But have you thought of anything you can do?"

"Yes, Mr. Walker. I'm going to pay for an iron roof for our new church on Moa. I can do that now!"

When that had been arranged, Charlie decided to put five hundred dollars of what was left, into the bank at Thursday Island, and then went light-heartedly homeward with the new hat for his "better-half."

But Mr. Walker strolled over to his house, asking himself, with a shake of the head,

How many an Anglo-Saxon member gives seventy-five cents for his wife's hat and four hundred dollars to the church?

WAR VICTIMS' RELIEF The Work In Holland

From Amersfoort we hear that the work is settling down well, the increased helpers making it possible to use the evenings to better advantage. The worker writing says: "I feel that the need for paid work is not now quite so pressing, though in this village the need for occupation is certainly great. This means that perhaps without extending our present wage list we can do a good deal to help in the way of occupation in the evening."

The holidays bring special problems of unoccupied children, and a sewing class for little girls is held twice a week, as well as singing classes for boys and girls. A traveling exhibition for parents and teachers gave opportunity to parties of mothers to take patterns of children's clothes. The Creche flourishes, but Scout difficulties increase with the holidays and the want of an experienced Scout-master. Ten boys passed the Tenderfoot Test recently. Four voluntary Belgian helpers, three being our own work girls, help at the sewing class. Our evening program is at present:

Monday—Sewing for small girls. Boys, singing and gardening. Women, English lessons.

Tuesday—Club for boys and girls.

Wednesday—Scouts and sewing class, followed by games or singing.

Thursday—English lesson, women. Boys, singing.

Friday—"At Home" for anyone who wants help in arranging work; also music.

A men's workshop for raffia was started on July 31st, commencing with three men who made rapid progress. It has now increased and others are waiting to come. Orders for shoes have been received from villagers.

At Uden a new industry of vegetable dyeing has been started, for which the women collect the heather and bark, the men carrying out the processes. The zaal is opened three times a week for quiet games, reading and singing, and a great deal of mat-making and smock frocks for exhibition. The juniors are qualifying for prizes in outdoor sports. Pictures and games can be made good use of in the gymnasium proposition is developing slowly but very surely, three Belgian directors taking active charge of the drills.

Russia

We regret that a long report from Russia has been lost in transit, but gather that our work has been begun in good earnest; different arrangements as to organization are having to be made, owing to a decision of the Zemstvos to remove the refugees from Lubimofka to Mogotova district, in view of the threatened famine.

From the "Martyr City"

The following is a translation of a letter received from the Administrator of Civil Hospitals in Rheims, addressed the Principal of the Hospital at Sermaize:

"In the painful circumstances under which we are all of us living today, you and your helpers have been to the town of Rheims in general, and to our hospital in particular, real 'Friends.' Taking upon yourselves a great part of our troubles, you have opened your wide doors to our orphans, our sick, our young children whom you have come to seek yourselves in the 'martyr city.' Scorning the danger which sometimes threatened during violent bombardments, you have hastened to the help of expectant mothers, and have taken them off to your Maternity Hospital, where they have received the most assiduous attentions. Our children you have placed out not far away, permitting them thus to learn a handicraft, while all the time away from danger. You have in this manner saved a precious human capital which agriculture, commerce, industry, and the future will be delighted to find. For all these kindnesses, for this unwearied assistance, accept our lively sentiments of eternal gratitude, and say to all your 'Friends' that we include them in the same transport of gratitude."

HISTORICAL ASSOCIATIONS

The Ohio Valley Historical Association held its tenth annual meeting at Indianapolis, Indiana, on October 4 and 5, in connection with the Indiana State Centennial Celebration. Professor Harlow Lindley of Earlham College, is President of the Association and by virtue of his position is also a member of the Executive Committee. He was chairman of the Program committee and together with Professor Walter C. Woodard, the newly elected General Secretary of the Five Years' Meeting, was a member of the Reception Committee. Professor Lindley, presiding, gave the President's address on the afternoon of October 4, all sessions being held in the Claypool hotel.

There were five sessions of the Association meeting and addresses were given by a number of noted educators and historians.

He has accepted an invitation to lunch on Thursday with Gov. Ralston in honor of President and Mrs. Wilson. He recently delivered the opening address for the new year at the annual meeting of the Federated Churches of Indianapolis, and on last Sunday gave the commencement address at the Church School of the St. John's Universalist Church, of Muncie.

Announcement has been made of a gift to the Endowment of $5,000.00, from Joseph A. Goddard, of Muncie, and a gift of $1,000.00 from Benjamin Johnson, of Richmond. Both Mr. Goddard and Mr. Johnson are members of the Board of Trustees and have been liberal contributors to the College for years.

Walter A. Jessup, A. B., of the class of 1903, Ph.D. Columbia University 1911, has entered upon his duties as President of the State University of Iowa, to which position he was elected during the summer.

At the Educational session of Indiana Yearly Meeting, President Kelly announced the founding of a scholarship to the value of $300.00, by Hannah Amelia White, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

This makes four $300.00 scholarships that have been founded by friends of Earlham College within a year. Each scholarship stands for an investment of $6,000.00.

CORRESPONDENCE

Jonesboro, Ind., Oct. 6, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

My heart was pained today as I read in this week's American Friend the names of Friends appointed at our late Yearly Meeting to attend the Five Years Meeting. Of the twenty-six named delegates only four of them are women.

Has not Earlham College graduated our girls as well as our boys for many years past? And are there not women of ability and talent with good judgment in Indiana's large Yearly Meeting who are interested in our church with all her interests?

Why then this great difference?

RUTH T. CAREY.

Editor The American Friend:

I received The American Friend today and in reading the account of Indiana Yearly Meeting I saw that all the appointments for the Sabbath day were assigned to the men ministers. Not a woman had a place on the program. I wondered if there were no women ministers there on that day or if none were there who were competent to fill a place. Could thee explain as no doubt many others will want to ask the same question, where were the women ministers?

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

YOUNG FRIENDS RALLY DAY November 26, 1916.

Remember the date, and send to the Young Friends Board for programs and material. Since we announced the date last week, we have been urged to change to a later one, as there seemed such a little time to get all the material in hand. So will you please note the date above as the official one, and all work to that? Programs and advertising material may be had for the asking, let us supply you. Just send us a card stating the number of copies wanted. Your order will receive prompt attention.

Christian Endeavorers have promised to be loyal to their own church. All young Friends ought to be. We have often been struck with the fact that there is much disloyalty among Friends. No doubt it is because some do not know why the Society of Friends exists; or have not yet found a place to exercise the gift.

Another feature of Rally Day, is to stimulate the attendance at the mid-week prayer meeting and to increase attendance at the morning meeting for worship. Our pastors are saying that it is no uncommon thing for their young people to file out after the Bible School is over, or after the C. E. Meeting in the evening. This is not true in some places, but that is the exception.

Rally Day, is to be Church-Loyalty Day. Let us make it so by attendance upon all the services of the church; not only on November 26 but from this on. These services are yours, young Friends, and will be largely just what you make them. Let us make this day a memorable event in not only the history of our Church, but in our own individual lives, and from this on, bear our share of responsibility of each of these services.

This Day will be successful in this regard only as we will do our part, in attendance, and as we all pray. Make it helpful, prayerful, fruitful.

Why not make the Sunday previous Tag Day for the following Rally Day Sunday? This will appeal to all Christian Endeavorers especially. You can provide the Endeavorers with small tags bearing the words, "You are challenged to attend the Rally Day Services next Sunday. Every member tagged during the sessions of the society or Sunday School, or during the morning and evening services of the church, should be willing to accept the challenge and come to the services on the next Sunday. To catch the spirit of this effort will ensure an overflowing meeting.

After all, it will depend upon each individual's own spirit of loyalty to the service of the Master, and the Church. Be hands and feet to your pastor. Demonstrate the fact that you can and that you will. But above all, back of all, do this for Christ.

CEDAR LAKE, 1916.

(From the "Conference News-Bulletin")

What's in a name? There is a great deal in the above title; something distinctive, something new. If this were not true the Conference this year would have been a failure. Conventions may be alike. Simple gettings together to hear great speeches and pass resolutions may be worked out in the same mold from year to year. Not so with Conferences. The latter are each a new creation, growing out of the life, problems and personality of its personnel.

Cedar Lake, 1916, was a Conference. From first to last we conferred one with another as seekers on the highway of life. One and all we were trying to answer Pilate's question, "What is truth." And day by day we found our answer in a fuller and grander appreciation of Christ Jesus. There seemed to be no human authority among us to whom we could go for the final word on the problems we faced. And so together, from first to last, we sat down under the guidance of the ever present Christ, and together we were led to understand his life and word to us as authority.

This spirit of the seeker distinguished the whole Conference. It seemed to be the secret of the beautiful unity that prevailed in the whole group. Our homes were as far apart as ever they were; our methods of organization and worship in our home Meetings varied as greatly as formerly; our problems were as variegated as could well be imagined. And yet without conscious effort, without misunderstanding, without anyone deserting his vital experience or views, we were a unit. And that, because, with an open heart and mind, we sought to understand God and our own lives.

The question of silence was raised. Its value and practicality under various conditions expounded. And some who had felt that Friends had moved far beyond the stage when silence had any part in the life of their Meetings were suddenly conscious that out of the silence of our Meetings for worship at the Conference God was speaking to them. And some who had thought that silence was always golden; who were sure at least that their place was among the silent worshippers, were almost startled to find themselves so moved upon that they rose out of the silence of our Meetings for worship and spoke words of power to us all. Or was it a matter of doctrine? The same sense of unity in quest held good. One found a young Friend who had been most carefully schooled in all of the ancient explanations of the Deity of Jesus coming to one who had been trained in a very liberal school of thought and seeking an interpretation of Christ which should show him to be divine. And in their talk the two were lifted to a new and living appreciation of their Lord and Master.

The class work this year offered a wide range of choice. "Mexico Today," that slippery subject, was vitally handled by Prof. Irving Kelsey of Penn College, who has himself spent a number of years in our sister Republic. Ryu Sato San, who is this year finishing her course at Bryn Mawr, made the life and problems of present day Japan glow with interest. Charles Tebbetts, who has just returned from a visit to some of our southern Mission stations, related the church at home and abroad in the common "Program of Jesus for the Church." Two stimulating courses were given in Bible Study, one by Alexander C. Purdy of Earlham College, in which he revealed the teachings of the Bible concerning the Coming of the Kingdom, especially relating it to the present time. Samuel Haworth of Minneapolis, brought a series of lessons from the life and works of Paul.

The devotional study of the Bible was undertaken in a number of small groups which met each morning immediately after the breakfast hour. Here problems of personal application of the Scriptures to devotional life were worked out in actual practice. Modern methods of teaching the Bible in our Sunday schools were taken up under three different heads by William J. Sayers, Ancel E. Ratliff and Lillian E. Hayes. Lessons from Church History were brought in a course of lectures by Frank W. Dell, and Perry D. Macy, Efficiency Secretary of New England Yearly Meeting, brought to all interested in the rural church his wealth of information and experience in that field. Ora W. Carrell, fresh from his first year's work in Iowa Yearly Meeting as Secretary of the Bible School and Young People's Boards, gave instruction to a large class in methods of work. Of very great interest were the studies in Peace given by George W. Nasmyth, Student Secretary of the World's Peace Foundation. In special sessions he brought before the Conference the practical measures for securing the peace of the world first put forth by William Penn, now promulgated by the League to Enforce Peace.

Each evening there were two events which no one wanted to miss. The first was a vesper service, held just at the going down of the sun. At these times we simply sat down together and spoke or sang as we were moved. These vespers were followed each evening by an address of inspirational character. Three evenings Ozora S. Davis, of Chicago Theological Seminary, lifted the Conference to a new appreciation of personality by his clear analysis of life and the play of the Divine Spirit upon it. Other addresses were given by the members of the teaching staff, which were deeply impressive. Several young people were moved to "step up nearer to Christ" as the result of these meetings.

The Open Parliament is always an indispensable feature of such a gathering. There must be some place where everyone has a chance to have his "say" about things in a Friends' gathering. And this was the place. It was under the care of Thomas Kelly, who simply stated the various themes for consideration from day to day and saw to it that we kept somewhere near the subject. A start was made by raising the question, "Why does the Society of Friends Exist?" On succeeding days the Rural Church, the City Church, Peace, the Social Interpretation of the Gospel, and Missionary Problems, received attention. For these discussions the time was all too short. On none of the themes could one determine just what was the consensus of opinion for there seemed to be none. They were rather enlightening and enlivening discussions on living issues and it is safe to say that each found new light for the work in his own field.

Of course the social element was present also. It could not have been absent from such a group if they were to be natural. The great national game was participated in by the two leading league teams, the All-Stars and the Never-Sweats, resulting in a score of not quite 16 to 1 in favor of the All Stars. A later game between the ministers and the non-ministers would have given a good majority to the ministers had the game closed early enough. Unfortunately it went on too long and the non-ministers won. Tennis was a special attraction to many, and croquet and quoits, played under the shade, were popular "hot-day" games. All morning activities were prefaced by a dip in the lake and each day's athletics closed in like manner.

Of course "stunt night" was duly observed when each Yearly Meeting was called upon to give some "stunt" typical of its location. They were all unique, but a few stand out in particular. The striking pageant effect of Indiana's Indian Dance and war plans, suddenly frustrated by the appearance of Penn and his Quakers, who made a Peace Treaty with them sticks in one's mind.

Also the Philadelphia Monthly Meeting, splendidly presented by the thirteen representatives from that Yearly Meeting; and the vivid portrayal of the Penn College Endowment Campaign given by the Iowa delegation. Had one been allowed to judge of Young Friends alone as they appeared that evening about the camp fire in "full dress" he would have been led to believe the words of the song contributed to the Conference by the Wilmington delegation, which was always on the lips:

"Nobody has cultivated me, Ha: Ha: I'm wild.
I just grew up as you see ever since I was a child.
I'm a little prairie flower, growing wilder every hour,
And nobody has cultivated me, ha: ha: I'm wild."

The spirit of fun could not be relegated to one night alone. Reaction from the stress of a heavy day now and again set in in the evening, and once resulted in a very dramatic presentation of "How We Got Our American Flag," by George Washington, Betsey Ross and two Revolutionary privates. Again we were given a delightfully practical demonstration of Home Economics by those present, who were especially interested in Domestic Science. All of these were, of course, freely interspersed with song and speech.

But time and space would fail to tell of all of these delightful diversions. Suffice it to say that we were simply natural. Life is a drama—now serious and deep; now jovial and gay. And at Cedar Lake 1916 we were simply living—really living.

The move from Winona to Cedar Lake was an experiment this year. But those who have attended the Conference at both places felt enthusiastic about the change. The grounds were under the complete charge of the Moody Church, Chicago, but Friends had almost complete control while they were there. The service in every particular was good. The manager of the grounds gave every attention to our comforts and the meals so delighted the guests that frequently a whole table would rise and give vent to their satisfaction in some wildly ejaculatory fashion. One also feels profoundly grateful to Prof. W. O. Mendenhall and Lillian Hayes for their untiring care for the inside workings of the Conference. Not once did the wheels "creak" and the machinery was delightfully invisible.

The sufferings of Young Friends in England were many times before us. Accounts of their noble stand for conscience sake thrilled our hearts and a special greeting was sent to them as well as to others with whom we felt a peculiar bond of sympathy.

On the closing day each service was impressive. The last one was especially so. Tom Jones spoke feelingly, drawing upon the inspiration received from his recent western visit, and bringing something of his vision for the Society of Friends through its Young People. Our association together had grown so delightful that each one was feeling a tinge of regret because the time had come to go.

Many expressed new determinations and ideals, which had come to them at the Conference. But all notes of sadness disappeared when someone voiced the feeling that many were just coming to have—"Now I want to go home and work it all out in life." That was the spirit in which the Conference closed. And now God is with each one who was there, helping them as they undertake to carry out their resolves.

FRIENDS AND COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE.

The Situation In the United States.

Present indications point to a determined effort to have laws enacted by the next Congress compelling all male citizens to take some form of training for military service.

Friends are therefore to face within the next year the question of their attitude toward such legislation in particular, thus involving in a very definite and concrete way the whole question of the duties and privileges of Christian citizenship.

Heretofore, Friends have sometimes passively awaited the development of critical situations, and have acted only when the emergencies made further inaction impossible; but sometimes Friends have foreseen the trend of events sufficiently to take positive action in advance of the coming of a crisis. Which course shall Friends now take?

Circumstances To Be Considered.

1. The general feeling favoring an increase in the military preparedness of our nation, as shown by the largely increased appropriations made by the last Congress for military and naval purposes, and by the enactment in certain states, as New York, for example, of laws establishing compulsory military training for all male citizens.

2. Criticism, vigorous and outspoken, concerning the law passed by the last Congress reorganizing and strengthening the National Guard. The inadequacy of the National Guard to afford the protection demanded seems to be generally the verdict of military authorities.

3. Efforts to increase the efficiency of the army by voluntary recruiting are reported as practically failing. Following is an item which appeared recently in one of the large dailies:

RECRUITING PLAN FAILS, WAR DEPARTMENT SAYS

NOT ENOUGH MEN OBTAINED TO WARRANT EXPENSE.

MUCH WORK TO BE DROPPED

WASHINGTON, October 7.—Failure to obtain sufficient recruits for the national guard to justify necessary expenditures of that service caused the war department today to authorize army departmental commanders to discontinue guard recruiting when results obtained do not warrant continuance.

Since President Wilson issued the proclamation mobilizing the guard for federal service, at least three commissioned officers have been employed by each guard regiment in recruiting work. The expense of the campaign has been met by the federal government.

The decision was based on a recommendation by the general staff. Great difficulty has been met in trying to fill up the national guard regiments at the border or ready to leave for the border.

4. Congress had before it for consideration at its last session a bill introduced into the Senate by Senator Chamberlain, which provided for "the training in the use of arms of all able bodied citizens between the ages of twelve and twenty-three." The following summary of the provisions of this bill will show something of the scope of the legislation proposed, which is meeting with approval not only by military authorities but by many business and professional men:

From the ages of twelve to fourteen the boys—enrolled officially as members of the Citizen Cadet Corps—shall have ninety hours of calisthenics, without arms, each year. From fourteen to sixteen they have ninety hours of military training, including gallery practice with the rifle; from sixteen to eighteen they continue, adding ten days in military camp. After eighteen the boys are enrolled in the Citizen Army or the Citizen Navy up to the age of twenty-three, when they pass automatically into the Citizen Army Reserve, to be mobilized for war at the call of the President.

Illegal evasion of this training may be punished by fine not to exceed five hundred dollars or by confinement not to exceed twenty days.

5. A few months ago announcement was made of the organization of a new league under the name "The Universal Military Training League." The announcement was accompanied by the statement that "a country-wide campaign for compulsory military training" would soon be opened. It was further stated that a plan had been worked out that has "the approval of the highest military authorities, educators, business men and others."

What Conclusion Can Be Drawn?

From a consideration of the above points, what conclusion can be drawn as to what may be expected when Congress meets again? And in view of this situation what should Friends and other Christians do?

The Plan of the Militarists

In a recent article in the Advocate of Peace Dr. David Starr Jordan quotes a New York militarist as follows:

Gen. Thomas O'Ryan, one of our New York drill-masters, is quoted in LIFE as saying: "We must get our men so that they are machines, and this can be done only as a process of training. We have to have our men trained so that the influence of fear is overpowered by the peril of an uncompromising military system, often backed up by a pistol in the hands of an officer. . . . The recruits have got to put their heads into the military noose." This is the method of the Nation in Arms. Its logical result is seen today in the ruin of Europe.

What Friends Are Doing.

Many Friends are thinking carefully about what should be done now, before the time comes when our boys have been compelled "to put their heads into the military noose." Before this article comes to readers of The American Friend the Executive Committee of the Peace Association of Friends in America will have held a meeting in which this subject is to be considered. The judgment of Friends everywhere is being sought, and when the course which seems wisest has been decided upon, the cooperation and help of all Friends will be asked for as we move forward in the effort to bring to bear on the problem the power of truth and Christian love.

THE INDIANA CENTENNIAL.

In connection with the Centennial exercises commemorative of the admission of Indiana into the Union in 1816, Indianapolis closed last week a two week's celebration of the event upon a gigantic scale. The night of October 10 was church night, and there was a monster parade. It was said that a larger crowd was never seen upon the streets of the capital city. Of the Friends' section in the parade, the Indianapolis Star had the following:

"The various episodes of the 275 years of Quakerism were presented, the section being headed by a Quaker on horseback, depicting the old-time Friend. In this section were the 'Quakers of 1856,' a pioneer family in an ancient 'rockaway' carriage, and the 'Quaker of 1916' in a modern automobile. Timothy Nicholson of Richmond, one of the oldest Quakers in the state and the founder of the state board of charities, rode all alone in an automobile, and was much applauded."

THE NEW BELL AT PUERTO PADRE

One piece of baggage which Henry and Alma Cox took with them to Cuba last July was a new bell for the Puerto Padre meeting house. More than half the cost of the bell was contributed by Cuban members of the Puerto Padre congregation. Friends in America are making up the additional amount needed. The new bell is appreciated, as a late report from Cuba clearly shows. "All are highly pleased with the new bell and its value to the work is shown by the punctuality of attendance at the services. It is easily heard in all parts of the town and serves in an admirable way to advertise our work and to remind the people of their opportunity of hearing the Gospel."

FOR YOUNG FRIENDS

For every group of young Friends in America, the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions this year has a message. Since it is impossible for a representative of the Board to visit personally every one of these groups, our message has been put into print. It is in the form of a booklet entitled "Mission Study, 1916-1917." Arrangements are being made to place a copy of the booklet in the hands of either the President or Missionary Chairman of every Christian Endeavor or other young Friends group.

The only way that young Friends can get our message is to read this booklet. The reading and discussion of "Mission Study, 1916-1917" ought to be made the theme of one missionary committee meeting.

The booklet asks and answers such questions as "What is a Mission Study Class?," "Why Organize Classes?," "What Is Required?," "How Secure Classes?" There are sixteen pages and every one contains something unique and valuable.

The Board of Missions takes this opportunity of asking that you take our booklet as a special message to your own society or class. In this way, young Friends may co-operate with one of the great Boards of the church. If your copy has not reached you and if you need it at once, write to Ross A. Hadley, the assistant secretary of the Board. The address is Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Indiana.

A STEP IN ADVANCE

A step in advance has been taken in the financial system of the Gibara (Cuba) church. The young people of the Christian Endeavor Society now give all their offerings through the weekly envelopes in the church and the church makes an appropriation for the expenses of the Christian Endeavor, including sufficient for a monthly social for the young people. It is hoped in this way to have greater efficiency in the administration of the church funds and greater unity and effectiveness in the departments of church work, the young people's society being an arm of the church and not a separate body. The young people are taught to support the church to the extent of their capacity and doing this they have a right to expect the church to support the young people's society as a department of its work. This involves the use of the budget system in the finances of the church. It is too soon yet to tell of its success or failure in our church. We feel, however, that it is a sound financial policy.

SYLVESTER JONES.

THE FIRST MONTH OF SCHOOL

(Hussey Institute is now the only Christian school in Matamoros, Mexico.)

One month of school has just been completed. We have as many pupils as can be admitted except in the First Grade and I suppose that will soon be filled up. There has been a great deal of trouble among the younger children on account of sickness and sore eyes, so that quite a number have not come in yet; also the attendance has been irregular with those who have enrolled. In the higher grades, the attendance has been good.

The Sunday School has not quite come up to what we had hoped for, but we are striving in every way possible to get our boys and girls into Sunday School and to hold them. We have talked very plainly with them about it during the past week and nearly all manifested a desire to attend, but some said there are obstacles in the way over which they have no control. One girl said she had been to Sunday School a few times in her life and enjoyed it very much, that she would be delighted to attend regularly but that all in her home are so opposed to it that probably it will be impossible for her to do so. I think there are others that are contending with the same difficulties. We do not feel discouraged for most of our pupils seem to be very much interested. There were 95 present at Sunday School last week, and this week 111.

NANCY L. LEE.

MISSIONARY AMMUNITION FOR PASTORS

Where may it be found? In missionary books, of course, but often to find the exact place in the particular book where the material needed may be found requires a long and painstaking search by the busy pastor who already finds the twenty-four hours of each day all too few in which to get through the day's work. To meet this need, which many pastors have felt, for up-to-date missionary material, ready for use when it is needed, a unique series of pamphlets is being prepared. The pamphlets will be called "Missionary Ammunition." They will be for the exclusive use of pastors. The first one of the series is to bear the title 'The Pastor as a World Leader.' It will be published about the middle of November. Other pamphlets in the series will appear every six months during the next two years.

The opening number will contain several articles on the place of the pastor in the foreign missionary enterprise of his denomination, both in the matter of preaching and planning. It will contain also a survey of the missionary situation in certain non-Christian lands. This by way of acquainting the pastor with the outstanding conditions abroad, a sort of general background against which he may sketch as many incidents and illustrations as desired. The statement of this general situation will be followed by a typical missionary incident which should be quotable in a sermon or address and a typical personality either missionary or native who may be regarded as representative of the work in that particular area. In another section of this pamphlet, there will be a collection of interesting homiletical material of a missionary character gathered from a variety of sources. Still another section will bear the heading 'A Sanctuary of Missions' which it is believed pastors will appreciate as a stimulus and guide to prayer in behalf of the world wide enterprise of the church.

Further announcement as to how pastors may secure the first pamphlet in this "Missionary Ammunition" series will appear in later issues of The American Friend. It is hoped that every pastor may be supplied.

BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD.

Teacher Training Department. Grinnell Graduates a Class In Teacher Training.

A most inspiring event in connection with the Bible School work of our Yearly Meeting occurred on Sabbath afternoon, October 8th, when the graduating exercises of the Grinnell Teacher Training Class were conducted in their church. It was a beautiful autumn afternoon and the exercises were well attended by the people of their School and Church.

A class of six completed the course with excellent grades. Those awarded diplomas were Joseph Sopher, the pastor, and his wife, Mary T. Sopher; Orpha C. Greene, Kitty Whitney, Francis Frye, and Lurana M. Terrell, who was unable to be present to receive her diploma. At the direction of the Bible School Board of the Yearly Meeting Ora W. Carrell was present upon this occasion and awarded the diplomas on the behalf of the board and also on the behalf of the Iowa State and International S. S. Association.

In connection with the graduating exercises of the afternoon, W. W. Jones, the Bible School Superintendent of Oskaloosa Quarter, conducted a Bible School Conference just preceding the graduating address and presentation of diplomas. Two interesting subjects were presented for discussion. The first subject was opened by Mary T. Sopher, "How to Make the Bible School the Drawing Center of the Community," and was followed by an interesting discussion. W. W. Jones then presented the second subject of the afternoon, "Bible School Nimrods," and very forcibly pointed out that skillful hunters are needed in every school. He then turned to the graduating exercises and introduced Ora W. Carrell, who gave the graduating address, using as his theme, "What It Costs to Become a Good Bible School Teacher." Following the address he presented the diplomas to the class. The service closed with a prayer of consecration by W. W. Jones.

The course used by the class was "Preparation for Teaching," by Oliver, one of the standard courses recommended by the Bible School Board. A very interesting fact in connection with the Grinnell Class is that they completed their work within seven months beginning last February.

The splendid work which the Grinnell Class has accomplished will be a very great encouragement to those of other classes who are now carrying on their work.

HOT SHOTS ON TEACHER TRAINING!

Can you still repeat the Slogan of our State Sunday School Association that Mr. Stem taught us at Yearly Meeting? All ready; all together now:—"To carry the open Bible—by the hand of the trained teacher—to every boy and every girl—and every man and every woman in Iowa!" That was fine the way you repeated it! But say, are you actually working it out in your school and in your neighborhood?

Do you know the Aims of our State Sunday School Association? They are these: 1. Every County a Standard County. 2. Every School a Standard School. 3. Every Worker Trained.

The Aims of our Bible School Board are like unto them—1. Every quarterly Meeting a Front Rank Quarter. 2. Every School a Standard School. 3. Every Worker Trained.

What is the biggest need of your School? Think hard now! is it more pupils? More regular attendance? Better equipment for work? 'Fess up now—Isn't the greatest need of your School better trained and equipped teachers? Do you know how to solve the problem? It's easy through Teacher Training!

The Symptoms: Listlessness; Yawning; Delinquency.

The Disease: Inefficiency of Bible School Teacher.

The Remedy: Teacher Training!

A CALL TO TEACHER TRAINING

We are just entering upon a New Year of Bible School work. The report of the Secretary, Viola Smith, for the year just closed shows some splendid gains over the previous year. As soon as the new Yearly Meeting Minutes reach you do not fail to note carefully the statistical report of the various schools of the Yearly Meeting as given by the Secretary. Note how your school stands as compared with the other schools of the Quarter and of the Yearly Meetings.

One of the encouraging features of the past year was the fact that sixteen of our schools reported some form of Teacher Training with 115 persons enrolled while during the previous year only six schools reported Teacher Training with an enrollment of 40. The schools reporting Teacher Training this year were,—Grinnell, New Sharon, Arnold's Park, Illinois Grove, Indianola, Cedar Creek, Salem, Hickory Grove, Walnut, Des Moines, Liberty, Le Grand, Bangor, Stanford, and Minneapolis.

But excellent as this record is, the Bible School Board of the Yearly Meeting has set a much higher goal for the coming year. This requires that twenty-five of our schools have Teacher Training Classes and that there be fifty graduates by our next Yearly Meeting. This means that EVERY school which had Teacher Training last year must continue with the work, complete the examinations and the work required,—and that a large number of NEW schools must organize Teacher Training Classes this year. We OUGHT to have twenty-five new Classes—WILL YOUR School be one to so organize?

The work is not at all difficult, indeed, it is most interesting and profitable. Ask anyone who has had it! It will mean increased efficiency for the life of every teacher taking the course as well as for the work of the school. The schools of Iowa Yearly Meeting must lead in efficient Bible school work—but we can never hope to do so without trained teachers.

One of the best books for a school just beginning the work in Teacher Training is that of "Preparation for Teaching," by Oliver. It may be obtained for twenty-five cents from the Friends Bible School Board of Fairmount, Ind. A number of our Schools used this book last year.

All questions relative to Teacher Training should be addressed to Anna Smith, New Providence, Ia., our Superintendent of that Department of work for the Yearly Meeting. She will be glad to give any help that may be desired. By a recent action of our Bible School Board she will now issue all examination questions, grade the papers, and grant Diplomas upon the completion of the work. Anna Smith is headquarters for the Teacher Training work of Iowa Yearly Meeting—do not hesitate to ask her questions or any help desired.

We want to make this year 1916-1917 the biggest year yet in the Bible School work of our Yearly Meeting. The outlook is most encouraging. May we count on you and your school to help? There is no surer way of laying the foundation for this than by the organization of a Teacher Training Class in your school! Place your school on the Honor Roll of the Yearly Meeting!

Yours for Efficient Service,
ORA W. CARRELL, Field Sec.

THE NEBRASKA PAGE

AT VILAS, COLORADO

James C. Fisk of Liberal, Kansas, was present at our regular Monthly Meeting in July and held a two days' meeting at that time. Although we desired him to do so, he could not feel clear to remain for a revival meeting at that time. Later he felt a concern for this place and on September 10 began a series of meetings which lasted two weeks. Services for the first few days were held in the church until the tabernacle could be brought from the station and erected one-half a mile east of the church.

God's hand has been marvelously revealed in the leading of our brother to this place. The church members enjoyed a greater unity than has ever existed here and new members are being added to the church. Twenty-one persons were converted, renewed or sanctified during his stay with us. We feel that God has greatly used and honored him, this being his first revival effort. His sister Mattie Fisk of Haviland, Kansas, was organist during the meeting and was blessed in special song service. We also enjoyed the fellowship and help of Fred Shumway and Oren Dunlap, both of Liberal, Kansas.

I have always said, and always will say, that the studious perusal of the Sacred Volume will make better citizens, better fathers, and better husbands.—Thomas Jefferson.

FOR SYRIAN RELIEF.

To the Churches of Christ in America:
The President has issued this proclamation to the nation:

By the President of the United State of America:

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas, I have received from the Senate of the United States a Resolution, passed July 7, 1916, reading as follows:

"Resolved, That, appreciating the sufferings of the Syrian people, it is suggested that the President of the United States set aside a day upon which a direct appeal to the sympathy of all American citizens shall be made and an opportunity shall be given for our public-spirited people to contribute to a much-needed fund for the relief of the Syrian people."

And Whereas, a Resolution was passed by the Congress of the United States on July 18, 1916, reading as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in view of the misery, wretchedness and hardships, which these people are suffering, the President of the United States be respectfully asked to designate a day on which the citizens of this country may give expression to their sympathy by contributing to the funds now being raised for the relief of the Armenians in the belligerent countries."

And Whereas, I feel confident that the people of the United States will be moved to aid these peoples stricken by war, famine and disease;

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, in compliance with the said suggestion of the Senate, and the said request of the Congress thereof; do appoint and proclaim Saturday, October 21, and Sunday, October 22, 1916, as joint days upon which the people of the United States may make such contributions as they feel disposed for the aid of the stricken Syrian and Armenian peoples.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this thirty-first day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-first.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President: Robert Lansing,
Secretary of State.

BIBLE SCHOOL

October 29.

Subject—The Voyage.
Lesson—Acts 27:1-38.

Golden Text—Commit thy way unto Jehovah; trust also in him and he will bring it to pass. Psalms 37:5.

At last the government took a definite stand and started Paul on his journey to appear before Caesar. How slowly affairs often move in legal circles! For many months Paul had been a prisoner in chains. How those iron bands must have wounded his flesh! How tired physically he must have been at times! How uncertain his future! In Caesarea he had remained those years, not knowing when his release would come. Yet we hear no word of complaint. He was learning all through that period to be content with his lot.

His was a happy disposition because of his clear conscience. Free from the blood of all men, he could abide the future in full confidence that God would take care of him. Having consecrated his body as well as his soul, God was free to make such disposition of him as seemed good. Now he is sailing westward. The salt winds fan those cheeks so long accustomed to dungeon air.

Paul had not been idle. As opportunity opened he had been preaching Jesus Christ and him crucified. For a time his opportunity was to be limited, but he was no less ready to preach to officers, sailors and prisoners, for all must know of the Christ regardless of station in life.

One of the interesting things about Paul in prison is the way the officials treated him. The apostle may have presented a poor physical appearance, as some have argued, but it is quite evident that he had the happy faculty of making friends quickly. Being a Roman citizen may have obtained for him certain favors, but he was a prisoner, a Jew, and of no large reputation in the Roman world. Hence we must infer that he had a winning way about him and was thus able to turn it to account in the interests of the kingdom.

It was a voyage to try the heart of hardened seamen. Never did the apostle's coolness and courage show to better advantage. He put to shame experienced sailors, showed more knowledge of seamanship and stood the test as few if any others could do. He probably had had experience at sea, and some suggest that he may have been a sailor in his younger days, but the secret of his success on this voyage must be sought in another direction. Paul was a man consecrated in an unusual sense, and that gave him poise. He knew that God would use him to the glory of the cause and it mattered little to him what happened, so God willed it.

In those hours of testing, God appeared to him in a reassuring way, and he went about his tasks feeling confident that he was fulfilling God's purposes. So we may rest assured that God will see us through the task he has assigned to us.

CHURCH AT WORK

Sedley, Va.—Charles Mesner, of Central City, Nebraska, has located here to take charge of the work in the two meetings of Sedley and Beth-el. Jesse Stanfield, who has done splendid things for us during the past year, has resigned to finish the course at Hartford Theological Seminary.

A recent every member canvass here met with the usual success, proving that everybody is willing to help with the church finances if shown the need and given the opportunity.

On Quarterly Review Sunday the Sunday School appointed two leaders to choose sides, much after the manner of an old-fashioned "spelling bee." The questions about the lessons of the Quarter were on slips and each side was given alternate questions. The person answering correctly received the slip and at the end of the contest the side having the most slips was counted the winner.

Pasadena, California—Elisha Blackburn and family of the Friends Africa Industrial Mission are spending a part of their furlough among relatives and friends in Pasadena. They have taken a house and are getting settled for the winter. The older children have entered the public school. Dr. Blackburn has addressed the Pasadena Friends once on his missionary experiences in East Africa.

Pasadena meeting has four members above ninety years of age, Julia Brookshire, 92; Jane M. Grinnell and William H. Coffin, 91, and Tacy T. Rood, 90. On October 1st, William Coffin gave the monthly missionary talk at the Bible School, being present, as usual, in spite of a heavy rain. The active Christian life of this venerable elder is an inspiration to all. The infirmities of age rest more heavily on the three monagenarians and they are seldom able to attend any of the meetings of the church.

Carthage, Indiana—Much interest was taken in the Indiana Centennial observance at Walnut Ridge Quarterly Meeting, at its usual meeting place near Carthage on October 8. After the Bible School and morning meeting, Friends gathered from the eight local meetings of the Quarter for a picnic dinner and social hour under the trees. An elaborate program lasting over two hours was presented before an audience that filled the spacious house to almost the limit of its capacity. Professor Lindley of Earlham was the principal speaker, dealing with the Quaker contributions to the state's development. There were other shorter addresses, several special hymns and a presentation of Bayard Taylor's "Quaker Widow," and another shorter selection by nine persons in old costumes. The exercises closed with a few brief reminiscences by older members of the meeting.

Richmond, Indiana—The Women's Foreign Missionary Society, comprising members of the four Friends churches in Richmond, held its annual open meeting at South Eighth street on the evening of October 11. It was in the nature of a farewell reception to Charles E. Tebbetts and family who are to leave about the first of November for California. More than a hundred persons were present. Effie Hall, President of the Society, expressed words of welcome and conducted the program of the evening. Milo S. Hinckle, pastor at East Main Street, spoke earnest words of appreciation of the nine years residence of the Tebbetts family in Richmond, while President Robert L. Kelly of Earlham College expressed his appreciation of the organized activities of The American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, and said that Charles Tebbetts had done more than any other one person to bring the work of the Board to its present state of efficiency. A suitable response was made in an address by Charles E. Tebbetts, while Mrs. Tebbetts and their daughter, Edith, expressed in a few words their appreciation of the kindness of Richmond Friends. Music was furnished by a young ladies' quartette from East Main street and after a closing prayer by Francis C. Anscombe, pastor at South Eighth street, refreshments were served during a social hour.

West Richmond, Indiana—West Richmond Monthly Meeting convened in its regular monthly session on the evening of October 12. Six new members were received. There has not been a Monthly Meeting for the last eight or ten months that has not witnessed the reception of from one to eight members. A letter of loving appreciation of the presence and work of Charles E. Tebbetts and family in the meeting for the past nine years was read and directed to be sent to the family. These Friends expect to leave for California within the next two or three weeks. It was announced that the new meeting house will probably be ready for occupancy about the middle of November.

Lawrence, Mass.—Salem Quarterly Meeting, usually held at North Weare, N. H., in Tenth month, will be held this year at Lawrence on the 21, commencing with the business session at 11:30. Lunch will be served at the noon hour and the meeting for worship will be held at 2:00 o'clock. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight will be held at 10:00 o'clock preceding the business meeting. The meeting house is located on Avon Street. Salem Quarterly Meeting is composed of the local meetings of Salem, Lynn, East Lynn, Amesbury, Boston and Lawrence, in Massachusetts, and Weare, Henniker and Pittsfield in New Hampshire.

Clintondale, N. Y.—The Friends of Clintondale meeting observed rally day on Sunday, October 8. After their long vacation of the summer due to the epidemic of infantile paralysis, the children were very happy to be together again and were instructively entertained by an appropriate address. At the morning service a rally day sermon was preached by the pastor, John D. Piper, and special music was furnished by the choir. In the afternoon the Juniors reassembled and furnished their quota to the general rally. The Christian Endeavor service occupied the evening. An excellent musical program was rendered and Professor Marsh, principal of the Highland high school, addressed the Society, giving the young people much helpful advice. Reports have not come in from the other meetings of the Quarter, but no doubt rally day was observed by them also.

New Driftwood, Indiana—New Driftwood particular meeting observed Centennial Sunday on October 8. The members invited their neighbors and friends far and near to come with well filled baskets and spend the day. The response was most gratifying. The program as printed in The American Friend was used with some modification. Herschel Ruddick, a boy yet in the grades, prepared and read a paper on "The Beginning of Indiana." Items of local interest and information about the influence of Friends in the state and nation were given by William Ruddick, William Booth and Mary Kesler. A short, forceful sermon was preached by David T. New som from Psalms 33:12.

After dinner Brother Smith, of the Christian church at Seymour, Indiana, gave an address full of thought and inspiration. He impressed the fact that God has commanded and commissioned fathers to erect family altars and to officiate thereat. The numbers of the afternoon program were interspersed by well chosen songs. "Reminiscences" were given by Frank Kistler, an old man of the community. He said that seventy-five years ago when he was a boy seventeen years of age, there was but one voting precinct and one post-office in the county with mail but once a week. At that time there was not a culvert or bridge in the county and smaller streams were crossed at fords and the larger ones at ferries. In that early day those who would teach school went from house to house seeking subscriptions. If thirty names were secured the person would teach three months at $1.50 per scholar and board around in the neighborhood. The teachers passed no examinations and their principal requirements seemed to be the ability to read and to have facility in making quill pens. As we looked at the state-ly old gentleman standing erect beside his chair, we wondered how it would seem to be able to say that "seventy-five years ago we were seventeen years old."

work of the new year with Charles T. Moore, formerly of Indianola, Iowa, as pastor. He is an earnest worker and is taking hold of the work in a promising manner. The C. E. Society has recently been organized and young Friends are showing much interest in the work. The Bible School has increased in interest and attendance since the heat of the summer. At the beginning of the pastoral year a social event long to be remembered was held in the basement of the church. This was in the form of a reception to the incoming pastor and also a farewell to our former pastor, Gertrude M. Remier, who has gone from us to Carmel, Indiana, and a farewell to John F. Haines and family, who have recently moved to Indianapolis. Two hundred guests were entertained, after which refreshments were served by the ladies of the "Working Society." On November 12, a series of special revival services will begin, in charge of our pastor, with Leora M. Bogue, of Fairmount, in charge of the singing.

Springfield Meeting, Ohio—October 8 was a day of unusual interest in the meeting here. It had been previously announced that "family day" would be observed at that time, and every family belonging to the meeting was urgently requested to be present. There was a most hearty response to the invitation and when the meeting hour arrived there was a well-filled house, the families, father, mother and children, large and small, sitting together.

Emma Doan read the 91st Psalm, and invoked the divine blessing upon the fathers, mothers and children of our meeting and nation. The pastor, Jesse H. Harvey, brought a most helpful message from I Samuel 16:11, "Are here all thy children?" Three new members were given a public welcome. There was also a "roll call" of the families comprising the meeting. Special music throughout the service was furnished by members of the meeting. We believe a deeper interest was quickened and the church strengthened.

Topic—"The Rewards of Religion."
1 Cor. 3:6-23. (Honorary Members' Meeting.)

Let two of the Honorary Members lead this meeting. Read messages from others of the honorary list who cannot be present. Ask an aged minister in the church to give a ten-minute talk on the topic from his own experience. Let this be an "Experience Meeting," and urge all to take part, using the following suggestive questions as subjects for the short talks:

What does Solomon say about a "Good Name"?

In Romans 14 what are we told about the "Respect of Men"?

The Psalmist tells of heart peace and abounding joy in Ps. 91:1-10 and 16:1-11.

What does Paul tell of fruitful service in Col. 1:10?

What did Paul say he would rather glory in and what was to be his reward? 2 Tim. 4:6-8.

What is the reward in inner satisfaction?

What is the reward in strength of character?

Am I doing my service for reward only?

Do I really enjoy my service for Christ?

One of the best rewards of religion is the greater ease with which service is rendered after years of experience. With every year service for the Lord Jesus not only becomes easier, but better.

Prof. Rufus M. Jones and Prof. Henry M. Cadbury, of Haverford College, are preparing books for fall publication, the former a life of St. Paul, the latter a study of the Gospel of St. Luke.

John McMillan and wife, after seven years of pastoral service in the limits of Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, Ohio, have resigned their work there and are now located at Waynesville in Miami Quarter.

Friends University has a well-organized art department, under the leadership of Prof. Jenkins, who had a number of finely developed paintings of his own workmanship on display during Yearly Meeting Week.

The London Friend of August 4 contained the names of sixty-three Friends and attenders detained by military or in prison. The majority of these are in a civil prison under sentences varying from fifty-six days to a year.

The two classes of men and women in West Richmond Friends meeting, taught respectively by S. E. Nicholson and James B. Unthank, spent an enjoyable evening at a social reception at the meeting house on the evening of October 10.

Tennyson Lewis has moved with his family from Everett, Washington, and is now located at 128 South Milton avenue, Whittier, California. They made the journey in an automobile and have visited at Pasadena, Long Beach, Los Angeles and San Pedro. The blessing of the Lord has been upon their labors.

Henry McKinley, who recently resigned his pastorate at West Elkton, Ohio, has arrived at Mt. Airy, N. C., where he will serve as pastor. The people there are delighted with him and his family and the prospects are bright for a good year's work.

Friends were numerous represented in a church parade at Indianapolis on the evening of October 10, in connection with the Indiana Centennial celebration, which was being observed extensively in that city and throughout the state. The procession was led by a Friend in old time garb on horseback.

MARY T. PYLE
1824-1916.

By AN INTIMATE FRIEND.

Mary T. Carpenter, a life-long Friend, was born in New York City, Fifth Month, 10th, 1824, her parents being Nathaniel and Zeruah Carpenter. The family moved to Peekskill, on the Hudson River, where they lived until 1834, when they removed to Wilmington, Ohio.

She was married Fifth Month, 20th, 1852, to William L. Pyle, and, after a few years residence in Ohio, they removed to Richmond, Indiana, and, in 1863 they removed to Indianapolis, Indiana, where she continued to live surrounded by a loving family until her death.

Of a naturally strong constitution and blessed with excellent health, she felt it to be both her duty and her high privilege to minister to those who were less fortunate than herself and, for many years, was engaged actively in uplift work of various kinds.

She and her husband were among the founders of the Colored Orphans' Home in Indianapolis, and she remained a member of the Board of Managers until death called her. She was also one of the founders of the Bertha Ballard Home, in Indianapolis, a Christian boarding home for young business women, and here also she remained a member of the Board throughout the balance of her life.

Recognizing in her one who was feeding upon the "hidden manna" and also her other qualifications for the office, she was called early in life to the position of Elder, a place she held more than forty years, till death absolved the appointment.

During her active life, she did what she could of the Lord's work, that was close at hand, in her inimitable modest way, "preaching without sermons," her entire life being a lesson of faith, hope, and restful trust in God, a favorite scripture of her's being, "Let not your heart be troubled."

Sixteen years ago, she suffered a fall, since which time she has been unable to leave her home except on rare occasions. After her active life had ceased, and she was compelled to sit in her chair, during long weary years, her uncomplaining, patient, trustful spirit shed an even greater influence on those about her, and friends who visited her, often remarked that it was a perfect inspiration to be in her presence, she evidently having partaken of meat that they knew not of. To paraphrase a little,

"None knew her but to love her; none named her but to praise."

After many years calm seclusion, on Ninth Month, 4th, 1916, she looked, and, behold, a door was opened in Heaven; and the first voice she heard was as it were a trumpet talking with her; which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter; and, as her eyes closed peacefully on earthly scenes, they opened on heavenly, and she saw the King in His beauty.

Among those who gathered at her funeral were many of her friends of other years, who came to take a farewell look at the placid face, so dear to their memories. It was significant, that three ministers, Willard O. Trueblood, Morton C. Pearson and Albert J. Brown, could take part in the services, for, had not her long life spanned three generations, and had not this mother in Israel ministered to each of these men, in her office of elder? Verily this was a shock of corn fully ripe, for she was the oldest member of the First Friends' Church of Indianapolis. She is survived by four children; Charles C. Pyle, Marietta P. Adams, Anna C. Pyle and Edna P. Evans, all residents of Indianapolis, also five grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

To quote a familiar text of her husband, the late William L. Pyle, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them."

MARRIED.

Brown-Reynard—At the home of the bride's parents, Dr. and Mrs. E. G. Reynard in Union City, Indiana, August 17, 1916, Russell Lowell Brown and Edna May Reynard, Minister, Roy Wollam of Spiceland, Ind.

Westerhouse-Setzer—At Eudora, Kansas, Elmer Edward Westerhouse of Eudora to Elsie Orpha Setzer of Whittier, California. Minister, A. J. Bales, using the ring ceremony.

DIED.

Durham—After years of failing health Henry Durham died at Sylvania, Indiana, June 28, 1916, aged nearly eighty-five years. He joined the Friends church in his teens and was ever loyal to its teachings and well versed in its disciplinary requirements. He filled many important stations and so long as he was able was found in his place. Probably he and his wife (who died four years ago) did more than any other family in entertaining traveling Friends and others. He was almost anxious at times that his departure would soon come and left the testimony that all was right. He was a member of Rush Creek Monthly Meeting.

Lindley—Elizabeth Lindley, daughter of James and Margaret Woody, was born in Parke County, Indiana, April 21, 1841, and died at her home in Kansas September 22, 1916. She married Isaac Lindley in 1860. To this union were born eleven children. She was converted in the winter of 1872 and entered earnestly into the work of persuading other lost souls to seek the Savior. In time she found the need of a deeper work of grace, which by consecration and faith she soon obtained. She was a minister in the Friends church for more than thirty years, and at the time of her death was evangelistic superintendent of Elk River Quarterly Meeting in Kansas Yearly Meeting. Besides the children she left twenty-nine grandchildren and eleven great grandchildren.

Macy—William B. Macy, son of Enoch and Nancy Rayl Macy, was born December 1, 1820, and died at the home of his grandson at Cumberland, Indiana, September 24, 1916. Burial was at Spiceland, Indiana, and the services were conducted by Willis Bond.

Smith—Mamie A. Smith, daughter of David and Emaline Smith, was born in Wabash County, Indiana, February 14, 1873, and died at Wabash September 20, 1916. She married Benjamin Smith December 22, 1889. She was converted when about twenty-five years of age and later received the baptism of the Spirit. In 1911 she was recorded a minister of the gospel. Most of her ministry was spent with her local meeting at New Holland. Her services of love to the needy had endeared her greatly to the community. At the time of her death she was evangelistic superintendent of Wabash Quarterly Meeting. Funeral services were conducted by A. J. Furstenberger, pastor at Wabash, assisted by Grace Hobbs, pastor at New Holland and Ida Stauffer of Wabash meeting.

Stanley—Martha W. Stanley, daughter of Jehu and Lydia Maria Stanley, died at Beloit, Ohio, August 29, 1916, aged fifty-six years and two months. She was a birthright Friend and early sought Christ in saving and sanctifying power. The work of the church was a lifelong interest to her and at the time of her death she was an elder in the First Friend's church at Cleveland, Ohio. At one time she was a teacher in the Cleveland Bible Institute. As assistant secretary of Friends African Industrial Mission she gave several years of arduous service. By profession she was a trained nurse. Early in life she became the bosom companion of her sainted mother and so faithfully did she strive to make the closing years of her mother's life comfortable that after death two years and four months ago, the sorrow and strain were more than physical strength could endure. She suffered a stroke that has been followed by others until the one that resulted in death. A most beautiful Christian life has left its benediction upon everyone who knew her.

Stout—Simon Stout was born in Park County, Indiana, August 1, 1838, and died at the home of his daughter at Capron, Oklahoma, August 18, 1916. He was a birthright Friend and always active in the business of the church and Sunday School. He married Ruth M. Smith in 1866. He is survived by two sons and two daughters. His end was peace.

The nearer we come to the Lord, and the more intimate our fellowship, the easier it always is to pour out our hearts in fervent supplication.—Robert Macdonald.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

A Moment in the Morning

A moment in the morning, ere the cares of day begin, Ere the heart's wide door is open for the world to
- enter in;

Ah, then, alone with Jesus, in the silence of the morn,

In heavenly sweet communion let your duty-day be born.

In the quietude that blesses with a prelude of repose,

Let your soul be soothed and softened as the dew revives the rose.

A moment in the morning, take your Bible in your hand,

And catch a glimpse of glory from the peaceful promised land;

It will linger still before you when you seek the busy mart,

And like flowers of hope will blossom into beauty in your heart.

The precious words, like jewels, will glisten all the day,

With a rare, effulgent glory, that will brighten all the way.

When comes a sore temptation and your feet are near a snare,

You may count them like a rosary and make each one a prayer.

A moment in the morning—a moment, if no more—
Is better than an hour when the trying day is o'er.

'Tis the gentle dew from heaven, the manna for the day;

If you fail to gather early—alas! it melts away.

So, in the blush of morning, take the offered hand of love,

And walk in heavens' pathway, and the peacefulness thereof.

CANNOT PLEASE ALL

It is not to be expected that every article that appears in The American Friend will be satisfactory to everybody. If it were the paper would not be worth publishing. The management has endeavored to be extremely careful to exclude everything that would contravene the established principles of Christianity as held by the Society of Friends, and also all matter that would probably provoke hurtful controversy. Beyond that the management cannot hold itself responsible if wrong interpretations are put upon that which has been written. It is important also to say again that the editor cannot and will not assume the responsibility of excluding all matter with which he is not in entire agreement. A paper that must narrow itself to the vision of one man is not worth the expense of publication.

The editor will continue to exercise the fullest caution, but he is only responsible directly for the editorial page. Other writers must stand or fall upon their own merits, and we must all remember that if what is written be of men it will come to naught, and if it be of God, we cannot overthrow it.

WHY I BECAME A PROHIBITIONIST

Rudyard Kipling says that one night, in a concert hall, he saw two young men ply two girls with liquor till they were drunk. Then they led them staggering down a dark street. The rest of the story we give in Mr. Kipling's own words. "Then," he says, "recanting previous opinions, I became a prohibitionist. Better it is that a man should go without his beer in public places, and content himself with swearing at the narrow-mindedness of the majority; better it is to poison the inside with very vile temperance drinks, and to buy lager furtively at back doors, than to bring temptation to the lips of young fools such as the four I had seen. I understand now why the preachers rage against drink. I have said, 'There is no harm in it, taken moderately;' and yet my own demand for beer helped to send those two girls reeling down the dark street to—God alone knows what end. If liquor is worth drinking, it is worth taking a little trouble to come at—such trouble as a man will undergo to compass his own desires. It is not good that we should let it lie before the eyes of children, and I have been a fool in writing to the contrary."—Methodist Recorder.

DOES PROHIBITION PROHIBIT?

As a matter of fact, the question of absolutely prohibiting has nothing to do with the case. The question is, is a state made better, healthier, happier, safer, more prosperous by Prohibition than by saloons? As to that in Kansas, Floyd Keeler, a Kansan writing in the Atlantic Monthly, is perhaps as reliable an authority as the Nebraska "prosperity" league. This is his answer to "It Don't Prohibit":

Liquor is sold in Kansas, but it is a crime to sell it, and "bootleggers" furnish not a few occupants of our jails and penitentiaries * * * A generation which has never seen a legalized saloon has grown to manhood, and it is a generation which cannot understand how there could be any question as to the wisdom of Prohibition. We do not claim that Prohibition absolutely prohibits, but it has made disreputable and outlawed a traffic which has never proved itself beneficial, and from which great evils are known to emanate. The saloon has yet to prove its usefulness, the opponents of Prohibition have yet to show us a better method of curbing the curse of drunkenness with its attendant vices; and until they can bring forth such proof and show us such method, we, in Kansas at any rate will rest content with what we firmly believe is the best and what we have already tried and proved. We wonder that the whole country cannot see it.

So let us pass on to other angles. It doesn't prohibit. We all admit it. But what of it?—Nebraska State Journal.

THE TRUE MEASURE

What shall be the measure of my contribution to God's work? I shall give according as God prospers me. But this is very indefinite. What proportions of my prosperity shall I give? I gave myself and all I possessed to Him when I was converted, and I still belong to Him. True, but am I carrying out my contract? These general terms are deceptive. My expenditures for the last month, what do they show? How much sacrifice? What proportion of income? How much more have I spent for self than for Christ.—The Review of Missions.

The soul would have no rainbow,
Had the eyes no tears.—John Vance Cheney.

Pursuing a Criminal

The prohibition movement primarily is the protest of conscience against a blighting disorder of civilization. Acting upon the broad principle that good morals must constitute the very soul of the social order of the world, the movement for the overthrow of the liquor traffic may be characterized as an effort to reconstruct civilization according to the pattern of holier ideals. Not even the most ardent defender of the trade will claim that the saloon is synonymous with good morals, or that in any sense it is contributory to the best ideals of human culture and refinement.

The liquor traffic at its best is organized greed. It preys upon humanity, not that it has aught against any, but that, regardless of the rights of all others, it may satisfy its avaricious hunger and fill its treasury with gold. It is a criminal out upon the highway of life, a freebooter, respectful of no law, an assassin of character, sending the blight of death into happy homes, defiling womanhood, debauching manhood, blighting childhood and polluting government itself. The wonder is that such a rapacious tyrant could have escaped the wrath of the world so long.

Within a few days the press has carried the distressing news of the downfall through drink of a minister, much beloved, in St. Louis. The liquor traffic is no respecter of persons. Its slimy, greedy fingers have clutched the throats of men and women in the palace no less than in the hovel, in the high places of the land as well as in the back alley, in the ranks of the 400 as well as in the slums, and all alike have fallen to the level of the beast and oft-times seem possessed with the instincts of a demon.

There lies before us as we write the remarkable life-story in detail of a man now serving a life-sentence in a New York State prison. The saloon got him when a boy, and while again and again he broke its clutch, like the greedy monster it is, it pursued him relentlessly until finally, crazed through drink, he slew his friend in cold blood. According to his own words, he "wanted to be sober, respected, but could not because society had surrounded me with pitfalls and temptations," and then he asks: "Is society blameless in my sin?"

Is there anything the saloon ever did which will justify its continued existence in the face of such a life-story as mine? Is there any personal liberty to drink which is more worth saving than such human stuff as was I? And what will any smug, respectable attempt to pass this question by receive at our Maker's hands when you and I meet in His presence?"

There is the problem in a nut shell, for society is dealing in human souls when it dares to underwrite the saloon and turn it loose to prey upon humanity—for dollars. The measure of the evil for which society is culpable is the combined value of the millions of human lives which have gone out into eternal darkness through the blight of the saloon, not to say anything about the effect upon business, labor, taxes, politics, legislation, the church and government. Civilization will have an awful penalty to pay in the final day of reckoning, for the damning blight of a world curse is bound to leave its finger prints for generations yet unborn.

The prohibition movement, as one born out of due time, overdue by many decades, is now the one foregleam of a brighter day in our American civilization, for not alone will the banishment of the liquor traffic bring relief to the multitudes who are in the slavery of drink, but the spirit and determination which are prompting this nationwide housecleaning will in itself be a holy benediction to our domestic and national life everywhere.

It is all too easy to be over optimistic about the speedy coming of national prohibition. Rapid as have been the victories of the past two years, we underestimate the power of the saloon if we conclude that it is all over but the shouting. The easier conquests have been made thus far, and the severest criticism that can lie at the door of the prohibition movement thus far is that it expends far too much of its energies on the stump, and far too little in that close, hand-to-hand fashion which deals with the citizen personally, and in which the liquor traffic is an expert by long and successful practice. The one outstanding need of the prohibition movement today, a need so imperative as to be startling, is that of a nation-wide organization, not alone by states, but by districts, down to the precinct, school district and town block, preparatory to that degree of personal agitation and constructive endeavor that is the only guarantee of success in any hotly contested campaign.

On November 7, the electorate of seven states and one territory will face its responsibility directly toward the liquor traffic. California, Montana, Nebraska, South Dakota, Missouri, Michigan, Arkansas and Alaska will witness a clash of ballots on this issue, and it is a good guess that prohibition will extend its borders considerably upon that day. Nineteen states, including Virginia, which will close her saloons on November 1, have already outlawed the saloon, and gradually we see the widening circle toward the necessary thirty-six states, which will insure the adoption of a national constitutional prohibitory amendment, when once we can secure a Congress that will submit a resolution for ratification by the several states.

There are Friends' communities in nearly all of these states, and this opportunity is a challenge to them not only to vote right but to use their influence to the utmost from now until election day to get others to do the same. Shall it not be said of our Friends in these states that they were foremost in the contest against the saloon and that by their zeal they provoked others to intensive service in the same direction? November 7 will mark another epoch in the contest for saloon annihilation if the church and all good men and women do their duty.

Home Missions and Social Service

By J. HERSCHEL COFFIN.

(An address read before Indiana Yearly Meeting September 20, 1916.)

I have gone through this rather lengthy analysis in order that I may ask this question: What is the point of view of Friends today as to the essentials of Christianity? What is our vision for the denomination in the century to come? What is our conception of the duty of Indiana Yearly Meeting to the community life of which it is a part for the next 25 or 50 years.

Are we individualists, chiefly attentive to our personal religious experience and satisfied with the individualistic method of "social salvation by addition?" Have some of our most promising members been drawn off into Y. M. C. A. work, or social betterment work of one kind or another and lost to us in all but nominal membership because we offer them no opportunity to deliver their social message? Or have we risen to the organic view, which appreciates both the individual and social sides of Christianity, but which maintains that the church is the channel through which both phases should be carried forward?

The question as to where Friends stand on this matter is difficult to answer because what would be true of historical Quakerism would not be wholly true of present day Quakerism. Nor are all contemporary Friends of the same mind upon the matter.

Historically, Quakers, perhaps more than any other sect, had the social view. While they could not be classed as holding the organic view, because the scientific principles which are basic to this had not yet been enunciated, yet they did have in a remarkable degree the sense of social obligation, and a deep insight into the social implications of the gospel. The first two-thirds of our history is a chronicle of almost continuous struggle, often under severest persecution, for principles which were social in application: the right of freedom in worship, the personal communion of each man with the Father, without the intervention of priest or the machinery of ecclesiasticism, the wrongfulness of war, the possibility of a just and tolerant government, justice and friendship for the Indian, freedom for the slave. And even today we engage in more than our proportion of social enterprises, including peace, missions, Indian affairs, work with the negro, and with delinquent children. And these social enterprises, more than any other factor or factors, are responsible for our place in the family of religious denominations, and for the influence, altogether out of proportion to our numerical strength, which we wield in society today.

But the last third of our history has not been so illustrious. Our testimony had already been largely given and, amid the easier times which the partial acceptance of our principles created, we lost vitality and solidarity. We turned our attention away from the social message to questions of doctrine; and straightway divided and subdivided. Then came the great revival period of the second half of the last century which brought us an abundance of new life and vitality, but which also brought in its train certain undesirable consequences; we lost some of our distinctive characteristics, and tended to settle down into a narrow individualism in common with others whose attention had been directed to the necessity for personal salvation, and whose emotions had been kindled regarding their eternal happiness.

Indicative of the resulting individualistic tendency of today, one not infrequently reads news items in the church paper similar to the following: "The meeting at ——— has just completed a three weeks series of meetings under the efficient leadership of ———. He was much blessed in his ministry and preached a whole gospel. Quite a number decided for Christ and many renewed their allegiance to the church, and the membership was much blessed and strengthened" All sentiment and charity aside, just what does a statement of this sort mean in cold fact; what shall we read between the lines? Notwithstanding the breath of encouragement it contains, it is really a confession that nothing very much was accomplished. It probably means that the annual housecleaning has been finished, which it is hoped will last a year; that not very many of the community were much interested and fewer still actually brought to a personal decision; that some of the members who had become somewhat wayworn have gotten their second breath and are going to try to hold out faithful to the end; that the meeting is going to try to keep its machinery running another year. And about the preacher: Did he really preach a whole gospel? He probably dwelt upon the awfulness of sin and its consequences, the love of God for the sinner, the blessed state of the redeemed. There were also doctrinal sermons about sanctification, and some encouragement to hold out faithful against the lures of a wicked world. But did he give them the vision of a regenerated society, of a community organized for righteousness? Did he preach a socialized conscience which would drive men to practice the presence of Christ in their corporate social life—family, state, and industrial? Did he impress upon them the imperative of social salvation as well as personal redemption?

I fear our answer to these questions will have to be in the negative.

As a denomination we find ourselves in a somewhat anomalous position at the present time. On the one hand we try to keep alive our interest in certain inherited testimonies which are social in implication; for example, peace, which because of the exigency of the European war and the Mexican trouble, has regained something of its original vitality. But on the other hand, our religious philosophy regarding the relation of the church to society is, on the whole, individualistic as far as orthodoxy is concerned. And as a result, in many places, the whole of the religious energy is consumed in keeping the machinery of the church running. While the fields are white unto the harvest all about, we are able only to drive the machine around in a well trodden circle, actually harvesting almost none of the grain which is already over-ripe.

In the meantime, there has grown up an entirely new kind of civilization. Since the time of the Hicksite separation, and during the period of our crystallization into individualism, the wheat-header and the flouring mill have replaced the cradle and the mill-stone; the traction gang plow and railroad have replaced the wooden moldboard and the ox cart; the electric light and the automobile have replaced the tallow candle and the one-horse shay; the patent breakfast-food factory, the bakery, and the packing house supply our tables; the telegraph, telephone, and wireless convey our communications, and the daily paper has largely replaced the Holy Bible as our reading matter. And at the same time that these labor and time-saving devices were being invented and installed, new kinds of leisure-consuming devices and processes have appeared. Literature of all kinds—including the undesirable—has multiplied a thousand fold, athletic and parlor games, musical instruments, photographic apparatus, amusement parks, Coney Islands, vaudeville, moving picture shows, not to mention the card clubs, and endless succession of fancy dances, have all arisen to consume the surplus time and money which have been made possible by modern machinery. And coincident with our mechanical conquest of nature in the fields of both labor and leisure, there has grown up a system of social procedure the principles of which are anything but Christian. In fact, the forces of evil have appropriated the methods of industry and have succeeded so thoroughly in organizing the community for wrong that there is scarcely a form of sin or degradation known to human frailty which is not capitalized and exploited for gain as witness the social evil, and the liquor traffic. Likewise, the innocent impulse for pleasure and amusement has also been capitalized, and countless organizations compete with each other for the privilege of purveying to the public its amusement at so much per hour, quite without consideration for the moral value of their wares.

And what has the church been about while this evolution was taking place?

It would be unjust as well as gratuitous to indict the church with indifference to social conditions; and we must ever bear in mind that it has been the greatest single force for righteousness throughout the turmoil, and that it has saved its thousands and its tens of thousands, notwithstanding its individualistic method. But it remains a fact that much of its energy has been dissipated during this critical period by profitless inter-denominational disputes, on the one hand, and in disastrous internal doctrinal controversies, on the other hand, in which the most virile and large visioned members have often been read out of the denomination by orthodoxy. In addition, more time and energy have been consumed in perfecting and running an elaborate system of machinery which was built to reach the individual as its objective, rather than to win for Christ the evolving social order. In the matter of amusement, for example, the attitude of the church has always been one of suspicion and repression, rather than one of guidance and development.

But the crucial question for us now is: What shall be the attitude of the Society of Friends from this time on? Shall we continue in our individualistic point of view and limit ourselves to the individualistic methods, giving some attention the while, as in the past, to our traditional social testimony? Or, shall we adopt with vigor and enthusiasm the organic view and set ourselves to the interpretation of Christianity anew to this new era with its changed conditions and its perplexing problems?

There are two reasons why the Society of Friends is peculiarly fitted to assume the leadership in putting the organic view into practice. (1) We have the historical background for it. In the past, under other conditions, we have consistently borne testimony that the program of Jesus Christ is workable in social affairs. Our work along the lines of peace, in behalf of the Indian, and the slave has given us the training necessary for practical social enterprises. And the opportunity is now ours to restate the principles of Jesus in terms of present day conditions—complicated as they are—so that society may see that Christ's is the only program which will finally work in the solution of our social problems. And it is my firm conviction that our only hope of rehabilitation as a Society lies in this direction. Only as we get the new vision of our social mission will be able to generate enough spiritual power to move the machinery of the church out of the circle where it has been running into the larger social field and actually reap a harvest worth while.

(2) In the second place, ours is a distinctly spiritual religion. We have ever insisted on the indwelling spirit, and the direct communion with God without the use of material aids and forms. We originally insisted that Christianity is a way of living rather than a creed—though we have partially forgotten this testimony in late years—and that all men are brothers, each of equal value in the sight of God. And we have already seen that a spiritual impulse is the necessary condition of unity and universality in our attempt at social regeneration. The time has come when a merely formal religion will no longer appeal to the bulk of society; but society is eagerly awaiting the man or the group of men who will show how Christ's program can be worked out in modern social conditions. But this cannot be done without the spirit of the Master—the spirit of Love—which our ancestors always tried to carry into their social relations. Quakerism therefore seems spiritual to the world today—and always—because its essential spirit has received a social expression. And that is why Friends are in a position to assume the leadership in social evangelism now.

But granting the truth of the analysis thus far, what is there of practical value in it for us? We have talked of society in general, and of social regeneration; but how can the abstract principles regarding these be applied to concrete problems?

The answer is social service; or, if this term seems lacking in religious connotation, social evangelism. This substitution in terms may be made because all of the enterprises which are grouped under the name of social service must have as their objective the regeneration of society. And the value of any proposed activity of a social character must be tested by this criterion: whether or not it will make toward the reorganization of community forces, so that individuals may not labor under a needless handicap in their personal efforts at Christian living.

In attempting to enter into the field of social service or social evangelism there are five underlying principles which must be kept in mind. (1) This general social process which we have discussed in the abstract always centers in the community. Each community with more or less completeness, depending upon its size and the diversity of its interests, is a smaller edition of the inclusive social process. In it are found all of the social institutions—home, school, government, industry, and the church. It has its customs, traditions, public opinion, and social standards; its telephones, mail service, roads and railroads. So that the definite problem of social service or social evangelism is to evangelize the community of which the church is itself a part. (2) The religious life of a community depends in large degree upon the economic status and intellectual and moral standards of the families which are its units. (3) The church and the school should be the joint center of the community. This should be true in the intellectual, moral, civic, social, spiritual, practical aspects, and in the matter of leisure. (4) The church must possess definite and accurate knowledge about the community—not vague impression, guess work and conjecture. (5) Many definite reforms and enterprises can be carried out only on the basis of a federation of all the churches of the community for practical work.

Inasmuch as over 66 per cent of the resident membership of Indiana Yearly Meeting lives in rural communities—that is, in the open country, or in villages or towns of less than 2500 inhabitants—I shall limit my suggestions to the question of a social program suitable for the rural community. Such a program might include the following points:

1. Systematic study of the general question of Christian sociology on the basis of such books as Social Evangelism, by Harry F. Ward; The Church at the Center, by Warren H. Wilson; The Making of a Country Parish, by Harlow S. Mills; The South Today, by Moore.

2. Community Survey, based on a manual such as Community Study for Country Districts, by Anna B. Taft.

3. Economic Betterment. The Commission on Social Service of the last Five Years Meeting has this to say as to the importance of this point: "The underlying problem in every rural district is economic in character; it is the problem, namely, of successful and profitable farming. Surveys that have been made in recent years show conclusively that it is not possible to maintain a live and adequate church in rural communities where farming is a commercial failure. * * * Where the soil is exhausted, or the methods of farming are out of date, or where for any other reason the farm does not supply a family livelihood, the robust and mentally progressive sons and daughters seek their careers in the cities, and the weaker and less capacitated offspring remain to carry on the losing struggle, and, as a natural result, the church, and everything else in that district that ministers to the higher life, shows a decline, or even a total slump. The primary remedy in all such cases is the introduction of scientific farming." Economic betterment may, therefore, be stimulated by:

- (1) Clubs or classes for the study of scientific farming.
- (2) Extension work of Agricultural Schools.
- (3) Boys' corn clubs.
- (4) Co-operative buying and selling.
- (5) Good roads, etc.

4. Civic improvement. To be fostered by the beautification of homes, grounds and roadsides, and by the creation of a community spirit.

Civic improvement also demands intelligent and active participation in local governmental affairs.

5. A satisfactory solution of the problem of leisure.

There is scarcely any other problem of greater significance to the rural community at the present time. The way in which a community spends its leisure time is both an index of its moral and spiritual status and a determining factor in the character of the young. A social survey will show what the forms of amusement are, and where people meet for social purposes. The following things come to mind as offering relief from doubtful forms of recreation, and when rightly engineered, provide adequate outlets for the necessary play impulse:

- (1) Athletic events with games between local teams.
- (2) Socials that include not only the church group, but all the young people of a community, attempting to transcend clique lines.
- (3) Entertainments. The Home Mission Committee might better rent a hall and offer a desirable motion picture one night a week than allow young couples to go off to the nearby city to participate in doubtful amusements there. The occasion may easily be made a semi-social affair, where the group spirit and community interest is stimulated.
- (4) A club room provided with papers and current magazines where people may meet without invitation or appointment, may solve the problem of long winter evenings.
- (5) Dramatic and musical organizations are a never-failing bond of community interest.

6. Intellectual development. Every community needs the intellectual stimulus which the presence of a library or popular lecture course provides.

These and other similar enterprises which the community survey will suggest as being suited to the exigencies of the particular locality are legitimate and necessary factors in the evangelization of the social order as represented in concrete communities. And, when coupled with a devout religious attitude, or being the materialization of a socio-spiritual impulse, they not only raise the moral and intellectual standards of the community, but make wrong doing more difficult.

I cannot close this paper without reference to one other point in relation to the practical carrying out, in any large and successful way, of a social program. This is the need for a group of trained leaders among us who shall help inaugurate and carry on these new lines of work. This need hardly demands further emphasis, because it is obvious to all that ours is a civilization characterized by a high degree of division of labor, each division and subdivision of which is directed by experts. And if the church is to succeed in making a deep impression upon the social process so as to reshape the principles of its organization it must be done through efficient leadership backed up by the enthusiastic and intelligent co-operation of the membership at large. For this reason we ought by every means possible to encourage our young people to secure the training necessary for effective leadership by attendance at colleges and seminaries where the principles of social evangelism are being studied and taught.

And in the mean time the remainder of us should enlist in the movement to study the possibilities of social evangelism through the study classes which we hope to organize. To this end I wish most strongly to urge the heartiest co-operation of every member of this body with the Quarterly Meeting Superintendents of Home Missions as they shall attempt to inaugurate systematic study along this line the coming year.

And as a consummation of this co-operative study and labor, let us pray that within a period of ten years we may possess a group of adequately trained young men and women leaders and an intelligent and willing membership which together shall win more completely the social order of this commonwealth for Christ; and incidentally, put our own beloved denomination in the forefront of those who are striving to bring in the Kingdom of God.

But we cannot wait ten years to begin our labor in this fight; we must make a start now—incomplete and inadequate as our methods may be. And for the purpose of making as intelligent a beginning as possible, and in the interest of more immediate results, I call your attention again to the recommendation of the Efficiency Committee recently made regarding a Field Secretary, and most strongly urge that in the very near future you enable our committee to co-operate with the committees on Foreign Missions, Bible School, and Christian Endeavor to secure a Field Secretary who shall devote his full time to the extension of these four lines of work.

The duties of a Field Secretary along the lines of Home Missions and Social Service should be to stimulate systematic study of the problem, to give instruction and assistance in the matter of making community surveys, to help local workers to plan their community work on the basis of these surveys, and to suggest definite methods of procedure.

That such an undertaking would be successful is indicated by the results of a similar temporary enterprise the past summer. As already referred to in the report of the Efficiency Committee, Thomas Kelly, of Wilmington, Ohio, was secured for the months of July and August by the Efficiency Committee of this Yearly Meeting, together with the Board of Young People's Activities of the Five Years Meeting, with instructions to push Young People's Activities, Bible School, and Community Work. His work was limited to three quarterly meetings; and while the time at his disposal allowed little more than a brief educational campaign and a few inspirational talks, the results of which are not yet fully apparent, yet the investigations of Thomas Kelly, of Wilmington, Ohio, was secured ities and an urgent need for community work of the kinds suggested. And what is true of the need and the opportunity of these quarterly meetings is equally true of the need and the opportunity of the Yearly Meeting. But these needs cannot be adequately met except by a continuous campaign which will be possible alone by the employment of a full-time Field Secretary.

The phrase of our Lord's Prayer, "lead us not into temptation," when translated into human terms means to create an environment in which temptation to evil doing is not present as a persistent social invitation. And may the day soon come when our denomination in this Yearly Meeting and throughout the other Yearly Meetings shall make the answer to this prayer possible by assuming the obligation of social reconstruction, thus helping to eliminate those persistent invitations to evil which now so effectually bar the way to individual salvation and social regeneration.

THE HIGHER LIFE

BETTER THAN BURDEN LIFTING

What helpless creatures we should all make of ourselves if we could persuade God to do for us as we ask! Our first cry, when a heavy burden strikes us, and our continued cry while the burden remains, is that God will take it away. Fortunately God is not so cruel as to do us the harm that we ask for. When our children beg us to let them omit certain school lessons, or give up school entirely, we love them too much to yield to their entreaty. How much better was this petition in a pastor's public prayer: "If any are here with special burdens, if Thou dost not life the load give them strength to bear it."? The power to bear burdens makes a richer life than a weakening freedom from burdens.—Sunday School Times.

HIS KINGDOM AND INHERITANCE

An aged Christian man was on his death-bed, and was happy in the prospect of soon entering into the joy of his Lord. He had a brother who had made the world the great object of his life, and who, of course, was very poor toward God; and with all his world shrewdness, was so short-sighted as to have made no provision for the world to come, and had no idea of enjoying an inheritance beyond the grave.

When his rich brother came to see him, he upbraided him for giving so much attention to the things of God, and giving away so much of his substance for religious purposes, and subjecting himself to poverty, when, if he had followed his advice and example, he might now have been in the enjoyment of plenty, instead of being, as he termed it, a burden to his friends.

With great calmness and earnestness the dying saint replied—waving his wasted hand toward his poor, self-deceived brother: "Quiet! quiet! Whist, whist, Tam! I have a kingdom na begun upon, and an inheritance that I have na yet seen."—Lutheran Companion.

JOY

Here is a guiding sentence from the Word of God: "And when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also." The song began with the sacrifice. Joy is wedded to consecration. When life became sacrificial song was awakened in the soul. This also is a part of the divine plan for the children of men. Song breaks out in service. There are motor cars fitted with electric light, but the light is conditioned upon movement. The car generates the power as it runs; a long stop, and the light goes out. Joy dies out when we are idle. We generate it as we serve. We begin to sing the song of the Lord when we spend ourselves in the labor of His kingdom. Let us take up some bit of work—the personal care of somebody else or some service in the city or some kind of interest among the needy far away. Let us take up the yoke of the Lord Jesus and draw our share of the world's burden and so "enter into the joy of the Lord."—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

OUR ASSURANCE OF VICTORY.

There is no victory in the power of an hour ago to keep us from sinning now. Our continued victory is not assured to us by our past victories, but only by a present Christ. For real victory over sin is never a matter of our strength, our effort; it is won only by Christ, and is ours only as we trust Him for it. It is true, therefore, that a man has in himself no more power to resist sin after a hundred Christ-achieved victories than after one. They may give him increased confidence in Christ, and thus make it easier for him to continue to trust Christ for victory; but they add not an ounce of strength to himself. The moment he presumes on past deliverances, instead of trusting he is gone. It is as though a man crossing on a narrow bridge should believe, when half-way over, that because he had come well on the way in perfect safety he could now ignore the bridge. His bridge-given safety of an instant earlier would be of little value to him after he had stepped off the bridge.

I felt once that I was responsible for the conduct of universal affairs, but I have recently come to believe otherwise. So long as I tried to run the world I was miserable; it makes me happy now to trust in God.—Lyman Beecher.

Educational Statistics Concerning Friends' Colleges

By ISAAC SHARPLESS.

For the use of the Educational Committee of the Five Years Meeting certain data have been collected for the collegiate year 1915-16.

The collegiate institutions* managed by Friends in the United States are the following which will be indicated in the tables by their numbers.

1. Pacific College, Newberg, Oregon.
2. Whittier College, Whittier, California.
3. Central College, Central City, Nebraska.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Kansas Yearly Meeting was held at Wichita, Kansas from the 3d to the 9th of October. This is the first occasion of its ever being held in Wichita twice in succession. During the past thirty years the geographical center of the Yearly Meeting has shifted south west about the distance between Lawrence and Wichita, two hundred miles. It seems likely that the latter place will be its home for some time to come.

University Monthly Meeting presented to the Yearly Meeting a project for building a meeting house near Friends University, with the Yearly Meeting co-operating, the house to be used for both local meeting and Yearly Meeting. The Yearly Meeting looked with favor on the proposition, and referred it to the Quarterly Meetings for their consideration.

The first, and for a time the most preplexing problem before the Yearly Meeting was that of a change of program for the sessions next year. The question was introduced in the first session of the meeting on Ministry and Oversight Tuesday morning. There were three distinct points of view. First, those who held that a Yearly Meeting is distinctively for the transaction of business, and that nothing should be permitted to interfere with that purpose, necessary as other matters are in their place; second, those who felt our Yearly Meeting sessions should bear a stronger element of inspiration and instruction for those who attend; third, those who looked upon evangelism as the fundamental task of the church under every possible circumstance, hence a Yearly Meeting must be first of all warmly evangelistic.

The meeting on Ministry and Oversight appointed a committee to consider the matter. It was taken to the Yearly Meeting, where a larger committee was appointed. For a time it seemed as though it would be impossible for the different ideals to be brought together on any satisfactory basis. Then there was prayer—not vocal, but each in his own heart—and within three minutes time the whole atmosphere had changed. A plan was immediately formed for next year's program which was entirely satisfactory to every member of the large committee, and which was unanimously adopted by the Yearly Meeting.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

The request made was "State briefly your attitude towards professional or vocational education."

1. We do not favor vocational or professional education here except that we do desire to measure up to the standard requirements so that our graduates may be certificated for teaching in the standard high schools, and we are putting in a business course in connection with our academic.

2. The curriculum offers no vocational courses. The Faculty is not very favorable to the introduction of such work.

3. We are not sufficiently equipped for work in this line.

5. Recognizing the tremendous clamor for vocational education and being financially unable to ignore it we have catered somewhat to it; but have endeavored not to sacrifice the true mission of the College, which is to afford a broad, general education preparing for life, for the making of a life as well as the making of a living.

6. The college holds a conservative attitude on the question. We are drawing in rather than expanding in this direction.

7. The College has some mission in this field.

8. The college has stood for culture studies more than vocational, but there is a tendency to work toward professional and vocational.

10. The college considers its mission educationally to be to give liberal who were present with minutes from other Yearly Meetings were: Florence R. Smith, California; Evangeline Reams, Ohio; Mildred J. Baldwin, Iowa; Geo. H. Moore, Western; Edgar T. Hole, of the East African Mission and I. Gurney Lee, Western; S. Edgar Nicholson, of the American Friend, was in attendance.

The report of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board showed that churches had been built at the following places during the year: Fowler, Pleasant Plain, Gate, Argonia, Oak Creek, Shallow Water and Baxter. The largest of these churches is Fowler, costing $14,350, and having a seating capacity of 500. Parsonages were built or bought at Prairie Vale, Fowler, Argonia, Oak Creek and Miami. M. F. Swofford was reappointed Evangelistic Superintendent.

The report of the statistical secretary showed a total membership of 11,359, a net loss of 29 during the past year. The reported net loss loses its significance, however, when the report is carefully considered. There is a loss of 30 due to error in last year's reports, so if this year's reports are correct there has been an actual gain of one. But of more significance is the fact that the only source of actual loss over gains was in certificates of removal to other yearly meetings. Three hundred and sixty-six such certificates have been issued, while only 263 have been received. It is presumably impossible to prevent members moving to other Yearly Meetings. Births were 141; deaths 86; letters from other churches 105; issued to other churches 87; received by request 497; discontinued 429. Emporia had the largest gain of any meeting in the Yearly Meeting, 98.

At the session devoted to the interests of Friends University the most prominent was the prospective gymnasium. About $21,000 had already been raised by subscriptions. In addition to this there were conditional subscriptions aggregating six thousand dollars. At the session of the Yearly Meeting subscriptions were taken, and a substantial amount realized.

The program adopted for the sessions of the Yearly Meeting next year will be along the following general lines: Each morning 8 to 9, meeting for worship; 9 to 11:10, business session; 11:10 to 12:00, expository and inspirational address. Business session each afternoon at 2:00. Evangelistic meetings each evening excourses. While there is, therefore, some instruction given in Engineering, Chemistry and other subjects of a vocational character all students are required to take a large list of subjects in languages, literature, science, etc. of a non-technical sort.

What courses are given bearing directly on Friendly subjects.

1. All scripture classes, in the college a full year's required work, are taught with friendly interpretation of scripture constantly in view. The course in Church History ends with the history of Friends. The course in Homiletics is taught with the Friendly idea of a prophetic ministry in mind.

2. One course on the Friends Church.
3. None.
- 4.
5. History of Friends, 3 hours, one semester.
The philosophy of Quakerism, 2 hours, one semester.
6. History of Friends.
The course in Missions touched Friends as well as others.
7. History of Friends. Bible Study.
8. None.
- 9.

10. The Bible. History of Christian Thought. Ethics.

State Briefly the usefulness of the Institution to the denomination and what you are doing to forward it.

1. We are developing ministers and other Christian workers who are laboring in our own denomination. We are providing Christian teachers, a goodly number of whom are teaching in Friends schools. Both students and members of the faculty are working in needy fields in the vicinity of the college, especially where the work of Friends needs help. We are developing future missionaries for our work in the foreign mission field. And we are giving the children of Friends as well as others an opportunity for an education, both of high school and college grade, under a safe and emphatically Christian environment and free from many of the dangerous tendencies of the secular schools.

2. In its Biblical department the college is endeavoring to prepare young Friends for greater usefulness in its denominational interests. A course is offered in the history and practice of Friends that they may be better grounded in the principles of the church. The unification of the denomination is being promoted by bringing together and training for leadership the young Friends of the Pacific coast.

3. Preparing ministers and workers for the home field. Some are now in the work and many in prospect.

5. Seventeen of our graduates as well as many students have entered the service of the Society of Friends in distinctive Christian service. The same per cent of students now attending have chosen this service for life. A large number are in foreign fields. All avenues are fostered that look toward directing the minds to this work.

6. The institution serves as a ballast for the two yearly Meetings. We are encouraging the co-operative spirit in every way possible.

7. The institution is vital to the Society of Friends. The Board of Trustees is appointed by the Yearly Meeting.

8. The college is and has been the backbone of N. C. Yearly Meeting. I am pledged to forward the college as an adjunct of the denomination.

10. The college means to aid definitely in the development of Christian cept Friday and Saturday which are reserved for Foreign Missions and Christian Endeavor respectively. All the meetings for worship, the expository hour and the evening evangelistic meetings are to be arranged by the Yearly Meeting Evangelistic and Church Extension board.

YEARLY MEETING NOTES

Several persons declared this was the largest Yearly Meeting ever held in Wichita.

Between eighty and ninety automobiles were counted on the Yearly Meeting grounds at one time Sabbath.

Anyone who attended one of the sessions, day or night, would not be disposed to dispute the statistical secretary's figures on the preponderance of the birth rate. The babies spoke for themselves.

Thirty students of Friends University were on the platform one afternoon, to bear testimony to the Yearly Meeting that they had consecrated their lives to some form of Christian work.

Clayton B. Wells, pastor of Fairmount Congregational Church, gave the address at the session on Peace. He accepts the program of Jesus at its face value.

Last year, in the closing moments of the last session, the Yearly Meeting hurriedly approved an anonymous resolution censuring the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions for "practically requiring" our members preparing for missionary work to attend schools not satisfactory to this Yearly Meeting. This year, in the Foreign Mission session, George H. Moore, chairman of the American Friends Board, stated that said board had never authorized the placing of any constraint on any missionaries, either prospective or on furlough, in the matter of where they should attend school. At a later session, the Yearly Meeting accepted the explanation as satisfactory.

One could not but feel the day of the long sermon had not yet quite passed, when Lindley Wells held the earnest attention of a crowded house for an hour and seventeen minutes, Sabbath evening.

Edgar T. Hole's lecture, one afternoon, explaining the splendid collection of African relics in the University Museum, was one of the real educational features of Yearly Meeting.

J. H. Engle's address at the Bible School session, although delayed an hour and a half by a tardy train, was none the less timely. Mr. Engle is thought and practice as expressed by Friends. A recent donation of $350,000 for graduate study emphasizes this view. We hope to gather here the serious young men of our Society and by contact and instruction encourage their growth and interest in and preparation for Christian work, both within and without the Society.

State briefly the principal needs of the institution and whether your Yearly Meeting is in a condition to supply them.

1. Our principal need is for an increased endowment that will enable us to do our work on a more adequate basis and to measure up to the requirements for standardization in Oregon. Not less than $100,000 additional endowment is imperative, and this one Yearly Meeting is not at all able to raise it. Our membership has already gone to its limit in the support of the college. But it seems that the work must be carried on, and they are attempting to do it as well as it can be done till help comes to us.

2. Endowment increased to $300,000 from $146,000 and $50,000 to invest in new buildings and equipment: $20,000 in boys' dormitory and $25,000 in library and administration building. Under an impetus given by large outside donations California Yearly Meeting can probably raise one half the amount. ($25,000 already subscribed toward raising $100,000.)

3. Stronger faculty. Additional Laboratory and Library. Increased permanent endowment. The Yearly Meeting is not in condition at the present to supply all the needs of the near future.

5. The condition of Penn College is well known to Friends everywhere and they are aware that the greatest need is increased resources. We are in a campaign for the purpose of raising a half-million dollars. We began this campaign on the 8th of May and expected to use the funds secured to increase our endowment to one-half million dollars, to liquidate our indebtedness, and to erect buildings. On May 27th the main college building was destroyed by fire which changes a chronic situation into an acute one. Penn College has rendered a service which is not local but which is to the entire Society of Friends in America. Therefore, we make an appeal for assistance from every source possible. (See note below.)

6. The institution greatly needs more endowment and a pension fund for teachers. Most of the members of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings are farmers and either do not have ready money or are slow to part with it. There is no present prospect of such assistance as the college must have if it is to do its work adequately.

7. Adequate endowment. The Yearly Meeting and its territory are able to supply this need. We are just now instituting a campaign for this purpose. We hope to bring our endowment up to $200,000 at least.

8. We need a larger income, and our Yearly Meeting is not able to supply this without help. The larger income would enable us to employ better and more permanent teachers.

10. The principal need is endowment for undergraduate professorships. We hope that this will be supplied by Friends in these parts.

NOTE: Since this was written, Penn College has raised a fund of $400,000. Haverford, Pa.

MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

On the evening of October 10, 1916, there came together at the meeting house in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the pastors from over New York Yearly Meeting for annual conference, and the sessions which followed were times of inspiration and blessing which sent every pastor back into the field with a broader vision and increased enthusiasm to work out the desire of the Heavenly Father for his or her chosen place.

The meetings of New York Yearly

Meeting are so widely scattered that the pastors feel very keenly this loneliness and there is not the vigor that comes with a closer relationship one with another, and to all of us the hours of our conference together were filled with a deep feeling of brotherhood in our common task.

Every paper and address was strong in its enlightenment and appeal, and the free discussions which followed were the offering up of the need and possibility of the whole field of our Yearly Meeting.

The following is the outlined program of the conference:

PROGRAM

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10th

8:00 P. M.—Address: The Development of Spiritual Gifts. Thomas E. Jones.

Closing Consecration Service.

When Jesus Christ says that he has overcome the world, he means that his conquest is the pledge of ours. If he had failed, we could not have succeeded. It is because he has succeeded that we cannot fail. These are Christian promises; these are Christian delights; these are the joys of the sanctuary.—Joseph Parker.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

OUR CUBAN FRIENDS

(After a visit to Cuba, a Friend sends us the following article giving impressions of the people of Cuba and of our work there.)

I have often wondered what my own impressions of the need of missionary work would be when I saw a foreign land. I think my impressions of Cuba are rather mixed. On one hand, I have thoroughly enjoyed my visit with the natives, and on the other, I have seen their need of Christianity.

The people are good looking, though dark; they are courteous to the point of familiarity; they are full of fun and love pleasure. In fact, they live for nothing but pleasure. Having missed any vital touch with God in their Roman churches, they have wandered into atheism and see no end but this life; and so they make the most of life. Immorality of every kind is so common as to be unnoticed. Illegitimate children are not at all below par in the social life. Elopement without marriage is one of the things the missionaries try to prevent. Immorality is so common that young people are not trusted out of the sight of chaperones, and never are allowed to speak to one another in private. Children of good families are not allowed to attend co-educational schools except when very young. Even when no conversation is allowed between boys and girls, a language of gestures conveys immodest sentiments. Women do not go on the streets alone even by day. They are always in groups. The marketing has to be done by small errand boys to avoid subjecting the women to embarrassing insults in the stores.

Except in homes of exceptional culture, the babies go without clothing for several years. When they pretend to dress the babies (for state occasions), they put on only an apron open down the back or else a coat open all down the front. Some boys go without clothing till they are eight years old. Occasionally they put on sandals and a hat to protect themselves from the heat. This, then, is the evil that missionaries try to overcome. Sunday is a day of cock fights and other forms of gambling and drinking. The making of Christian homes where modesty and morality are assured and God is honored is the service of our missions to Cuba.

The Christian members of our missions delighted to tell us of their new happiness and peace in God. They realize as we do not the joy of finding God after doubting His existence. They would come to see us with radiant faces and tell us what their lives had been and what happiness they had found in religion. Everywhere our missionaries are honored and admired. Natives who are not Christians seek their society and those who are Christians look up to them as leaders and examples as well as friends. Nothing can give a greater compliment to missionary work than the esteem in which it is held by native society. EDITH M. TEBBETTS.

NO STABILITY?

"Daybreak in the Dark Continent" reminds us that "It is a fact of supreme importance in estimating the probable permanence of mission work in Africa, that those churches in which the negro element exceeded the Caucasian outlived those in which the reverse was true. The churches dominated by the Greek, Roman, Jewish and other colonists of North Africa were all too quickly overcome by Islam. On the other hand, the Nubian church withstood Mohammedan fire and sword until the fifteenth century. The Ethiopian church finally became consolidated in Abyssinia, where it has since maintained its organization. Surrounded by Mohammedans on all sides for more than one thousand years, these Abyssinian Christians have kept them at bay. So strong has been their influence in the country that it is only within comparatively recent years that Mohammedanism has gained any considerable footing there."

The whole world praises those faithful natives who carried David Livingstone's body from the interior of Africa and, after months of tedious marching, hostile tribes encountered, hunger and thirst, weariness and painfulness, delivered the precious burden to the white men in Zanzibar.

One of these faithful natives was living in Mombasa, British East Africa, and it was my privilege, several years ago, to call on him and get the story from his own lips. He told of the last days of his beloved "Bwana" (Master), how he had a great deal of fever and was obliged to be carried much of the time on his last marches. Then, how they hastily built him a thatched house in which to rest, where the protection from the sun would be greater than in his tent. But the day came when, one morning, the "bwana" didn't arise as usual. Later, he was found on his knees beside his bed. The natives thought he was praying, as they knew was his custom, but he remained so long that they discovered him to be dead instead of alive—doubtless, having prayed for them to the very last. How much easier to have buried his body on the spot. But no, those brave and devoted men passed almost through fire and water to do what they felt it their duty to do. They set their faces like a flint and accomplished their purpose. How I wish we might each one look into the face of this old African survivor and be inspired to press on in duty as he pressed on and won the honor which he deserves. Ever since meeting that black nobleman, I have felt more determined than ever to do all in my power to help pay the debt which Christianity owes to the inhabitants of the dark continent.

But there is another face, far more worthy; the face of Him who gave His life a ransom that those of every nation, tribe and tongue might be redeemed unto God. Let us look daily into His face and then press on as duty directs. EDGAR T. HOLE.

100 YEARS OLD.

With the remarkable record of having established over a hundred and twenty thousand Sunday-Schools throughout the country, with a half million teachers and five million scholars, the American Sunday School Union is now preparing to celebrate its one hundredth anniversary. The Society has issued an interesting pamphlet concerning its history and work and also a leaflet entitled "Sunday-School Pioneering in Rural America." Both of these pamphlets will be gladly mailed upon request to all who are interested in knowing more about this unique organization which stands alone and unequalled in community development work in rural America. The headquarters of the Society are at 1816 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

YOUNG FRIENDS DAY—AND THE REASON

YOUNG FRIENDS DAY. WHEN?

The Young Friends of the United States and Canada are planning to observe a special day for a consideration of their needs and achievements. Does the Church believe in her young people? Then observe NOVEMBER TWENTY-SIXTH as Y O U N G FRIENDS DAY. Does this conflict with THANKSGIVING SERVICES? Not necessarily. It should come the week before. Wouldn't it be a good thing, however, to combine the two celebrations? Is there anything for which we should be more thankful than that God is raising up young people to carry on the work of the church? See the growth of church interest among Young Friends in one year. Should we not give thanks to our Heavenly Father?

Young Friends Day. WHAT? A day of rallies, conferences and addresses. Does its aims conflict with Christian Endeavor? Decidedly not.

IT IS THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR MOVEMENT OF THE CHURCH ENLARGED TO INCLUDE COLLEGE STUDENTS AND ALL OTHER FORMS OF YOUNG PEOPLE'S GROUPS. IT IS VITALITY SPIRITUAL AND ENDEAVORS TO BRING PEOPLE TO GOD THROUGH JESUS CHRIST.

Young Friends Day. WHY? Because (1) Young People's Achievements and Plans need Attention. (2) It deepens general church interest. (3) It popularizes the Christian appeal to Young People. Five-sixths of the converts accept Christ before twenty. Dare any meeting neglect this side of its work? Has the Young People's Board meant anything to your Meeting? (4) It raises money. No movement can be run without funds. The Yearly Meeting Boards should be financed as well as the Five Years Meeting. The best way to do this is through the every-member canvass. This has not been adopted by all Meetings. Immediate cash is needed. Young people believe that when their cause is adequately presented the church will respond with finances. We propose therefore to present it. We ask for both collections and subscriptions. Many members can give five and ten or weeks in which to pay. The argument of being too poor will not stand before people with real vision. At the Kansas Student Volunteer Convention over two hundred thousand dollars were subscribed by students, many of whom worked their way through college. Hundreds of these people gave five and ten dollars each. Surely there are hundreds of young people among Friends who will give as freely to the young people's movement. Then there are scores of older men and women who will see the wisdom of investing twenty-five or fifty dollars annually in such a work. Should not every adult member of the church give at least a dollar to this work? Smaller amounts should be collected as a general contribution. The Young People's Board is sorely in need of funds. Every yearly Meeting young people's organization is seriously handicapped for lack of finance. Will the church discourage the efforts of young people or lead them to greater achievements?

Young Friends Day. HOW? Reports, pamphlets, programs and other literature can be gotten by writing to either the Young Friends Office, Dupreith, Ind., or to the Yearly Meeting headquarters. Make plans now. Begin to advertise. Follow up.

ADVERTISING RALLY DAY.

A few suggestions for advertising Rally Day. These have all been tried and proved to be very successful.

"A Window Card"

Print large posters and place one in the window of every store in the town, announcing Rally Day and some of the most attractive features of the program.

"A Door Knob Invitation"

Print shipping tags with directions to take the bearer to the Church for Rally Day, Nov. 26, hang them on every door knob in the city.

"Post Bulletins"

Put big bills on the Bulletin boards of the town, printed in colors.

"Published Programs"

Publish the program in the newspapers. Also include a copy of program in all personal invitations sent out.

"Tag Everybody"

Tag everybody in town. Print the program on each tag, and an invitation to the services.

"Personal Work"

Send a personally written postal card or letter to every one concerned.

THE CHURCH IN THE COMMUNITY

The following message from a young Friend near Wilmington, Ohio, came to our office some time ago, we print it here, hoping that the suggestions may find expression in some other field.

"There are three churches in our township and all three are Friends. In years gone by, each church had quite a congregation, and now the average attendance will run between 15 and 50. A year ago a man moved from a grange community into our neighborhood. Of course he began to talk grange. Consequently one was organized with 29 charter members. The meetings are held in one of the three churches. At present the members number 75. Primarily it was gotten up for educational purposes. Personally, I know that we farmers do not know one-half of what we should know about the business of farming. Next thing in line is the social benefits, the getting together of people, both young and old. Co-operation in the buying of commercial fertilizer, where $3.00 and $4.00 per ton was saved was an eye 'opener.'

The meetings are opened and closed with prayer. I have reason to believe that there are people coming to the grange who seldom hear prayers elsewhere.

We planned and arranged for a colt show recently. Between 50 and 60 farmers and their sons came. 30 colts were brought. The extension department of the State University sent us a judge. Besides placing the ribbons he gave a very interesting talk on the different types of horses, causes and locations of some of the blemishes on horses, etc.

Nothing like it had ever happened this side of the county fair grounds. Men were surprised and pleased and said that it was better than the show at the fairs. 'The judges didn't tell you anything there.'

Now we are planning a baking, sewing, canning, seed corn and athletic contest for the young people.

I would like to know through The American Friend if there are any other granges held in run-down country churches. Some of the older Friends think that it will take all the religion out of the church."

EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE

The Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee had an afternoon and evening business meeting on October 24, in Oskaloosa. All the members but one were present. W. S. Kitch could not be there on account of some matters in connection with the building of a new Meeting House at Bangor, where he is pastor.

Nereus Hodgins is temporarily supplying at Albion and Jennie Kirby at Liberty. Florence Baker, last year at Searsboro, is now pastor at Salem. Royal Bogue has located at Scranton.

The "all-day-meeting" arranged for Pleasant Chapel for September 10, was not held on account of a storm, but was held with great success on the 17th. Chas. O. Whitely was the preacher. He also attended the meeting in New Providence that evening.

Middle River held a most inspiring "all-day-meeting" on the 24th. Richard Newby, of Des Moines, preached in the afternoon and Chas. Whitely morning and evening. The house was crowded at all the meetings.

Pleasant Plain, Chas. Haworth, pastor, held a series of meetings the latter part of September. Edwin Loft, of Albia, Wm. Kent of Rubio and Chas. Whitely assisted. Viola Smith began a revival at Woolson, Alvin Hoskins pastor, on October 1st. She is assisted by Blanche Lotscher as singer. Taylor Guthrie, of Cummings, began a revival at Blue Point where Miss Hasley is pastor, on October 8th.

The Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee is arranging for a few conferences to be held in such neighborhoods as especially care for them. Ancil Ratliff, of Fairmount, Indiana, who was so helpful and inspiring during Yearly Meeting, will be the chief speaker. He will speak and lead discussions on the problems of the Rural Church. It is expected to have an expert from the state agricultural college at Ames, to speak on some phases of scientific farming or stock raising. Penn College will furnish a speaker and Chas. Whitely will have general oversight of the Conference and bring messages intended to deepen the spiritual life.

These conferences can only be held in four or five places. They will continue for about three days and nights. The places that are the most willing to support them will obtain them. The expense will not be heavy and can easily be taken care of by any community. It will be necessary to arrange ahead, boost and conserve results. The Committee is sorry that it cannot arrange for such a conference in every community, but cannot do so now. If the conference does not immediately start a revival, the committee will be surprised, surely no better preparation for one can be made. Remember, though, that only a few places can have conferences, so if your meeting is interested get in touch with the General Superintendent, Chas. O. Whitely, 638 N. Market St., Oskaloosa, at once. The first conference will commence about November, 8th.

During Yearly Meeting, the final steps were taken in the recording as ministers of Moses T. Mendenhall, pastor at Center; Howard W. Cope, pastor at Hartland; Ferdinand Seitz, pastor at Burr Oak and Burnard Raper, pastor at Middle River.

The General Superintendent preached at Searsboro and Blue Point Meetings on October 1st.

A Gospel Team composed of young men students in Penn College, is very active in the work. They are organized into a Bible School Class that meets with the regular Bible School of the College Ave. Friends church. They are studying a special course under the direction of Dr. C. M. Case. Their motto is "Enter every Open Door." They plan to have some members of the class, as a team, out in some gospel service every Sabbath. They are capable young men and the very best of reports are coming in as to their work.

Robert W. Pruitt, son of W. K. Pruitt, pastor at Smyrna, a student in Penn College, visited the Meetings at Wright and Highland October 8 and 15.

C. E. DEPARTMENT

At the meeting of the executive committee during Yearly Meeting it was decided that at stated times we concentrate our efforts along the various lines mentioned in our resolutions. With that in mind, the committee voted to make the efficiency work the special work for the opening of the year.

No doubt your society has already received a message from our Superintendent of Efficiency Work, Walter Homan. Realizing the new life and enthusiasm as well as the gain in actual accomplishment when this work has been given a fair trial, he urges each Society to secure an efficiency chart and find its "temperature". The various points are so clearly outlined that this can easily be done. No doubt, we shall all be surprised to find how much we shall need to "warm up" in order to measure up to the standard a strong Society should attain.

Not only is the chart an incentive to renewed activity, but the study of "Expert Endeavor" teaches how the different officers and committees can obtain the best results from their efforts. Mr. Homan urges that every Society organize a class for the study of this book. After the course has been completed, arrangements may be made with him for the examination. We want to have a large increase in the number of Endeavor experts in the Yearly Meeting this year, and we take this avenue to secure them. For the sake of the added impetus it will give your work and for the sake of helping the Iowa Yearly Meeting Union measure up to the standard we have set, will you undertake this line of effort in your Society?

If you have questions in regard to the chart or books or about anything in connection with the efficiency work, correspond with Walter Homan, 1325 Capitol Avenue, Des Moines, Ia.

AT DES MOINES

September 17th, was the Rally service of the Christian Endeavor.

The following program was carried out:

Song Service. Led by Oliver W. Elliott.

Scripture Reading, Irene Worcester.

"Little Chances to Help" was the topic for the evening, and the following gave their ideas on "Little Chances to Help."

"In the Prayer Service", Alta Jewell.

"In Promptness and Regularity", Mr. S. Phillips.

"By being Friendly", Hazel McKim.

"In the Mid-Week Prayer Meeting," James M. Newby.

"In the Home", Pearl Edworthy.

"In the Home and Foreign Missions", Walter Homan.

"In the Church", R. R. Newby.

September 29th, a business meeting and social were held at the church. At this time the old officers retired, and the new officers were elected for the coming year.

New Enthusiasm is the spirit of the coming year of the Des Moines Friends Christian Endeavor Society.

FROM IOWA FALLS.

Honey Creek Quarterly Meeting was held October 6, 7 and 8, at Iowa Falls, Iowa. There was a good attendance on Saturday, the weather being quite favorable. The presence of the Lord was very manifest in the devotional meeting, Leroy Hawks, pastor at Illinois Grove, preaching an appropriate, instructive sermon from Heb. 3:2.

Charles O. Whitely, our present Yearly Meeting Superintendent, preached in the evening from the text, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" This service was the beginning of a series of meetings, continuing until Wednesday evening, this having been previously arranged with Brother Whitely, whose services were greatly appreciated. The power of the Lord was manifest in each session and those who attended were graciously blessed. The response to a call to join in an altar of prayer was gratifying to those who had been earnestly praying for it and a rich blessing to those who were seekers.

We are assured the preaching of our pastor W. J. Hadley, has been preparatory for the evident results for which we are very thankful. We also very much appreciate the faithful, effective work of our pastor's wife, Mary Hadley, both in the church and Sunday School.

While the task of overcoming the disorganized condition of the local work of Iowa Falls Monthly Meeting has been very slow, we are rejoicing for the progress already attained and look forward with confidence and hope for the future.

FROM DES MOINES

The Bible School of the First Friends church of Des Moines observed Rally Day October 1, 1916. The program was opened by the graduation exercises of the elementary department. Several were transferred from the cradle roll to the beginners class and given their certificates of promotion.

A song, "Three Cheers for Our Boys," was beautifully rendered by a sextette of the junior boys, which was followed by the installation of officers and teachers. The remainder of the hour was spent in the class rooms.

The Whittier and Douglas Bible School classes of the First Friends Church banqueted the John Bright class Thursday evening, October 12, in the church parlors, as the result of a contest of membership, averaged attendance and percentage of increase. Following the banquet several interesting talks were given. One of special interest was given by Mr. Span, teacher of the John Bright class, also a returned missionary from Africa. He told something of his work while there, of the schools of Africa and many other interesting facts. A very pleasant and profitable time was reported.

NEWS NOTES

Edith S. Worth has accepted the position as pastor at League City, Texas.

The American Friend acknowledges with appreciation the receipt of the printed proceedings of the Friends General Conference (Hicksite branch) held at Cape May, N. J., July 6-13, 1916.

Noble C. Trueblood and family, formerly of Laporte, Indiana, are now located in their new home at Cherokee, Oklahoma, where Mr. Trueblood has accepted the pastorate of the meeting.

The Fall River meeting of Friends is without a regular pastor. A university student studying at some nearby city with pastoral experience might be acceptable. Application can be sent to Mrs. Marianna N. Chace, 80 Grove Street, Fall River, Mass.

D. W. Lawrence has resigned as pastor of the meeting at League City, Texas, to take the principalship of a school in a neighboring county. His wife is primary teacher in the same school.

William P. Haworth and wife, who have served for the past two years as pastors at Lawrence, Kansas, have accepted the pastorate of the Friends meeting at Scott City, Kansas, which will be their postoffice address for the coming year. They have met with a most hearty welcome from the Friends and others of that place and are anticipating a pleasant and profitable year's work.

Arthur Jones, pastor of the meeting at Kansas City, has announced some subjects for consideration as follows: October 29, "The Ever Present Opportunity"; November 5, "The Power of Momentum"; November 12, "Ruts and Rails"; November 19, "Useful Associations"; November 26, "Details that Help or Hinder"; December 3, "Characteristics of Youth."

Amelia Reuger of New York Yearly Meeting, now a student at Earlham College, has accepted the pastorate of the Friends church at Chester, Indiana, near Richmond, for the coming year.

OPEN LETTER TO KANSAS

Richmond, Indiana,

October 19, 1916.

To the Members of Kansas

Yearly Meeting.

Dear Friends: We, your representatives, who have just attended the meeting of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, feel impressed to write you this letter, giving our impressions of the meeting.

Many important matters were acted upon in a spirit of great love, harmony and mutual condescension, and as we cannot doubt under the immediate guidance of our Master, Jesus Christ.

We wish to call your attention to one of these which is of immediate, practical importance, that is, the call for funds. As the estimates from the various fields were read one after the other, they all called for a very much larger amount than last year, yet we could not find anything in the items that seemed unreasonable or unnecessary.

The Board decided that this was a call to us and the church to step forward in faith, that if our Lord called for these expenditures He would furnish the means to meet them, so we granted appropriations for the work next year of $60,641.44, although the receipts last year were only $42,950.04. We know not where the increased funds are to come from, but we believe this is a challenge to the church, and we trust that the Friends of Kansas Yearly Meeting will respond to the Lord's call.

"The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth laborers into His harvest." We cannot all go, but we may all have a part in the work by providing the means for others to go. May we one and all pray, work and give as the Lord may direct.

Signed:

FRANCIS A. WRIGHT,
M. M. WOODARD,
WALLACE C. KEMP.

We never reach the full joy of living until we learn the sweets of self-giving for Christ's sake; until we realize the privilege of making others happy and are ready, no matter what the cost or the sacrifice, to serve wherever we find opportunity.

A plan in the head is only worth half as much as a plan in operation.

CHURCH AT WORK

Wabash, Indiana—On the evening of October 6, at the Friends Church here an informal reception in honor of the different committees of the church was given by the pastor, A. J. Furstenburger, and wife. Committees first met in the auditorium, where devotional exercises were led by Ida Stouffer, after which Mr. Furstenburger talked to the committees about organizing the different departments for the year. They immediately retired to other rooms in the church to contemplate their organization and lay plans for the year, and we believe that we are now ready for real systematic work. The committees then went to the dining room where they were received by the pastor and his wife. A pleasant social hour was enjoyed by all. Each committee gave a "stunt", representing its work for the year. Ice cream and cake were served to more than fifty persons, following which several speeches of appreciation of the work of the pastor and his wife were made. We are looking forward to a successful year and pray that the Lord will bless.

Clinton Corners, N. Y.—Herbert L. Huffman, who was stricken with tuberculosis last winter, has resumed his work as pastor of the Clinton Corners meeting with health very much improved. During his absence of six months, Lindley M. Stevens of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was in attendance at the Sunday morning meetings and the various lines of social, educational and religious work were carried on most efficiently by members of the meeting. The new meeting house dedicated in July is splendidly equipped for the work the Friends here have set themselves to do, viz: to minister to all the needs of the community not cared for by some other institution. The pastor will be assisted this winter by the assistant secretary of the County Y. M. C. A., who will have charge of the gymnasium classes.

The young men's class taught by Clara E. Dunn spends a portion of the class period each Sunday in the study of the discipline. This is proving very interesting and profitable—so much so that members of the class were refused promotion to an older class until the study was finished. The meeting together with the older meetings of Nine Partners Quarterly is planning for a special evangelistic effort in the near future.

Do you read the label to know whether your baking powder is made from cream of tartar or, on the other hand, from alum or phosphate?

Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, derived from grapes, and adds to the food only wholesome qualities.

Other baking powders contain alum or phosphate, both of mineral origin, and used as substitutes for cream of tartar because of their cheapness.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—The meeting at Poughkeepsie was especially favored on Sunday, October 1, by having with us J. Edgar Williams of Indiana Yearly Meeting, who brought to us messages of inspiration and truth. It was an unusual day. For the first time in three months our Sabbath School was assembled, having been closed with the other Schools because of the terrible epidemic of infantile paralysis which swept the state of New York. Our hearts were filled with praise as we realized that not one of our students had been taken. At the close of the School hour one of the young men stepped to the front and in the name of the baseball team of the church presented to the School a beautiful silver cup which the team had secured by winning all but three of the games which they had played in the church league of the city. This trophy was added to the ones already acquired, among which was the one captured last winter by the "tug-o-war" team which was recognized as the champion of the city. We rejoice in that so many of our young people have gone out from us to schools of higher education. While it takes from us many of our best workers, it is a joy for us to contemplate the greater usefulness in the future which will come to our meeting.

We feel greatly favored at the coming of Albert G. Shepard and his wife to reside in our midst. He is now the Efficiency Secretary of New York Yearly Meeting and we believe that their coming here will be a great source of inspiration and help.

On the evening of October 13, 1916, at Poughkeepsie, the Men's Club of Poughkeepsie Meeting assembled for its annual banquet and election of officers. The occasion will ever linger in our minds because of both the warm flow of brotherly love and fellowship and the strength of appeal of the messages of the evening. Since its organization a year ago, with a charter membership of twenty-three, the club has grown to its present membership of sixty-six, and a fine prospect exists for its further growth this year.

The main speaker of the evening was Professor W. J. Reagan, of Oakwood Seminary, who spoke upon the subject, "The Old Boy." He appealed especially to the men who were fathers to retain a grip on youth that they might play the game of life with their sons. His address was filled with inspiration and teaching to those present. Other speakers were W. C. Lawson, Elmer D. Gildersleeve, Lindley M. Stevens and D. Hodson Lewis.

The new organization comprised the following men: President, O. K. Raymond; Vice President, Ira D. Warren; Secretary, John I. Lane; Treasurer, C. Ralph Clark; Notification Secretary, Lawrence W. Heaton; Chaplain, Edwin J. Whaley. To act with these on the Executive Committee—Harvey Myers, Ray Dalzell and Robert Powell.

Bloomington, Indiana.—Centennial Sunday was observed by Friends at this place. The following program proved instructive and entertaining:

"The Beginnings of Indiana," by Hadley Kelsey.

"The Quaker Settlement of Indiana," by Nellie C. Maris.

"What the Quakers have Contributed Toward the Making of Indiana," by Nathan Pickett.

"The Founding of Bloomington Meeting," by Isabelle M. Newlin.

"Education," by Sibyl Morris Teague.

"History of the Bible School," by Aileen Nelson.

"Prominent Workers in the Community," by Mary E. Chapman.

"Men and Women Whom It Has Sent Out to Service," by Lenora M. Hobbs.

"Our Heritage," by Jane D. H. Moore.

Lesson—Acts 27:38-28:10.

Golden Text—Jehovah redeemed the soul of his servants; and none of them that take refuge in him shall be condemned. Psalm 34:22.

The journey towards Rome proved to be a very troublesome one. The season of the year made it almost impossible to expect a peaceful voyage. As is often the case, occasion was offered for stout hearts to come to the front and prove their worth. Often when matters are going pleasantly, weak men can appear as well as strong men, but sooner or later the strong man comes to the front as on this occasion. It must be said, however, that in the centurion we have a man of more than usual merit. He was big enough to see that Paul was a man of high merit and ought to be spared, if possible. It often takes a man of rare merit to recognize other men of the same or higher rank.

There are times when it is more necessary to eat than it is to pray; and this idea should not be taken lightly. It is a religious fact. A strong soul often needs a strong body in order that an important mission may be properly carried out. "Give us this day our daily bread," and "lead us not into temptation" are parts of the same prayer and the Father expects us to act according to the needs of the hour. Paul had prayed and God had wonderfully answered his prayer, now they must all eat and thus acquire the needed strength for the trying time before them. Praying and eating, when we come to think about it properly, have peculiar parallel relations to us.

Ships are not the only encounterers of two seas. Many a youth gets into just such a trying place almost every day. But that is not the exact danger. This ship stuck fast in the mud, or the sand, and had to withstand the contending currents. It's when we waver for a moment between these seas that the trouble comes. Jesus on the mount of temptation felt the tug of the two forces, but he quickly entered the right current and thus escaped the impending disaster. The youth who is out and out for Christ seldom finds the other current very strong, largely because he never hesitates long enough to be swung into the sandbar.

Kindness seldom goes amiss. These poor barbarians, as we call them, allowed their sympathies full play on this occasion, and they and the world were well repaid. Full consideration of other's needs or feelings would go very far towards bringing the New Jerusalem down to this old earth of ours. The writer recently saw one auto crash into another, the driver was in a close place, there seemed to be no other alternative but strike the other car, whose owner was very angry and threatened the courts, but he calmed down beautifully when the offending driver recognized the damage done and explained and offered at once to make full reparation.

The natives were very much mistaken in their estimate of Paul's character. They thought their basis of judgment was sufficient but, as we know, it was not. May it not be possible that we are just as badly mistaken in our estimates of others as we know these people to have been?

Topic—The Consecration of Social Life. 1 Cor. 9: 19-23. (Consecration Meeting.)

Suggestions: Let the meeting be in charge of the Social Committee. Begin promptly, with an all round hand shake. Not a flabby, clammy, perfunctory hand-shake that gets no farther than the wrist, but a warm, virile, cordial grip which extends from shoulder to shoulder and sends a thrill of joy down to the heart. Ask a few to prepare short talks on the following subjects:

"Christ in Company," (the Wedding Feast). The first miracle which Jesus wrought was done at a wedding feast, the happiest occasion of human life," Christ begins His redeeming work in an atmosphere of joy. We are told that He who came to heal the sorrows of the world introduced Himself with the sunny gladness of one who could enter into all pure joys."

Christian F. Reisner in his "Social Plans for Young People," says, "A somber, laughless religion will never attract the young. Funless theology builds fanaticism. The sunlight of joy alone keeps faith healthy. Happiness of the natural sort does not come alone from spiritual contemplation and religious work. It is related to physical states. Social joy results from brotherliness, and an learning to love our brother we find how to love God. Material pleasure of a sweet and heartening order may then aid sane spirituality. To win friends is to equip ourselves to win 'souls.' some at Athens 'clave unto Paul and believed.'" The rest turned away from Christ. The friend maker is a disciple-winner. Cordiality opens blind eyes to the nearby Elder Brother. Good fellowship is always the fore-runner of revival. All encouragements of Church friendliness, therefore, stimulate the Kingdom's growth."

"Social to save." Luke 14:11-14.

"Social to teach." Luke 10:38-42.

"Barriers broken down." Gal. 3:26-29.

"Choosing company." 2 Cor. 6:14-18.

"Functions of play." 1 Tim. 4:8.

"How did Christ grace social life."
"How to show brotherliness in socials."

"What good purposes does the play instinct serve?"

ANNUAL BOARD MEETINGS

The annual meetings of the Boards of the Five Years Meeting at Richmond, Indiana, this past week have brought to Richmond a large number of Friends from the various Yearly Meetings. There have been in session either the Boards or the Executive Committees of the Boards as follows: American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, Evangelistic and Church Extension Board, Education Board, Board of Young Friends Activities, Peace Association of Friends in America, the Publication Board, the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, the Committee on Arrangements for the next Five Years Meeting and the Committee of Seven, appointed by the Men's Conference last October. In addition there was an important joint meeting of the Educational Board and the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board. The Bible School Board met on Monday and Tuesday in the city of Boston, Mass.

We are unable this week to indicate anything of the results accomplished.

In a later issue space will be given for such reports of the work and plans as the different Boards and Committees care to make public. It may be said, however, that some most important and far reaching matters were considered that will undoubtedly bear abundant fruit in the days to come. It may be said in general, however, that practically all the Boards had an enlarged vision of their work and are planning for both intensive and extensive service as opportunity affords.

MARRIED

Pearson-Stickney—At the close of League City Monthly Meeting, League City, Texas, September 9, 1916, Carl Everett Pearson and Mary Ellen Stickney, Minister, D. W. Lawrence. These two young people are active in Sabbath School and Christian Endeavor work.

Webster-Allen—At Friends meeting house Clinton Corners, N. Y., October 14, 1916, Chauncey Webster of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Edith Marshall Allen of the Clinton Corners Meeting.

Whitman-Wood—At the summer home of S. Adelbert Wood, North Sandwich, N. H., September 21, 1916, by Friends ceremony, John Pratt Whitman of Boston and Eleanor Densmore Wood of Sandwich, N. H. At home 357 Charles Street, Boston, Mass.

BORN.

Bean—At San Jose, California, September 20, 1916, to Harry J. and Olive E. Bean, a daughter, Olive Roanna.

DIED

Cook—Mary E. Cook, daughter of Jonathan and Eliza Ramey, was born October 28, 1835, and died September 3, 1916. She married T. E. Cook August 23, 1855.

McCoy—Elizabeth Towell McCoy was born in North Carolina and died at the home of her daughter in Bloomington, Indiana, October 1, 1916, aged 105 years, 1 month and 16 days. When a child she moved with her parents to Indiana, residing for a few years in Blue River Quarterly Meeting. Soon afterward, however, the family located in Parke County, where she has lived for more than four score years. She was a life long Friend and was ever interested in the activities of the church, especially in the women's missionary society. She read The American Friend regularly and was well informed on questions of the day. In her death Bloomington Quarterly Meeting loses its oldest member. Funeral services were held at the Rush Creek meeting house with George H. Moore, pastor at Bloomington, in charge of the services.

Newlin—Mabel Newlin of Newberg, Oregon, daughter of Luther G. and Florence S. Newlin, died in a hospital at Portland, Oregon, August 11, 1916, aged 22 years and 25 days. She had a loving disposition and bore her suffering with much patience. Funeral services were conducted by Charles Whitely, pastor of the meeting at Newberg. A large audience was present as she was loved and respected by all who knew her.

Pearson—Gulielma Reese Pearson was born in Morrow county, Ohio, September 21, 1837, and died at her home in Ericksburg, Minnesota, September 23, 1916. She was a life-long Friend. In her early active life she was a Sabbath School worker and teacher. As the infirmities of age grew upon her she was persistent in talking to the young about the interests of their souls. Many parents have testified to their gratitude for her influence over their children. Not a tramp came to her door so poor and forlorn but that received with the "hard out" a message of love from the Lord.

Reynolds—Myrtle S. Reynolds, daughter of L. Perron and Sophronia E. Reynolds, died of infantile paralysis at her home in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in September, 1916. It was the first direct shock from this epidemic which the Poughkeepsie meeting had felt. She was one of the best loved and devoted young ladies of the meeting and for 11 years had held a high position of teacher in the public schools.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION,
St. Paul St., Boston, Mass.

A man's place in society is somewhat like a river; for as the stream determines the course of the branches so an individual may shape the destinies of those who follow him, and just as the branches deepen and fix the direction of the river so likewise will a person's followers strengthen him in the course which he pursues.
—Charles H. Klippel.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

Who Did It?

By KATE LAWRENCE

Who made the butterfly's delicate wing,
With its plumage so rich and gay?
Who taught the wood-lark to soar and sing,
And her nestlings to hide away?
Who hung the blooms on the apple-trees?
Who stored the sweets in the nectaries?
Who made the brooklet to sparkle and dance?
Who made the bee with her pouch and lance?
Who made the goldfish to bask in the sun?
The flowers, the shells, and pebbles—each one?
And all for love? It was God!

Who broke the butterfly's lovely wing,
And laughed at the ruin wrought?
Who crushed the bee when she used her sting,
And the nest of the wood-lark sought?
Who stole her tender fledglings away,
And left them to die that summer day?
Who dammed up the course of the rippling brook?
Who caught the trout on a cruel hook?
Who stoned the minnows, and thought it fun?
Who chased the rabbits—poor frightened Bun?
And all for sport?—God's child!

"THE LADIES' AID"

"The old church bell had long been cracked,
Its call was but a groan;
It seemed to sound a funeral knell
With every broken tone.
'We need a bell,' the brethren said,
'But taxes must be paid;
We have no money we can spare—
Just ask the Ladies' Aid.'

"The shingles on the roof were old;
The rain came down in rills;
The brethren slowly shook their heads
And spoke of 'monthly bills,'
The chairman of the board arose
And said, 'I am afraid
That we shall have to lay the case
Before the Ladies' Aid.'

"The carpet had been patched and patched
Till quite beyond repair,
And through the aisles and on the steps
The boards showed hard and bare,
'It is too bad,' the brethren said;
'An effort must be made
To raise an interest on the part Of members of the Aid.'

"The preacher's stipend was behind;
The poor man blushed to meet
The grocer and the butcher as
They passed him on the street;
But nobly spoke the brethren then;
'Pastor, you shall be paid!
We'll call upon the treasurer
Of our good Ladies' Aid.'

"'Ah!' said the men, 'the way to Heaven
Is long and hard and steep;
With slopes of care on either side,
The path 'tis hard to keep.
We cannot climb the heights alone;
Our hearts are sore dismayed;
We ne'er shall get to Heaven at all Without the Ladies' Aid!'"

—Christian Endeavor World.

"God lets men have their playthings like the children they are, that they may learn to distinguish them from true possessions. If they are not learning that, He takes them from them, and tries the other way; for lack of them and its misery, they will perhaps seek the true."

CORRESPONDENCE

Edmond, Oklahoma.

Editor The American Friend:

One reason the churches today fail to keep the "Great Commission" entrusted to the disciples by Jesus himself is because there are so few true disciples.

In 2 Tim. 3:5 we find who the false disciples are and in Titus 1:16 we find what their profession is. So many of the Christian people have allowed the devil to deceive them by mixing things of the world into their Christianity until he has them trying to do what Matthew 6:24 tells us very distinctly we cannot do.

To catch the vision of a true disciple, let us take the apostle Paul for an example. Those of you who have made a careful study of our Sabbath School lessons for this year have certainly learned some very interesting facts as to what the life of a true disciple should be. In his life we have an excellent portrayal of both the true and false disciple.

In the early part of his life we find him serving Satan with his whole heart, but when Christ revealed himself to Paul we find him ready and willing to turn completely away from his old life of sin. He accepted Christ and was willing to do whatever he commanded him to do. That is where we, as Christians, today fall down, as it were. We do not turn away from the world and sin as Paul did. We have a desire to serve the Lord and forsake our sins, but we do not forsake the world. We keep holding on to this thing and that and the result is the Lord cannot save us. Just at this point the devil comes in with his work. He makes us think we have done our part and we are all right. Our Christian friends pat us on the back and tell us they are so glad we have made a start and tell us to hold on to God and we will be all right. Oh! what a mistake. We have no God to hold on to. We have not made a complete surrender as Paul did.

Let us take a look at Paul after his conversion. Do we find him attending some church social or a card party to keep himself interested in what Jesus would have him to do? Or does he go to a moving picture show, a baseball game or a dance to find out what he must do to save his companions who had been journeying with him? No, indeed, we find him obeying Christ in all things. Although the things Jesus asked him to do looked very hard to him, yet he was willing with his help to undertake anything.

How necessary it is for us to make a complete surrender, as Paul did, if we would become a true follower of Christ! What joy there is in his service. Nothing the world has to offer can compare with the peace and joy that Christ gives to a heart and life fully consecrated to his service. Praise the Lord.

Some Problems of Our Ministry

It is significant of the developing spirit of the Society of Friends in America that the burden of a better equipped ministry has become a genuine concern in more than one Yearly Meeting. The modern minister is not only preacher but leader as well, and he who ministers to a flock which is constantly being recruited by men and women of collegiate training and broadened conceptions of life, must be able not only to lead leaders, but to set the religious standards for present-day community and world activities in harmony with the precepts of Him who is the author of the world's redemption.

The minister should be in the vanguard of his congregation, not as the burden bearer, but as the living exemplar of that which counts for most in the race of life. The minister who lives below the level of the flock and the community must not only suffer the dwarfing of his own soul, but must bear the consciousness of dragging the people down from standards to which otherwise they might attain, for no one who has been called to a place of leadership can become a follower without harm both to himself and the circle of his fellowship. A religious contemporary well says: "There's no excellent church without a super-excellent ministry."

Leadership means more than mere conventional-ity. Many a minister can visit the sick and minister to the aged and infirm and even preach with more or less effectiveness, who lacks wholly the ability to lift others to higher planes of living and thinking, who fails in contributing to the invigorating and clarified atmosphere of church and community life, who has a narrow outlook upon life and who reduces religion to terms of dogma and definition rather than of life and experience. The minister must understand humanity, the business man, the professional, the woman in the home, the teacher and the student, youth and the children, else how can he summon them one and all to the clearer realms of nobler living and to the practice of the best ideals?

It will not be claimed by any that no one can preach the gospel who is not a college graduate and who has not had a course of professional graduate instruction in some theological school, but few will deny that collegiate training will develop human capability and be a guarantee of that broader outlook upon life that insures a deeper understanding of human needs and how to meet them intelligently. For the next fifty years, the church, and especially the church in America must face a class of community and world problems that will call not only for the best consecration of life but the best investment of soul and intellect of which humanity is capable.

The war itself has been turning the educated classes of the world to an open-hearted investigation of the claims of Christianity upon world civilization to a degree that has never existed before. The Orient, the dark Continent and Latin America are turning their eyes inquiringly toward the rosy dawn of the gospel day as their only hope. The temporal power of the Moslem world appears to be tottering upon its throne as it faces the advance guard of Christian thought and ideals, as personated by the missionaries of the Cross, who hold not back from famine and fire and sword in their zeal for the interests of the Christ they love. In our own American life the regnant forces of evil must be compelled to stand and give way before the triumphant march of the spiritual forces of this age, for the church cannot thrive unless the spirit of its life and service and consecration can dominate materialism at every point.

If Friends are to maintain their rightful place as participants in the work of constructing a Christianized social order of the world, in bringing social redemption to our community and national life at home and in preaching a message of redeeming love to the last man and woman and child within the reach of our influence, we must give far more attention to our leadership than we have ever done before. The measure of our progress henceforth will be largely the measure of the faith and vision of our leadership, and few churches will advance far beyond the standard of their ministry. There is no other problem in the church of equal importance and we must not be blind to the fact that the perpetuity of the denomination is involved in its solution.

We do not herein condemn our pastors. We know of no other body of men and women so self-sacrificing and so deeply consecrated to the interests of the kingdom as are the ministers and especially the pastors in the Society of Friends. If fault there be, it lies with the church, that better opportunity has not been afforded our ministers for more adequate equipment and training. It is not surprising now, in view of the tremendous interests which are at stake, that various Yearly Meetings have recently been moving toward a better system of ministerial education and preparation, or that the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, acting upon a joint report of the Evangelistic and Educational Boards, has taken constructive action in this direction. This report will be published in The American Friend next week, and should receive the sympathetic consideration of the entire church, and especially of our ministers, whom an important part of the proposed plan is designed to assist.

The ministry is the vanguard of the church, and as Friends we must give heed, not alone to the character of the messages proclaimed but to the quality of ministration as well.

Strewing Happiness Along the Pathway

By EFFIE BROWN HALL

(The following article was read by the writer recently at a regular prayer meeting of the West Richmond, Indiana, Friends church.)

"Fearest sometimes that thy Father Hath forgot?
Tho' the clouds around thee gather Doubt Him Not!
Always hath the day-light broken,
Always hath the comfort spoken;
Better hath he been for years
Than thy fears."

"Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed."

"Delight thyself also in the Lord; and He shall give thee the desire of thy heart."

"Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass."

"And He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light and thy judgment as the noon-day."

"Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him."

"Whoso trusteth in Jehovah, happy is he."

"He that keepeth the law, happy is he."

"Happy is the man who feareth alway."

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom—that getteth understanding."

"He that hath pity on the poor—happy is he."

"Happy is the man whom God correcteth—therefore, despise not the chastenings of the Almighty."

"Happy is the people whose God is Jehovah."

"I will in nowise fail thee—neither will I in anywise forsake thee—so with good courage we say the Lord is my helper—I will not fear."

"Thou hast been the helper of the fatherless."

"He will deliver the needy when he calleth."

"I will bless thee and make thy name great, and be thou a blessing."

"Fear not, for I am with thee and will bless thee."

If we are ever happy in this life, we must enjoy what every day brings us. We must be grateful and glad for all the good and pleasant things which come into our lives and patiently bear our trials, believing that all, if rightly used, will fit us for the enjoyment of perfect happiness hereafter. Say your kind word now. Do today the little thoughtful act that has so long been in the background of your intentions. Postpone your worrying till tomorrow, for tomorrow never comes. Put off till some other day all faultfinding and bitter speech. Leave for some future hour the complaining which intensifies the evil it deplores and wearies your friend to hear. Postpone all these things, but do the kind act and say the cheerful, encouraging word here and now.

"He that is of a cheerful heart hath a continual feast." Whether life to us is good and joyous and worth while does not depend half as much on what we have in our pockets as it does on what we have in our hearts. The problem of living happily and satisfactorily is not a problem of getting something, but a problem of becoming something. Life will take color and tone not from what we have, but from what we are. Do not be troubled because you do not have great virtues. God made a million spears of grass where he made one tree. Only "have enough of little virtues and common fidelities and you need not mourn because you are not a hero or a saint."

There are just as many people happy among those who do not have a very large bank account as there are among the millionaires. Just as many who find life a feast among those who have very frugal meals as among those who luxuriate in overabundance. There are few of us who estimate rightly how much a happy, sunshiny temperament can do toward lightening the burdens and cheering the sorrows of those with whom we come in contact from day to day. If we can help in no other way, we can at least turn a cheerful face to the world—for this sunshine of the heart may be cultivated, as is shown by the experience of one woman. She was one who had had many sorrows and heavy burdens to bear, but who was noted for her cheerful spirit. In explanation, she said: "You know I have had no money. I had nothing I could give my friends but myself, and so I made the resolution that I would never sadden any one else with my troubles. I have laughed and told jokes when I could have wept. I have smiled in the face of misfortune. I have tried to never let any one go from my presence without a happy word or a bright thought to carry away with them. And happiness makes happiness. I, myself, am happier than I should have been had I sat down and bewailed my fate."

It is evening now, so let us praise and think over the events of the day. Its story is no longer a matter of speculation for it has passed with its opportunities. Have you helped to make some ones' load a little lighter? Have you wiped the tear from the cheek of a friend? Have you reached out in sympathy for one in trouble—even though that one may have hurt or wounded you in some way in the past?

Have you written a message of love and hope to one whose heart was sore and lonely? Have you tried to make your own life better by reading some of the many beautiful, precious promises our Father has given us? Have you sung a song that has cheered a tired heart that was listening? If this is a story written of the day passed, we need not fear to look into the future days. What we do counts, not what we intend to do. That is what makes life grand, or full of regrets. "Habit is a cable; we weave a thread of it every day, and at last we cannot break it," said Horace Mann. Let us fill every day with kind deeds and loving thoughts and we will be glad we cannot break the habit.

"If we notice little pleasures
As we notice little pains,
If we quite forgot our losses
And remembered all our gains;
If we looked for people's virtues
And their faults refused to see
What a comfortable, happy, Cheerful place this world would be."

We must not expect to always have smooth sailing; then, if the storm comes, we are ready for it; if calm comes, the greater is our enjoyment. Life has its incessant demands, its many expenditures, its constant waste. Unless, under all circumstances, there be a steady renewal of strength, mental, physical and moral, life will run out rather than on. But the one who, speaking out of daily experience, can truly say, "The Lord is my helper," has found, if not the Fountain of Perpetual Youth, yet a source of perennial spiritual invigoration and joy which will ever keep him young in heart, full of hope and undaunted in moral purpose. Strength for life must be sought and brought from the strongest. "Trust in Jehovah forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." Look upward and onward for promised strength.

"Before we go—let us from out love's sweets
For those who hold us dear—
Be kind today, for time so often cheats;
And no man wists how near
The hour of going hovers while we sup;
Then let us share the sweetness of our cup."

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY QUAKERISM

Adapted to Present-Day Church Work. Can It
Be Done Successfully? If Not,
Why Not? If So, How?

By SYLVESTER NEWLIN

Principles do not need to be adapted. They are to be adopted. The method of application of a principle always needs to be wisely adjusted to existing conditions.

Truth never changes. But there is all the time a graded, progressive comprehension of truth; and the constant evolution of society, and of all human relationships including the membership of the church.

The founding of the Friends' Church was so evidently blessed by our heavenly Father, and its growth was so plainly under the Divine leadership, that without reserve we say the Friends' Church was begotten of God. An organism which God creates has life. Things which are vital live on, and bear fruit. But there is a human responsibility; location, soil, nourishment must be carefully looked after so that sunshine, showers and culture will all account for the most. Or, to change the figure, the machinery must be geared, and oiled, and controlled to perfect the product intended.

The Friends' Church has had a definite mission in the world. She has still a clear and living message which the world is hungry to hear. Many in the other churches are restless, and are chafing under the bondage of creed and ritual in form and symbol. The seventeenth century Friends' Church emphasized the need for a pure spiritual worship, and we do not wonder at this when we remember the importance attached at that time to outward forms as if there were merit in them in saving from sin.

What was the attitude of those early Friends? It was like this:—They stood on the broad, true, safe platform that the New Testament gives us no order or command for any set form of worship; but we are told to worship God in spirit and in truth. This allows freedom, and originality, and initiative on the part of the individuals and congregations, which are as much needed in this century as in any other. To merely copy somebody else will soon paralyze and devitalize. To walk with the Lord, and to ever follow the leading of the Holy Spirit will emancipate, and harmonize equipment to conditions, which gives freshness, variety, and occasional surprises, but never discord.

Images and crosses, amulets, and sprinkling of infants, which had come into use after the days of the apostles, George Fox and his followers considered unnecessary.

Carlyle wrote: "No grander thing was ever done than when George Fox went forth determined to find truth for himself and to battle for it against all superstitions, bigotry and intolerance."

The early Friends were "Eclectic," i. e., selecting the best. There must still be this spirit of the past. We need now to choose, select, sift. We must learn to discriminate. We are not to accept everything. If we are to be dominated by the same fearless spirit as the founders of our church exercised, we will break away from tradition when it is lifeless, and from custom where it is contrary to truth. A peril which we face is the tendency to think if Primitive Quakerism is to be restored, we must accept everything they said and did as final and decisive authority. Sewell's History, Evans' Exposition, Barclay's Apology, Clarkson's Quakerism, are not infallible, they are not always correct in their statements, they are not free from the prejudice and bias which characterized the controversial spirit of the age in which they were produced. In Thomas' History of Friends occurs this sentence: "The widely known 'Apology' of Robert Barclay was not regarded as an official statement, neither was it specially referred to by the Friends of the Seventeenth Century."

The application of the wide outlook of the seventeenth century to the work of the twentieth century will impel us to discard the frivolous, the worldly, the mercenary, the formal and by a wise selection of the best, the spiritual, the permanent, the scriptural, the practical, build up a strong, healthy body, capable of coping with the needs of the New Day. The opening paragraph of Thomas' History of Friends has in it this sentence: "Though scarcely one of its doctrines was absolutely new, yet the combination of so many radical tenets produced a remarkable factor in the religious economy of Christendom, the effects of which are only beginning to be appreciated." We ought still to dredge for gold the deep streams of truth all about us. It is impossible to estimate how far the teaching of our fathers has influenced the character of the various Christian communities of today. If we are actuated by the same spirit we will do our utmost to pass on to our posterity a truly worthy heritage.

George Fox gave the world a clear interpretation of the scriptural definition of the church. He says: "The church is the pillar and ground of truth, made up of living stones, living members, a spiritual household of which Christ is the Head; but He is not the head of a mixed multitude, or of an old house made up of lime, stones and wood." We have accepted that definition. How to adapt its application is one of our tasks. God is no respecter of persons. All are kings and priests unto God. We recognize no human head. We have this principle of the seventeenth century, and the pastoral system of today. They are in perfect accord. How? The pastor is only an under Shepherd. The pastor is to be Shepherd of the flock, and not its pet lamb. He is the best pastor who is not only not in the way, but who helps to make it easy to liberate the gifts and talents of the congregation. He is not a "Church Boss." He does not speak of "My"

Church, and "My" Sunday School, "My" Christian Endeavor Society.

George Fox had a strong objection to a paid ministry, because the ministry of his day was so largely self-seeking, actuated by mercenary motives, and satisfied with a low standard and condition of spiritual life. It means now that no one should choose the ministry as a profession, or for the financial support there is in it, or, in any way be hampered by a membership which throttles liberty, or enslaves by emoluments. With no claim to superiority, but with humility, our entire membership ought to live today so that worldly officials, corporations and organizations would be compelled to admit as Cromwell did in his day, when he said: "I see there is a people that I cannot win either with gifts, honors, offices, or places; but all other sects and people I can."

A noted author has written on "The Moral Equivalent of War," conclusively showing that there is a field of activity in which the heroic, the courageous, the unconscious self-sacrifice, and the push of an indomitable will, may find their sphere of widest exercise, in saving life, rather than in destroying it, in wholesome beneficence and productiveness, instead of destruction and impoverishment which with a daring challenge far outranks war as a means for the exercise of man's highest powers. With equal force we can reason that the early Friends grew sturdy under oppositions, hardships and innumerable limitations.

What can we do now and here to take the place of service amid wintry snows and sleet; fording swollen streams, sleeping in the woods and in barns; over corduroy roads visiting distant meetings and all this at our own expense? We can do this:—Face a difficult task. Undertake the impossible. With unwavering faith link the two statements—"With God all things are possible" and "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." In our day there may be developed moral muscle as we resist encroaching evils, as we enter the arena to fight the illegal saloon, the blind tiger, the brothel, and the gambling places. The man who obeys God is a Christian; he who obeys mammon is an idolater. The idolatry of wealth has swept over cities and over our broad land. The very atmosphere is hot with the passion for gain; gain by any method at any cost of character. To achieve their end, in many places, the Christian Sabbath is profaned. Railroad corporations grind to powder under the wheels of their Sunday trains God's righteous claims for a day of rest and worship. Mining corporations are digging, blasting, smelting, on the Holy Sabbath Day to rush their wealth to the market. Fathers, husbands and sons are wrecked by the saloon in some places according to statute law for which the state is responsible. The white slave traffic in our day and in our fair land would be a disgrace to the blackest heathenism. We have a message, we need heralds and intercessors who have faith to believe God will not close his ears to the cries of mothers, wives and children, and the United Church. The needs of this country are calling loudly for a John Woolman and an Elizabeth Fry. There must still be the spirit of the past. The early Friends had much to do in modifying legislation; in prison reforms; and in almost every moral reformation they were pioneers. They were consistent and they were united; a hint to the present-day Friends' Church. They in the seventeenth century were distinguished by simplicity and modesty in dress. We have only to observe to know there is need for the same thing now.

It was a mighty stride in progressive advancement when the Friends' Church recognized womanhood. At first all the Friends' meetings were men's meetings; but Fox soon saw the advantage of the women having meetings of their own to look after members of their own sex. At the same time it helped to develop women themselves, and to give them independence, and self-confidence. This was an innovation, but it was a needed one. Women were given a more prominent place than in any other contemporary organization. At that day the priests said: "A woman is not allowed to speak in the Church." We are more than 200 years in advance of most of the other denominations still, but this is no reason why we should halt in our onward march. What does this emancipation of womanhood teach us? It has helped to bring about the result that women are developed equally with men. There is no need to separate men and women with closed shutters in our meeting houses. No doubt but this had been a large factor in bringing about equal suffrage. It has shown the unconquerable zeal in our ancestors in the church, in the propagation of their belief in the universality of the application of the gospel, in contradiction to the prevalent idea that there was a favored elect few. This has almost wholly revolutionized missionary activity in foreign lands. It is another indication that 17th century Quakerism was cosmopolitan in its character. There was no one too high to be spoken to, no one too low to be considered. Thus we find Oliver Cromwell, the Czar, the Pope, the Sultan visited, and the negro slaves, the North American Indian and the prisoners in Newgate all were pleaded for, and sympathetically helped. The early Friends had a genuine missionary spirit. So much, so that they were sometimes called a "Missionary Band." One of their first objects was the care of the poor. If we are to keep pace with the pattern set for us, we must still be missionary, and be of practical help to the needy about us.

Those worthy ancestors were diligent in the use of the pen. William Penn's "Maxims," his "No Cross, No Crown," Gurney's "Observations," John Woolman's "Journal" are classics worthy of a high place in literature. There is especial need for writers in our church who will dedicate their talents to the propagation of truth.

George Fox had an extraordinary gift in opening the Scriptures. It is well known he carried a Bible with him. Few persons have been more familiar with the Bible than he, or been able to make a more ready use of it, as his Journal abundantly testifies. Samuel Bownas at times preached with his Bible in his hand. What now? Expository preaching, a teaching ministry, the whole Church in the Bible School, popular Bible classes in the church, Teacher Training classes, Memory Drill in the Christian Endeavor Societies, and a Bible school literature worthy of a progressive church in the 20th century.

George Fox taught Christian Perfection, and the possibility of a holy and sinless life being obtainable here in this world. There is need now for the Friends' Church to inscribe on her banner in letters of living light "holiness unto the Lord," never forgetting the unchanging word of truth: "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord," and listening constantly to God when he says: "Be ye holy, for I am holy."

In the first years of the existence of our Denomination there were troublous times in England. The government was in constant turmoil. The church was undergoing great upheavals. The priests and clergy were in incessant strife, were loud, and sadly lacking in spirituality. This led George Fox to go alone with his Bible into fields and orchards, where he could commune in solitude with his Maker. This same condition caused the early Friends' Church to build their meeting houses outside of the towns where there would be the privilege of quiet communion. There was often prolonged silence to help people to depend wholly on God rather than man. This made them exclusive,—only those of similar ideas meeting together. But in that quiet, separated seclusion, their needs were met, and they grew in power and influence. How changed the conditions now! But little controversy among the churches. The partition walls are crumbling. Christ's prayer is being answered: "That they all may be one." From clumsy wagon and slow ox-cart has been evolved rapid transit elevated cars spinning over our cities, the rumbling subway tide of life, the rushing trolley, the automobile, and the flying aeroplane, which are but indications of the movement of the age with which the church is to keep pace. Our own spiritual life must be fed in the simplicity of an ideal Home Life, in the faithful practice of Family Worship, in the observance of the Quiet Hour, in Daily Bible Study, in a faithful habit of Prayer,—and then go out into the throbbing centers of humanity to transact business on strictly Christian Principles, to attend faithfully on public worship, to go as individuals and in groups into other homes, to help carry the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth, and everywhere to live a life which humbly but worthily represents the Lord Jesus Christ.—The Friends Messenger.

JOY RIDING

By JOHN W. DORLAND

The term "joy riding" is a bit of American slang that is very commonly used in these days of the automobile. When we speak of "joy riding" we usually think of somebody who has stolen the car of someone else, and gone off for a pleasant little spin with a party of friends, often bringingg up suddenly in the ditch, sometimes trying to climb a tree, but more often, after the driver and his friends have had their fun, the car has been left at the side of the road for its owner to find it the best he can.

It has been the writer's privilege to take a number of "joy rides" lately that have been rather different from the kind described above. I shall call them "joy rides" because that seems to be the word that describes them best, for they are just that, but only in the truest and highest sense of the term.

A large red auto-bus, holding from ten to fifteen people leaves the First Friends' church of Pasadena at six p. m every Sunday for the town of Montebello. A banner attached to the side of the bus tells us that this is a gospel team, so, if you are interested, they will give you a seat and show you how it is done.

This team is composed of both men and women, though most gospel teams are for men only. However, in Pasadena, they figured that this was a Quaker gospel team and that as Friends we believe in equal rights for men and women in the church. As there was no dissenting voice, the motion was carried, hence the women. The team has a membership of fifteen and the average that go over to Montebello would be about nine, so the bus is usually comfortably filled with just enough room left for the Billhorn portable organ.

The drive of ten miles to Montebello is an especially beautiful one, over roads such as only southern California can boast of. The views of mountain and valley, of orchard and orange grove, all in the mellow light of early evening, are very charming and not soon forgotten.

But, in the meantime, are the members of the team sitting like stuffed images while the bus rolls on its way? Hardly! They started to sing long before the bus had cleared the city limits, such songs as "There is power in the blood," "If your heart keeps right," "Sweeter as the years go by," etc. Doubtless all these could say in the words of this last hymn—

"'Twas wondrous love which led Him for us to suffer loss,
To bear without a murmur the anguish of the cross,
With saints redeemed in glory let us our voices raise,
Till heaven and earth re-echo with our Redeemer's praise."

The town of Montebello is on one of the main roads between Los Angeles and Whittier, with a population of perhaps a thousand people. It is surrounded by truck farms and acreage set to various kinds of flowers. The Japanese and Chinese seem to be the most successful at this, especially the former.

The Friends have a small meeting house here now, but originally only a mission, which was started by Benjamin Farquhar. Pastoral work has been attempted at various times, but without much success, probably due to a floating population. In fact, the Nazarenes assumed the property at one time, but being unable to make things go, the Friends took the property back again. It would seem, in the face of these facts, a rather discouraging place to work, but at the earnest, prayerful request of a family of Friends who were struggling to keep the meeting alive, the team consented to come and do the best they could. The Methodists have a small pastoral charge at this place, but they are not attempting any evangelistic work.

"Hold the fort for I am coming!" is ringing through the clear evening air as the big red bus swings into Main street and stops in front of a garage. The Billhorn is lifted to the pavement and the team gathers around for the street service that precedes the meeting in the church. One of the members plays a cornet and very effectively aids the organ in leading the singing. After the singing sometimes various members of the team give short testimonies, sometimes only one member speaks, but all with faith to believe that somehow through the power of the Holy Spirit some within sound of the gospel message will have seed sown in their hearts that will spring up into everlasting life. During the meeting tracts are distributed to the men on the street. With a closing prayer and invitation to the after service, we went our way to the little church whose lighted windows welcome us through the gathering dusk.

It has been very difficult to get outsiders to attend these meetings. Just the team and a few faithful ones have often comprised the congregation, but the promise "that where the two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" has been preciously verified. "Sometimes a light surprises the Christian on his way." Certainly new light has come and with it abounding joy that we have the privilege of being co-workers with Him.

The chairman conducts the meeting, but very informally. This is a real Quaker meeting and all feel that they have a part in it. Since the arrival of John S. Kimber, the new evangelistic superintendent of California Yearly Meeting, help and encouragement have been given to this needy field and a personal worker has been doing house-to-house visitation two days in the week, which has proved very beneficial. It is another real joy ride back to Pasadena after handshakes and farewells, a more subdued crowd, tired, perhaps, but happy also.

During the week a cottage prayer meeting is conducted in Pasadena by the gospel team every Friday evening in the home of some member of the church. These are helpful times to all who attend.

What is the gospel team idea among Friends?

It is the little flame of fire, like unto that which started way back in the days of George Fox, which pushed young men and women out into the white harvest fields, until the flame became a great fire and burned all England. Who knows but what this twentieth century expression may also in time become a fire which will revive the home mission work of Friends in this country?

"And let the favor of the Lord our God be upon us, and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it." Psalms 90:17.

Pasadena, California.

CORRESPONDENCE

Yonkers, Oklahoma, October 8, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

I have read considerably about the Quakers and the Quaker message, but when I read the Message of Quakerism in The American Friend of September 28, I said, Praise God from whom all blessings flow. There is some one somewhere that knows what the Quaker message is. I was intending to note some special lines in it, but in reading it over I found that almost every line would need to be quoted or noticed, so I refer to the whole article. It was surely dictated by the Spirit of God. As I say, almost every line tells something worth knowing and pondering over in no light, frivolous state of mind. I wish every individual that calls himself Quaker would read it seriously.

And while writing, will say, I have read that we were called Quakers in derision, because our forefathers in preaching bade the people tremble at the word of God. I wanted to say it was because many of the ministers did tremble at the word of God. I have seen them and I am one that often trembles at the word of God. Isaiah says, 66 chapter, 2 verse: "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit and trembleth at my word." But dare I say that that type of ministers is set on the back shelf today? So the young Friends never see it and don't understand it and there are not many left to tell them. I pity them from the very depths of my heart. No one to tell them what their very souls yearn after.

When the Quakers were being persecuted in England and imprisoned for little or nothing, there was a man named William Nichols, or Nicholson, that came from England to Philadelphia and after a time returned to England on business and while there he attended a theatrical performance on the stage one night. One person on the stage was to represent God and another was to represent Satan. People were to come out in front and make one request of God and it was to be granted. Several had come out and made their request and they were granted. At last a poor, despised Quaker came out. The God says, "Well, and what do you want?" roughly. He says, "I want the kingdom of heaven."

"Oh," they all exclaim, "we want that, too," but God said, "You have your request granted." Then Satan began and made his oration. He said, "You are fools, you persecute the Quakers and take their property from them and they have no hope of anything here and I can't get them. They are an honest, sober, temperate, industrious people and if let alone will grow rich and proud and build fine houses to live in like other people and then I shall have them." It was said that performance had a great deal to do with stopping their persecution.

I said a long while ago that if Friends received company like other people, and entertained like other people, and dismissed them like other people, the children would be like other people.

REPAYING LIFE WITH LIFE

Two years ago Chapman D. Young, a farmer of Union, Iowa, dug Dr. E. S. Kaufman from beneath the physicians' overturned auto, saving him from suffocation in eighteen inches of mud and water.

"I wish I could repay you, but I will never be able to," said Dr. Kaufman.

His chance to repay came and he has repaid with life.

Young was stricken with a trouble that required immediate operation of a dangerous and difficult sort. Dr. Kaufman was notified and raced his automobile at terrific speed to the farmer's home and back to a local hospital, where Young was immediately placed upon an operating table. Dr. Kaufman himself performed the operation, which was successful.

"There will be no charge; I've merely paid my debt," said the doctor.

He repaid life with life. The farmer and the doctor stand even. And yet, can either feel that he is under no obligation to his benefactor? Each must feel that he owes his life to the other, the obligation thus laid upon him is a debt that can never be fully paid.

A good deed done to us lays upon us an obligation that can never fully be met. It puts us under perpetual debt to the doer.

If this is true with man, how much more is it true with Jesus who gave himself as the ransom of our lives and made eternal life possible for us.—The Evangelical Messenger.

AN APT QUESTION

Helen was a very inquisitive child who greatly annoyed her father each evening with endless questions, while he tried to read the newspaper. One evening, among other things, she demanded, "Papa, what do you do at the store all day?"

Exasperated at her persistence, he answered, briefly, "Oh, nothing!"

Helen was silent for a moment, and then asked, "But how do you know when you are done?"—Selected.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

SUMMER CONFERENCE DELEGATES CEDAR LAKE, IND., AUGUST, 1916

WILL IT PAY TO OBSERVE YOUNG FRIENDS DAY?

Is there any good reason for not observing Young Friends Day in any Meeting in the United States or Canada? Suppose we examine a few.

(1) There are too many special days in the church. One must sympathize with this point of view, especially when a pastor has a well formulated program for the year's work. But as a usual thing such men have left space for these special days and welcome them most heartily. After all isn't it a good thing for a Meeting to have certain times when attention of the whole congregation is focused upon some certain phase of its work? Doesn't it rivet the work in the minds of all as nothing else could do? Doesn't it break the monotony of the regular routine? Doesn't it put people to work who might otherwise not be interested in Church things? Surely it will not injure most Meetings to have more Special Days. All advertisement given to any special feature of the church will react favorably upon all departments. A Children's Day exercise has hurt very few churches, while it has added new life to the whole church. The only difficulty with this is that it comes but once a year. A very great deal should be made out of Young Friends Day and all other special days.

(2) Again it might be objected, we haven't a young people's organization. Could a Meeting do anything that would more surely stimulate an interest in Young People's work? A vision must be created before organization can be started.

(3) Or one might say, "we haven't any Young People." Then let the older members put on a Special Day for the young people. Could it be that the young people think the Meeting has no interest in them or their work? Give them an attractive evening, or morning, in the church. Invite them. Put people to work on advertising who don't usually come to Meeting. See what happens!

And again some meeting might object, "We don't have much interest in the Five Years Meeting. It has never done anything for us. And some of its workers are not 'sound.'" Now let us frankly face these objections. Why is it that your Meeting doesn't have much interest in the Five Years Meeting. What causes interest usually? It is knowledge, isn't it? How do you get this?

The Five Years Meeting has been trying to get in touch with your meeting ever since it came into being and has been thwarted in its efforts by some officer or layman that was "too busy." Here is another appeal from the central office. We want to tell you who we are, what we are doing and what we propose to do. We want to explain ourselves to the whole meeting.

Will you give us a chance? Why has the Five Years Meeting done nothing for you? Has it been because its appeals have been neglected? Surely not! We will be in a better position to help you when people know just what we are trying to do. Give us a chance! Are some of the workers "unsound" from your point of view? Perhaps. This can be a serious drawback, but who is to be the final judge in this matter? How can one man or section of country determine whether a movement is "sound"?

Our ideas are so different.

God says, let me be the judge. Ye shall know a tree by its fruits. What about the fruits of the Young Friends Board? Read last year's report. It is just off the press. I tell you Friends I have never witnessed such hunger and such response as has come to our work during the past year. People have volunteered for the foreign field, decided for the ministry, gone on for further training in the church and accepted Christ as their personal Lord and Saviour. Let's not condemn a movement before it is tried. There are other reasons why every Meeting should observe Young Friends Day, but perhaps we can pass them now.

We will be glad to correspond with any Meeting about plans and literature. Don't let this opportunity to really impress the young people in your church go by. When is this day? NOVEMBER 26 is the date. See that everybody comes to Meeting on that day. Watch The American Friend. Write to the Young Friends Board, Dunreith, Indiana, for further information.

HOW TO ADVERTISE RALLY DAY

Rally Day programs and posters for advertising will be furnished free of charge. The pamphlet, "The Young Friends Movement, its Origin and Activities," which this program calls for, will cost 5 cents. The packet of Young Friends Literature for use in the dialogue, will be sent for 10 cents to cover cost of mailing. This will all be sent from the Office of the Young Friends Board, Dunreith, Indiana.

Announce the Day in the papers. Post the "Posters" in a conspicuous place. Send special invitations to the public schools, and other churches. Send special written invitations. Above all, talk the rally up individually and get every member of your society doing the same. That is the work that brings out the crowd! Be sure to appoint your most enthusiastic and wide awake worker to handle the advertising. Make every one understand that this is to be the biggest thing of its kind that you have ever had. Be enthusiastic about it yourself, feel its importance, work for something great, and others will easily catch the fire!

PEACE DEPARTMENT

NOTE—It is hoped that this page may present in brief form a record of activities typical of the work Friends are doing for peace. News items, short, pointed arguments, suggested plans, all will be welcome, and will be used subject to the limitations of space and the proper distribution and arrangement of the matter received. All communications intended for this page should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, President, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.

MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE PEACE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS IN AMERICA

The Executive Committee of the Peace Association of Friends in America met in its annual session in the South Eighth Street Friends Church, in Richmond, Indiana, on Tuesday evening, October 17, 1916. Consideration was given to the various phases of work under the care of the Association, and plans were formulated for the coming year. Following is a summary of the most important steps decided upon:

1. To appoint two members, including the President of the Association, to co-operate with representatives appointed by other bodies of Friends in America in planning for a National Peace Conference at a time and place to be agreed upon. It was the judgment of the committee that it would be desirable to hold such a conference some time in January in Washington City.

2. To use all possible means to influence public opinion and legislation on the subject of compulsory military service.

3. To carry on an educational campaign in regard to the relations between the United States and Asiatic nations, especially with Japan and China. An outline of lessons and a suggested course of study on this subject will soon be submitted to each meeting of Friends in the Five Years Meeting, and it is hoped that much careful study of this important question will result.

4. To prepare for the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Peace Association of Friends in America in the autumn of 1917. Details of the observance were not developed, but it was decided to ask the Committee on Arrangements for the Five Years Meeting in 1917 to consider the propriety of giving especial emphasis to the peace work in the program of that meeting, in view of the present world situation, together with the fact that next year is the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Association.

5. To recommend to the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting that that committee on behalf of the Five Years Meeting express to English Friends our approval of their plan to hold a Peace Conference of all Friends at the close of the war, our readiness to be of any assistance possible in the undertaking, and to express also the welcome we are ready to give to the holding of the Conference in this country if, in the end, such a plan should seem to English Friends desirable.

It is proper to add that the Executive Committee approved the above recommendation, and authorized its chairman to communicate with English Friends accordingly.

PEACE LITERATURE FOR SALE BY THE PEACE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS IN AMERICA

The following literature is especially recommended for use now. Much additional literature can be supplied, but the following list includes that which is believed to be particularly valuable at the present time:

1. "Whence Come Wars?"

This is a book of 193 pages, bound in paper covers, which has been issued this year by the committee on "War and the Social Order," appointed by London Yearly Meeting of Friends in 1915. The scope and plan of the book is indicated in a general way by the following minute of instructions from the Yearly Meeting:

"To investigate what connection there is between war and the social order, to encourage the study of the question and to consult with those Friends who have been led, owing to the war, to feel the need of a personal readjustment of their way of life."

The committee appointed held its first conference at Oxford in August, 1915, and as a result of the consideration there given to the subjects assigned to it, seven sub-committees were appointed, each to undertake a careful study of a particular phase of the larger question.

The scope and plan of the committee as a whole can be so much better understood by understanding the tasks assigned to the sub-committees, and the value of the work can also be made so much more easily evident by giving the names of the different sub-committees, and the statement of work as referred to each, that the list of sub-committees, with assignment of tasks is appended herewith, viz:

1. Origins. "To investigate how far the origin of modern wars can be traced directly" to certain sources named, such as possession of property, commercial rivalry, the spirit of competition, etc.

2. Competition. "Are the evils of competition inherent to the system or only abuses?"

3. Control. "Can anything be done in business life in the direction of giving employees what they often desire more than increased wages, viz., a greater independence and a share in the control of their conditions of employment?"

4. Investments "Assuming that the possession of capital is permissible for the Christian, how can we secure its employment in directions where it will do most good and not help to foster abuses against which we have conscientious objections?"

5. Simplification. "To consider how best to give practical assistance to those who desire to follow more literally the teaching of our Lord, feel uneasiness as to their present mode of life and personal and family expenditure."

6. Experiment. "Is there any possibility of effecting a further simplification and enrichment of life on practical lines by means of the association of those like-minded and mutually trusting each other? And is the Society of Friends, with its peculiarly close ties and relatively assured economic position, specially suited to undertake such an experiment?"

7. Training. "What have Friends to offer to the world as a practicable alternative to military conscription?"

Each of the above sub-committees makes report of progress, and the work as presented, while not yet complete, is a most interesting and valuable discussion of the very important phases of the question under consideration.

Some difficulty has been experienced in obtaining copies of the report for distribution in America, but the Peace Association of Friends in America has finally received a consignment, ordered a few months ago, and is ready to fill orders as long as the supply lasts. Orders should be sent to the address given at the head of this page. The price is 45 cents per copy, post-paid.

2. Other Literature

(1) "The Last Weapon," by Theodora Wilson Wilson; a forceful, dramatic presentation of the Christian view in regard to war. Paper cover, 185 pages; 50 cents per copy, post-paid.

(2) Pamphlets, as follows:

"Military Training in our Schools;" 16 pages; 5 cents per copy; 10 copies, 25 cents.

"The Quaker Peace Position," by Rufus M. Jones. 8 pages; 2 cents per copy; 10 copies, 10 cents.

"A Quaker View of the War," by Henry T. Hodgkin. 12 pages; 3 cents per copy; 10 copies, 15 cents.

"How Ideals are Realized," by Allen D. Hole. 8 pages; 2 cents each; 10 copies, 10 cents.

A REACTION FROM KILLING

"Thou shalt not kill" is a tenet of every great religion. The ceremonies of savages, ancient or modern, which include human sacrifice, perish of their own iniquity, or are destroyed and replaced by more humane beliefs.

"Thou shalt not kill" is a universal religious tenet because every man knows in his heart that his life is his own, and not another's—unless God's; and that as he values his right to his own life, so he has no power or right over the lives of others.

Yet millions of civilized men, who were born and brought up in this faith, today make the breaking of this law of God and man the only business of their existence.

Other millions of civilized men look on and supply them with the machinery of war.

Meanwhile each man's conscience hurts him.

Never in any cause of conquest, crusade, or revolution, was the great human conscience so aroused.

Never were men so united in disgust of their own foolishness.

Pessimists assert that the war will make man harder, more brutal, revengeful and eager to go into another war as soon as he recuperates from this.

But optimists believe that the first consequence of the great war is already evident, that it is a revulsion against killing by wholesale—as if a patient God had tired of man's hypocrisy and through the horrors of this mighty struggle of rival armies was teaching the holiness of a lasting peace.

Whatever his philosophy, civilized man already beholds his monstrous twentieth century crime with a broken and a contrite heart. And consequently, some predict, he is close to a great and deep respect for religion, perhaps to a united church which shall be a church of universal peace.—The Daily Times (Minneapolis, Minn.)

COURSES IN MILITARY SCIENCE AT HARVARD

Less than 250 students have enrolled in the new course in Military Science and tactics, which, if completed, counts as a full course towards a degree. Last year, when enrollment in the regiment was voluntary, 1,100 men were members. Although the course is without charge, it has proven unpopular.—From the Evening Post (New York.)

The world is so full of a number of things, I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

By ADELINE H. HADLEY

"Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there will not be room enough to receive it."

As a society of Christian believers, we are grossly negligent in our duty of stewardship. Our people are financially prosperous. If millionaires are few among us, it is also true that the really poor are few. God has entrusted us with a liberal portion of his wealth, yet every department of our Christian work is cramped and stunted from lack of means. No one of our educational institutions, west of the Alleghenies, is adequately supported; "The American Friend," the only periodical published by the Five Years Meeting, is constantly in a cramped and embarrassed condition; our evangelistic boards are forced to see open doors all about closed for want of means to enter them; the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions has recently been forced to announce a shortage in the year's receipts. At this crisis in the world's history, when the wealth of the European Continent is being consumed in armaments, almost to the exclusion of her missionary work, ought we not to have recognized our added responsibility and opportunity and have doubled our contributions to foreign missions—this most glorious enterprise which has been entrusted to the Church of God?

In the Twenty-first Annual Report of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions we find that, of the thirteen Yearly Meetings belonging to the Five Years Meeting, only two, Baltimore and California, give yearly to Foreign Missions as much as an average of $2.00 per member. Of the remaining eleven Yearly Meetings, only one, Canada, gives up to $1.50 per member, though New England, Iowa, and Oregon give around, yet fall short of $1.00 per member. Wilmington, Indiana and Western, the yearly meetings containing the most of the Quaker wealth, are giving the paltry average of about 50 cents per member, and the three remaining Yearly Meetings still less. We are pleased to note in The American Friend's recent report of the proceedings of Indiana Yearly Meeting that this body will endeavor to raise its missionary contributions for the present year to $1.00 per member. We trust that she will soon also outgrow this very meager average.

Giving is not a duty that we may do or not do, according to our pleasure or convenience, and in either case reap the reward of the faithful. Should any Christian be satisfied to give less than the per cent required of the Children of Israel by the Mosaic Law? Should our obligations to our Master be any less binding because we are not under the Law but under Grace?

The expression, "Proportionate and Systematic Giving," has become so trite to many that it is meaningless, yet no better way has been found than to give proportionately, according to our ability, and systematically according to a fixed standard. Some standard is imperative. Some who are not giving systematically claim to be giving more than the tenth, but I do not believe that any man has a right to make this claim unless he knows accurately what per cent he is giving. Surely if we are truly Christian, if we are sincere in our allegiance to our Lord, we cannot with conscience void of offense permit our giving to be done in a loose or haphazard manner, which if used in our business affairs would mean certain failure.

If our membership would scrupulously and faithfully give the tenth of the income with which the Lord has blessed us to Christian work, it would be easily within our reach to endow our missionary work and to add to that endowment from year to year, thus enlarging the scope of our missionary interests as new fields are entered; to ably endow our educational institutions which would, in turn, furnish us an endless succession of trained young workers for the responsible places in the Church; to provide for our aged and incapacitated ministers; to place our "American Friend" upon a firm financial basis and to add to its scope and efficiency; to reach out and occupy new territory for the Kingdom of Christ through our Evangelistic Boards, and to enrich our own lives and that of the Church a hundred fold through the new avenues of sympathy and interest opened to us. Does any man dare say that this is an exaggeration? If so, let him put it to the test.

Since its organization, the W. F. M. S. has had a department of Proportionate and Systematic Giving, but little has been accomplished in the way of propaganda, from the fact that the work is confined to the women of the Church. This organization has accomplished great things, but nothing can be done in a financial way without the co-operation of the men of the Church and they have been slow to see their great responsibility and opportunity along the line of proportionate and systematic giving.

Shall not the local meetings of Iowa Yearly Meeting take the lead in putting to the test the matchless promise which stands at the head of this article?

SIMPLIFIED PEACE

By SAMUEL L. HAWORTH

It is a long way to World-Peace when the distance is measured in terms of feeling. But nobody who believes in peace must despair of the end. Each one must make his contribution of effort in hope, knowing that the end is worth to the world what it costs to gain it. Let every one of us begin to put himself in condition by asking himself the question, "What kind of peace would the World Peace be, if everybody in the world were just like me?" And to make sure that it would be a better kind than it now is let him adopt this simple program:

1. Let me love everybody, even the unlovely; for love is determined not by what the other person is but what I am, and if I love him because of what is in me I shall thereby help him to be beloved because of what may be in him.

2. Let me observe the Golden Rule. The beneficent and practical law of life taught by Jesus has been perverted by the world of competition into a selfish axiom: "Do to the other fellow what he would do to you, and do it first." But I have too much nobility of birth and training to stoop to the standard of conduct which seems to control the other man's life when I see that he has not risen to mine. If I get down where he is we shall both be down; if I remain on the high level it may help him to rise.

3. Let me avoid saying and doing those things that unnecessarily irritate. Some times the thing said or done will ruffle the spirit of the other person even when the intention is pure and good. But with proper care such effect may be greatly reduced. My part is to take the care.

4. Let me make amends for wrong done. Justice is not fully defined when we say that it is what the other fellow ought to do. Right, indeed, is a straight line, but a straight line has two ends. When I am disposed to measure conduct I should first take up the end next to myself. It may seem convenient even then to measure the other person's conduct, but it is honest to examine my own and to make it right when I see that what I have done is wrong.

5. Let me interpret reasonably and fairly the words and deeds of others. It is easy to be mistaken about another's motive. It may be as easy for me to make a mistake in judging another's motive to be wrong when, in fact, it is right, as it is for him to make a mistake by harboring a wrong motive against me when he ought to hold a right one.

6. Let me cultivate the forgiving spirit. The other person will sometimes do the wrong thing. It may hurt me somewhere—in business, in reputation, in personal rights. I am not required to treat lightly an act of injustice. Right is right and wrong is wrong, in the life of the other person as well as in my own. But has it never occurred to me that it is a poor way to even things by hurting him in the same place as he has hurt me? There would then be two hurts instead of one and the world no better—rather worse. The moral balance must be found in some other way.

7. Let me strive to reconcile the one who for some reason is at enmity toward me. It is not enough to stand ready to forgive the other person when, having done a wrong, he repents; I must also try to restore to mutual friendship the one who thinks he is aggrieved and counts himself my enemy. To adopt his attitude and treat him as enemy treats enemy might be an act of injustice as well as a breach of peace. In any case the best way to defeat such an enemy is to make a friend of him.

YOUNG FRIENDS WAIT FOR THE FILLING OF THE SPIRIT

By RUTH KIRK

I am glad that we have seen the mistake of our forefathers in their all-quiet meetings. But oh! how we do need more times of quiet waiting on the Lord. How I covet for our young people more of the power of the spirit that comes only at such times of quiet waiting. I do so wish for each Christian Endeavor Society at least five minutes of quiet waiting and silent prayer at the opening of each service.

Why are we not reaping better results? Because we are not taking time for the filling of the Spirit. We have power only in the measure that we are spirit filled. Our C. E. prayer meeting should be a place of putting aside the hurry and bustle of life and getting close to God and being renewed, refreshed, strengthened and given new vision.

How I wish each Endeavorer might come to the Sunday evening prayer meeting reverently, prayerfully, and, quietly taking his place, enter into quiet prayer and that the meeting be considered begun when the first one arrives, that each person as he comes might feel that he is entering holy ground because God was there; and that the first five minutes of each service be spent this way.

Then when our meetings were open for testimony and the exchange of thought we would have something really worth while to give. God will direct His work as of old, if only we will stop and listen to His voice. We are trying too much to do God's work by methods suggested by men instead of taking our orders straight from the Master.

Dear young Friends, let us catch the vision of what we may accomplish for "Christ and the Church," with our young strength, if only we take time for quiet waiting, that we may hear plainly the voice of God. And may we not have a time of waiting together for His voice? Deeper, richer, more purposeful, more efficient lives, more missionary zeal, Christ's kingdom brought nearer will be the results.

ASKS FOR SUGGESTIONS

The Committee on Arrangements for the next Five Years Meeting requests again that all concerned Friends who have suggestions about the program and the subjects for consideration should send same to the Committee, either to J. Elwood Cox, High Point, N. C., Chairman, or L. Hollingsworth Wood, 20 Nassau Street, New York City, Secretary.

For without Thee I can not live;
Abide with me when night is nigh,
For without Thee I cannot die."

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

$60,000 THIS YEAR NEEDED FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

Board at Annual Meeting Sets High Goal For Coming Year. Increase of Fifty Percent Called For.

Why Such An Increase?

Because our work in Cuba, Africa, Jamaica, and Mexico has reached the place where this larger sum is necessary to keep it going. To spend less than $60,000 will be poor economy in view of the investment of life and money which has already been made.

Does The Board Know Accurately The Amount Needed?

Yes, it knows accurately, for the missionaries in each country have prepared itemized estimates of the amount needed to carry on their work. These estimates were first revised and approved by the entire Mission on the field, then by the Field Committee at home, later by the Finance and Executive Committees of the Board, and finally by the entire Board. See statement on next page.

Is $60,000 The Full Amount Needed For the Work This Year?

No. More than $71,000 will be needed for current expenses alone, but $10,000 will be raised on the field, leaving $60,641.44 to be contributed by the 80,000 Friends in the Five Years' Meeting. An additional $10,000 will be required, however, for buildings in Cuba and Africa—indeed, twice this amount is needed for building purposes.

Is It Not Too Much To Expect Friends To Give $60,000 To Missions This Year?

If Friends gave on the average for missions the price of one postage stamp each week, the income of this Board would be over $70,000. Is $60,000 too much to expect?

Do We Give More or Less Than Other Churches?

Our average gift per member to missions is larger than the average of some denominations and less than the average of others. Baptists gave last year $1.02 per member; Congregationalists, $1.44; Presbyterians, $1.53; United Presbyterians, $2.24. Our average was less than any of these.

Have Friends Missionary Gifts Increased As Rapidly As Those of Other Churches?

Unfortunately, they have not. See the charts on the opposite page.

How Can Friends Raise the Entire Sum Needed This Year?

By keeping our members informed about what goes on on the mission field—through missionary meetings, study circles, instruction in the Bible School—and, after they are informed, by giving every man, woman and child an opportunity to contribute toward missions. It can only be accomplished through the help of the entire membership in every Friends Meeting.

When Must The $60,000 Be Raised?

Part of it is needed at once, for the Board of Missions has to spend about $4,000 each month for missionaries' salaries and other current expenses. The entire sum must be paid in to the treasurer of the Board during the next eleven months.

How Can We All Keep In Touch With the Missionary Work of Friends?

By reading the Missionary Page in "The American Friend" each week.

BOARD OF MISSIONS MEETING.

Each year in October the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions holds its annual meeting in Richmond. The meeting this year occurred on the 17th and 18th with representatives present from every yearly meeting in the Five Years Meeting except two. The decision to ask Friends for $60,000 this year for missions came as the unanimous action of the Board at this session.

HOW THE DECISION WAS MADE

The Wednesday morning session of the Board meeting was a memorable occasion. After hours of careful study and conference together, the members of the Board faced the fact that, unless $60,000 would be raised for missions this year, the work would seriously suffer. Even after the estimates had been considered in detail and it seemed that every possible reduction had been made, it was clear that at least $60,000 would have to be raised.

A letter from one of the missionaries was in the hands of the Secretary. In the concluding paragraph are these words: "You may be interested to know that we are giving ourselves much to prayer that funds for carrying on the work as we believe God has led us to plan it may be forthcoming according to His will, and that our Heavenly Father will give the Board great wisdom in planning the work for the coming year." We knew that the first part of this prayer had already been answered, for since this letter was written missionary receipts had so far increased that the treasurer's books closed last year showing receipts more than $600 greater than expenditures. Were we to suppose God would not answer the second part of the prayer as He had the first?

That same morning, another letter had come to the Board of Missions office from a young Friend who expects to give his life to service on the foreign field. Every member of the Board was profoundly impressed as the concluding paragraph of this second letter was read. "I am praying much for the coming Board meeting. I trust that the Board may see its way to challenge the Church with a bigger program of work than ever before." Surely no Friends who read these words now will be surprised at the action which the Board took as it decided unanimously to ask Friends this year to increase their missionary gifts fifty per cent, raising this year $60,000 instead of $40,000. Were we not to let the Lord direct the plans for His own work?

Official Statement of Board's Finance Committee

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 24, 1916.
Editor of The American Friend:

I enclose herewith a statement of the estimated requirements of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions for the year 1916-17. I would like to explain the manner in which these are compiled.

First, the missionaries in each station estimate what they will need at that station. Then what is known as the Mission, a meeting of all the missionaries of each field, pass upon these requirements. They are then forwarded to the Home Office and those for each field are passed upon by the Committee in charge of that field, and then the entire estimates are submitted to the Financial Committee and the final action is by the Board. There is quite an increase in the amount required for the next year over the receipts of last year. The largest increase is caused by the additional expense of traveling to and from Africa, of missionaries on furloughs, and new missionaries going out. This is caused by the disturbance of the ordinary routes of travel owing to the war in Europe and is entirely unavoidable.

The total required from our treasury was found to be over $60,000.00, while the receipts for the year 1915-16 were under $43,000.00, but the Board, in view of the fact that these estimates had been so carefully prepared, could not see its way to cut down the amount, but appeals to Friends to meet this need by increasing their contributions over 40 per cent, for the year 1916-17. The amounts shown as receipts on the field are in the case of Africa the estimated amount of sales of lumber, coffee, etc., produced in the missions. In the cases of Cuba and Jamaica they are mainly the amounts received for support of schools from tuition fees and local authorities, but they include some local contributions for evangelistic work.

Yours truly,

FRANCIS A. WRIGHT,

Chairman of Finance Committee.

THE NEBRASKA PAGE

AT BOULDER, COLORADO.

Colorado Friends are much interested in the coming election for several reasons, but perhaps the chief one is that an amendment to the state constitution declaring that beer is not an intoxicating beverage and granting permission to dealers to sell it from door to door if they so desire, will be voted on. Of course this amendment is a product of the Brewers' Association. If the matter were not so serious here, it would be amusing. Before the primaries, the Boulder pastor read from the pulpit a list of the names of all members of voting age who were not registered. The result was that a number registered immediately.

An additional strip of ground ten feet wide on the south side of our building site has been purchased and paid for. Plans for the prospective church home are being completed and it is hoped that construction will begin in the near future. That a building is sadly needed is attested by the fact that for several Sundays recently, the Boulder Friends have had to worship in an unheated building.

Kirby V. Bowen is taking graduate work in the University of Colorado to apply on his Ph. D. degree.

AT AURORA, SOUTH DAKOTA

One of the largest and most fruitful Christian Endeavor Societies ever held was the one held on the evening of September 29. It was attended by about fifty non-members. After an oyster supper there were male quartette numbers and Professor Ray Lewis gave a short address on Friends' history.

WESSINGTON SPRINGS QUARTER

Wessington Springs Quarterly Meeting was held in the Harmony church, South Dakota, September 23 and 24. There was a good delegation from Aurora. The ministry of L. A. Phinney, the local pastor, P. D. Guyer, pastor at Aurora, and of Professor Ray Lewis, field secretary of Central College, was very helpful. The Quarterly Meeting showed much interest in the campaign for the church extension and college endowment. Alice Potts was appointed Quarterly Meeting Superintendent of Endeavor work. Extension Committees were appointed in both Societies and these will work to organize classes for the study of Friends' history and for church extension in outpost points.

At the last session on Sunday evening Professor Lewis had charge of the services on the gospel team plan. Two souls were saved at the close and many others were deeply touched.

THE DENVER QUARTERLY MEETING EXTENSION PASTOR

Ira B. Hoskinson has now been engaged in the extension work of this Quarterly Meeting for three months. In that time he has had opportunity to find out what a task he has. Perhaps few eastern people realize the size of some of our western Quarterly Meetings. This one in particular is about two hundred and fifty miles in length. Ira B. Hoskinson has seven or eight points which he visits regularly, locations where there are strong possibilities that churches may be built up. Out of the large number of openings he has selected only this kind. He has suggested that perhaps some Friend in the east may feel inclined to donate an auto to enable him to visit these points more frequently and in greater comfort. Surely no one could render better service to the Master than in just this way.

CHURCH AT WORK

Pasadena, California.—Pasadena Bible School observed rally day on October 8. There was a roll call of former superintendents and their assistants and twelve, including the present incumbents, answered to their names. They formed a line on the platform and each repeated a scripture text. One of the number was Robert W. Hiatt, the first superintendent of the School when it was organized in 1883. Other veteran workers were William H. Coffin, Aaron Roberts, Mary E. Reynolds and John Chawner. At the close of the meeting for worship which followed, the pastor, Charles S. White, on behalf of the Monthly Meeting welcomed into full membership a group of eleven associate members from twelve to sixteen years of age, who have been carefully prepared for the transfer to the active list. Two lads were also welcomed who requested membership. The ceremony was very impressive.

On October 13, Virginia Hole Blackburn, of the Friends Africa Industrial Mission, addressed an open meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Pasadena. She spoke very interestingly on the mission work in British East Africa. On October 17, George Taylor, of Whittier, gave an illustrated lecture on Friends foreign missions for the benefit of Pasadena Friends. The lecture has required much time and care in its preparation and is very instructive.

Knightstown, Ind.—A social reception was given by the Friends church here on October 13 for the new pastor, Zeno Doan, and his wife. The other churches of the community were invited to be present and a large number assembled to give them a cordial welcome. The friendly feeling which has always existed among the local churches was referred to by the other pastors and the hope was expressed that it might always continue. Mr. Doan and his family are rapidly gaining the confidence and esteem of the community.

Ludlow Falls, Ohio.—The Friends of Ludlow Falls meeting have commenced the new year's work with great enthusiasm. At the business meeting on October 6, each committee gave a report of the work of the previous year. The reports show that much work has been done. After the business had been transacted luncheon was served, consisting of sandwiches, coffee and pumpkin pie. A large number of the members were present. On Sabbath morning at the close of the Sabbath School the chairman of the business meeting conducted a short consecration service, at which time the finance committee consecrated themselves to the Master. On October 15, we had rally day or automobile day. One hundred and thirty persons were present at the Sunday School. Enos Pemberton preached a strong sermon. No one has done more for this community than he, who is now near eighty years of age. Up to the first of this year he has preached seventeen hundred funeral sermons and solemnized seven hundred marriages, and at some time has preached for every denomination both far and near. We can say with the prophet that at evening time it shall be light.

Traverse City, Michigan.—The following is taken from the Record-Eagle: "Alice Lawrence, the new pastor of the Friends church, was tendered a reception by the Christian Endeavor Society on the evening of October 10, to which all members and friends of the church were invited.

During the evening Miss Lawrence was made to feel how warm was the welcome of her new parishioners and how glad they were to have her with them. A reception committee consisting of Mr. and Mrs. John Heuss, Mr. and Mrs. E. Stanley, Miss Gladys Say and Ivan Chance met the company upon their arrival. A program was rendered in the church auditorium during the first part of the evening. Following a song by the congregation and prayer by T. P. Redding, an address of welcome was given by John Tremaine, in which he expressed in an admirable manner the sentiment of the Friends in regard to their new pastor. Miss Lawrence responded in an earnest and delightful way, showing her appreciation of the cordiality.

"A piano solo by Miss May Hanson, a reading by Miss Grace Gilbert and a vocal solo by Miss Gladys Riley with Miss Hanson as her accompanist, were all encored. Ivan Chance closed the program with a few fitting words. An adjournment was made to the church parlors, which were found to be prettily decorated with potted plants and autumn flowers. Fruit punch and cake were served with Mrs. H. A. Hanson presiding over the punch bowl, assisted by Miss Gladys Riley, Miss Alma Riley, Miss Gladys Say and Miss Gertrude Say. The committee on arrangements consisted of Miss Gertrude Say, Mrs. William DeKay, Mrs. J. E. Say and Mrs. John Tremaine."

New Bedford, Mass.—Sandwich Quarterly Meeting was held at New Bedford in October, owing to the few remaining Friends finding it impossible to hold it at Sandwich as usual. There was a good attendance and a very pleasant time was spent in prayer and fellowship. Tom A. Sykes, of East Lynn made an appeal for deeper consecration of time and talents.

NEWS NOTES

Oscar and Grace P. Thompson are now located as pastors of Calvary and Shannon meetings, Kansas.

Chester C. Haworth has entered upon his third year as principal of the high school at Wilson, N. C.

Albert Peele is serving the two meetings at Kernersville and Pilot Mountain, N. C., very acceptably as pastor.

Everett Davis is pastor of the meeting at Fairfield, Indiana, and superintendent of the Valley Mills High school.

Martin Taylor and wife and Mr. Morrison and wife, of Live Oak, California, visited Citrus Heights meeting recently.

Cyrus H. and Amy B. Hawkins are now located as pastors of South Fairview meeting, Kansas. Their address is R. F. D. 4, Glen Elder, Kansas.

John L. Kittrell began a meeting in the Friends church at Greensboro, N. C., on October 15, having just closed a very successful meeting at Pilot Mountain, N. C.

Some important needed improvements have been made on the Indian Mission home at Shawnee, Oklahoma, recently, and the chapel there has been treated to a new coat of paint.

Professor R. W. Kelsey of Haverford College represented Earlham College at the celebration of the 150th anniversary of the founding of Rutgers College, N. J., October 13 and 14.

Luke Woodard and wife, of Fountain City, Indiana, are spending some time with their daughter and family at Rochester, N. Y. They visited Cleveland Bible Institute on the way over.

On October 21 a preliminary meeting was held at Pasadena, California, to make arrangements for holding a Friends California Chautauqua in that city, probably toward the end of December.

Daisy Douglas Barr is conducting a great revival movement at Broad Ripple at the northern edge of Indianapolis. The Indianapolis Methodist devotes a whole column to this successful effort.

D. W. Whybrew is engaged in evangelistic work and is open to calls to the American Yearly Meetings. Last year he held meetings in four different Yearly Meetings. He can be addressed at Lupton, Michigan.

We have received the sad news that John Frederick Hanson, who has been in failing health much of the time since his return from Europe more than a year ago, is now in a critical condition at his home in Portland, Oregon.

Howard C. Champe, Carl Neal and Elgar J. Pennington, all of last year's senior class of Earlham College, are attending Hartford Theological Seminary this winter. Mr. Pennington is student pastor at Moses Brown School, Providence, R. I.

President Thomas Newlin, of Guilford College, N. C., gave an address before the Northwest District C. E. Convention at Winston-Salem, N. C., on the evening of October 14. He also preached at the Friends meeting in that city on the 15th.

We have received the third quarter's issue of "The Freedman's Friend," which is published by the Christiansburg Industrial Institute at Cambria, Va. It is a most readable number and contains much valuable information about this school for the colored people.

The statistical report of the Indian missions in Oklahoma for the month of September shows a total of forty-eight meetings held, with an average attendance of forty-eight. Three hundred and one families were visited. The average attendance at the Bible Schools is about forty-three.

The Quaker Round Table of the First Friends church at Indianapolis has issued a printed program of its meetings from October 6, 1916, to May 28, 1917. The members are to study the interests of the different Yearly Meetings of Friends during the year.

The meeting at Citrus Heights, California, is growing in interest. There is a splendid opportunity for some friend to get a home near the high school and board the high school teachers. There is also a splendid opening for Friends' teachers fitted for high school work to get a home in Friends' colony and teach in the high school.

The American Friend acknowledges with appreciation the receipt of a copy of the printed directory of Indianapolis Monthly Meeting, which bears the date of October 1. There are eight hundred and fifty-four members on the roll of the First church in Indianapolis, one hundred and twenty-one on the roll of Haughville meeting and twenty members of Bell's Chapel mission at Lawrence, Indiana.

The American Friend has received a letter from the Secretary of the Emergency Committee for the assistance of Germans, Austrians and Hungarians who are in distress in England, acknowledging receipt of money sent for this work through The American Friend and stating the present needs of that Committee in view of the prospect of the third winter which is now approaching. The letter expresses the hope that Friends in this country will continue their kind interest in this particular work. The American Friend will continue to receive contributions for this purpose as well as for other relief work in which English Friends are engaged and also for Armenian relief work.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

November 12.

"How to Be Strong." Heb. 11:32-40; 12:1-4.

Suggestions for short talks:

The strength of Abel lay in obedience.

Enoch's strength sprang from his faith.

Noah's strength lay in his "Godly fear."

Abraham was strong because of his foresight.

Isaac's strength was in his peaceableness and patience.

The strength of Jacob consisted in his yielding.

The strength of Joseph lay in his helpfulness.

Moses was strong in patriotism.

Gideon was strong in courage.

Sampson's strength lay in his temperance.

David was strong because he loved God and sought to do His will.

Samuel was strong in his integrity.

The central source of strength is Jesus Christ.

Subject—World Temperance Sunday.

Lesson—Romans 14:13—15:8.

Golden Text—It is not good to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth. Rom. 14:21.

Christians in addition to their obligations to God have felt that they had certain obligations to their fellow men. "Inasmuch as ye did it to the least of these my little ones ye did it unto me." In fact these two relations are too closely united to be separated without fatally injuring both.

Philadelphia

In his letter to the church at Rome Paul very emphatically expresses his ideas about the propriety of a Christian eating and drinking when that liberty caused another to stumble. So far as we are concerned the problem is not with eating, or not eating, meats offered to idols. We probably have questions which belong in principle to this class, but which were unknown in his day. Though we may be interested in those particular problems our main concern is with the fundamental principles which underlie them.

What is the relation of food to the religious life? On the foods in question the apostle affirms "that nothing is unclean of itself." Since that day we have been studying food values as they relate to the human anatomy and have found that some are of more value than others and that some are of doubtful worth, while others are probably always injurious. Among the latter we now include alcohol, in fact we now class it among the poisons. As we review Christian history we find that some of the most illustrious church men used certain materials for food which we are now condemning. Food stuffs then in themselves probably do not affect spiritual growth.

Paul, however, calls our attention to the probability that our thinking them detrimental (our knowing them to be so from scientific experiments) does affect our religious experience. How can a man who is positive that a certain food injures him continue to use it and be the man before God that he ought to be when that God asks him to be temperate in all things. John Woolman says that he observed that alcoholic beverages hindered his spiritual communions, and, that he might preserve his desired relation with God, he determined to leave them off. A man cannot do the thing which he is sure is wrong and preserve his dignity before God, or men, or self.

The next step in the argument discusses that old, old question of my rights versus those of another. Must I always give up doing a thing out of which I get real pleasure and profit just because another cannot safely or conscientiously do it? The principle as laid down by Paul is clear and is contained in those famous words—"If meat causeth my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh for evermore," and "It is not good to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth." He however, urges the easily offended to cease from judging him that eateth. Paul certainly is not considering the man who is a mere "crank," the issue was a genuine one and was considered from that standpoint. We must be careful, far more careful than we often are.

Be so rich in God that you can afford to do without everything else.—B. M. Adams.

Owing to the greatly increased cost in the price of paper, a situation is confronting The American Friend in common with all other newspapers and periodicals which is demanding serious consideration. There will be a discussion of this matter in The American Friend next week.

BENJAMIN F. TRUEBLOOD

The sad news has reached us that Benjamin F. Trueblood, well known to all Friends throughout the world, and to all peace advocates in all countries, died at his home near Boston, Massachusetts, on the evening of October 26. A great and good man has fallen. Funeral services were held at Wilmington, Ohio, October 30. A fuller report of his life and work will be given later.

EARLHAM NEWS NOTES.

Announcement has been made of the bequest of Dr. E. I. Kerlin, of Chicago, of his life insurance and real estate to Earlham College. Dr. Kerlin was a leading physician in Chicago, having practiced there for over thirty years. His boyhood home was near Richmond, Indiana, and his remains were taken to Goshen Cemetery, near Richmond, for interment. It was his intention to leave Earlham College property valued at $75,000.00 or $80,000.00. In view of the fact, however, that there may be some litigation in connection with the title to the real estate, the College authorities are not now announcing any sum as likely to be secured as a result of this bequest. The exact amount will be determined later.

A notable recognition of the academic standing of Earlham College has just been made public. The College has been elected to membership in the Association of Collegiate Alumnae. This association consists of a small group of the leading colleges of the country in which there are women students, the membership being composed largely of the great women's colleges. In order that the college be recommended for membership in this association, it must be listed with the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, and also recommended by the Association of American Universities to foreign universities.

Additional requirements are that there shall be a reasonable recognition of women in the faculty and student body and proper provision for the intellectual and social needs of women students. Much weight is given to the fact that women are on the Board of Trustees. The institution also must have a Dean of Women who is a regular member of the Faculty, and women on the faculty must receive the same salaries as men of the same rank. There must be special provision through halls of residence or other buildings for the social life of women students.

Five hundred ninety-four women have graduated from Earlham College, of which number thirty-six are not living. These women will all be eligible to membership in the association.

GO TO CALIFORNIA

Charles E. and Mrs. Tebbetts and their daughter, Edith, left Richmond, Indiana, last week for their future home at Whittier, California. Charles Tebbetts will retain his position as General Secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, but the details of the work will be wholly in the hands of Ross A. Hadley, the Assistant Secretary, who will continue his office in the Second National Bank Building at Richmond, Indiana. All personal mail should be sent henceforth to Charles Tebbetts at Whittier, California, but all correspondence relating wholly to Board matters should be addressed to the office at Richmond, Indiana.

Richmond Friends showed in many ways their appreciation of the residence of the Tebbetts family in Richmond for the past nine years and expressed genuine regret at their departure. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society gave them a farewell reception at South Eighth Street meeting house and on Wednesday night before their departure the West Richmond congregation gave an informal farewell reception to them at the home of A. M. Gardner, members of the Foreign Missionary Board of the Five Years Meeting being present.

On October 22 Charles Tebbetts preached his last sermon for the present at the West Richmond meeting and both in the services for worship and at the Bible School as well as at the Christian Endeavor meeting in the afternoon there were numerous references to the departure of the different members of the family.

DIED.

Melton—John Franklin Melton was born July 30, 1843, and died after an illness of several weeks at his home in Amboy, Indiana, September 25, 1916. He was converted in early manhood and throughout the years has been a faithful, consistent Christian, always working for the higher uplift of the community. He was one of the strong early advocates in the temperance movement. He and his wife joined Friends in 1879 and ever since he has been a firm believer in the convictions and doctrines of the church. He leaves two sons and two daughters.

Naylor—Elizabeth M. Naylor, daughter of Thomas P. and Dosha Moorman, was born near Jamestown, Ohio, and died at Berkeley, California, July 20, 1916, in her 90th year. She first moved to Oskaloosa, Iowa, and later married Abram H. Naylor. They lived for a time in Des Moines and again in Oskaloosa, later going to Berkeley, where, since the death of her husband, eight years ago, she has made her home with her son, A. W. Naylor. She was a birthright Friend and was converted early in life. Hers has been a faithful example of a Christian life and her cheerfulness made her great. Funeral services were held by the pastor, Abijah Weaver, and also at Whittier, by Absalom Rosenberger, assisted by Emma Coffin and Nannie W. Arnold. Interment at Whittier.

White—On October 19, 1916, at Baltimore, Maryland, Jane E. White, widow of the late Francis White, daughter of Richard M. and Sarah Hopkins Janney, aged 86 years. A life-long member of Baltimore Monthly Meeting, in which she took deep and active interest. For many years she held the office of elder.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

AN IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

We trust that not a single one of our subscribers will fail to read the editorial announcement on the following page, giving the reasons for the increased cost in the price of The American Friend on and after January first.

It may be added here that The American Friend has been thus far the cheapest priced Friends' paper published in this country. The Friend, published in Philadelphia, with twelve pages weekly, costs $2.00 per year. The Friends Intelligencer (Hick-site), with sixteen pages weekly, costs $2.00 per year. The Pacific Friend, with sixteen pages monthly, twelve issues per year, costs $1.00, while The Friends Messenger, with sixteen pages and only twelve issues per year as against fifty-two issues of The American Friend, costs fifty cents, if we remember correctly.

It should not be considered a burden by anyone therefore, when, because of the great increase in the price of paper stock, the price of The American Friend, with twenty pages weekly, is raised to $2.00. It means a total of 1040 pages of reading matter within a year. It is a case of necessity, and there appears to be no other choice. We trust that all our readers will peruse the editorial announcement with sympathetic minds.

THE QUAKERS AND THE NEW NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

(From the address of Congressman George Huddleston of Alabama, House of Representatives, Tuesday, Sept. 5th.)

"The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Hay) made the point the other day that this bill exempts Quakers and others whose religious beliefs are opposed to war. But he did not call the attention of the House to the significant and essentially militarist change in the status of Quakers under this bill. Section 59, after reciting the usual exemptions from militia duty, such as the Vice-President of the United States, naval and military officers, and so forth, adds:

"And all persons who because of religious belief shall claim exemption from military service, if the conscientious holding of such belief by such person shall be established under such regulations as the President shall prescribe, shall be exempted from militia service in a combatant capacity; but no person so exempted shall be exempt from militia service in any capacity that the President shall declare to be non-combatant."

"This is something new, gentlemen. You do not find it in American legislation on the subject of militia and militia exemptions. It was borrowed from Europe, a product of the great war, invented—not by the civil authorities, but by the military authorities—to get a hold upon those elements in the community which object to war. Under that clause the military authorities can seize a Quaker and put him at whatever line of work an epauleted military chief has deemed 'non-combatant.' They do not consult his conscience in the matter. They consult only their own wills. So they take him and put him to carrying shells, entrenching, or at ambulance work, thus releasing other able-bodied men for service in the trenches, or they put him at mine sweeping and send him to jail, if—as I am told has happened—he insists as a conscientious Quaker, upon sweeping up the deadly mines of his own country as well as those of the enemy country. In short, from the standpoint of the Quaker, this bill withdraws the main protection which he has earned by his hundred or so years of war against war. It abolishes his right of private conscience and it drives him, by the power of the state, to contribute indirectly—if not directly—to the murder of other men.

"You cannot read this bill to a Quaker and fool serious inroads upon this freedom, a serious invasion of that sacred right."

CHILDREN'S SAYINGS

Little Sydney had reached the mature age of three, and was about to discard petticoats for the more manly raiment of knickerbockers. The mother had determined to make the occasion a memorable one. The breakfast table was laden with good things, and the newly-breeched infant was led into the room.

"Ah!" exclaimed the proud mother, "now you are a little man."

Sydney was in ecstasies. Displaying his garments to their full advantage, he edged close to his mother, and whispered: "Can I call Pa Bill now?"

A man's place in society is somewhat like a river; for as the stream determines the course of the branches so an individual may shape the destinies of those who follow him, and just as the branches deepen and fix the direction of the river so likewise will a person's followers strengthen him in the course which he pursues.—Charles H. Klippel.

A Problem of the American Friend

The prime question in the case of The American Friend is a question of service and not of profits. Our claims for patronage rest wholly upon this contention. On account of services being rendered the Society of Friends we have a right to ask that all members of the denomination shall be upon its list of supporters. Nor is the situation changed in any respect at a time when The American Friend's management is confronted with a most serious situation, except that in the ratio of its difficulties is the obligation of patronage intensified.

It is common knowledge that for several months past practically all newspapers in America have had to face a market of constantly rising prices in the cost of paper. Many a publication has been forced to curtail its output, and many are reducing the lists of exchanges to a cold minimum. Many others have endeavored to solve the problem by increasing the subscription price of their publications, while not a few have abandoned the field altogether.

The American Friend has been fortunate up to this time in that it has had a contract based upon the normal price of paper, and which has extended over the new and radically changed conditions. With the near approach of the time when a new contract must be made, and with no visible tendency toward a reduction in the price of paper stock, the management is confronted with an assured increase in the deficit of many hundreds of dollars. The problem is one that is not easy of solution, for the cost of paper now is approximately two and one-half times what it was when our present contract was made nearly two years ago. What would our subscribers do under similar circumstances, with the responsibility upon them of producing a denominational organ?

It is unthinkable that The American Friend should be abandoned, merely because of the greatly increased cost of production. The American Friend is the biggest asset of the Five Years Meeting, and this is said without any discredit to any other department. In its very nature, because of the permanency of its weekly visitations, its potentiality as a denomination builder is unsurpassed. Having the hold that it now has upon the church, non-readers increasingly are going to find themselves losing step with the church and out of touch with its progressive spirit. The American Friend needs patronage and must have it in increasing volume, but much more does the church and every family within the circle of its communion need The American Friend. This periodical has not appealed to the dollar side, except as a matter of necessity to insure the continuance of its publication. Its appeal has been persistently directed to the exemplification and practice of the best Christian ideals and to a larger denominational life, and there will the emphasis continue to be laid.

It has been suggested that we reduce the number of pages, but the demands for space multiply to a degree that renders this proposition impractical. It would help some, although not much, to use a cheaper quality of paper, but from a business standpoint this suggestion has been rejected. Quality and attractiveness are worth while assets of any publication. It seems improbable that the list of guarantors could be enlarged, and there appears to be no valid reason why a few persons should carry the burden of the increased cost of production. Finally, it does not seem to be the part of wisdom to ask the Yearly Meetings for an increase in appropriations.

In such a dilemma, what is the management to do? What else can it do, except to do what the managing boards of so many other periodicals are doing, and that is to ask ALL our subscribers to share the burden alike? Is there even one of our patrons who can suggest any other remedy?

In face of this situation, and after the most painstaking consideration, the Board of Publication at its session on October 18 voted unanimously to add fifty cents to each subscription on and after the first of January, 1917. From that date the regular subscription price will be $2.00; to ministers the price will be $1.50, and to our foreign subscribers, where increased postage must be paid, the price will be $2.50. When subscriptions are paid for in bulk from various funds, the cost will be proportionately increased. Subscriptions which are given before January first upon expirations before that time will be received at the old price.

We earnestly ask that all our subscribers view this conclusion as inevitable, and that they rise to the occasion by continuing their patronage, for the sake of the continued service which The American

Friend will be able to render the church and the cause of a better humanity.

A Friends' Camp at Northfield---Ready-Made Leaders for New England

By ELEANOR GIFFORD

At such a time as this, when every phase of Christianity is being weighed in the balances, when all our Christian civilization is said to have failed, it behooves us to scrutinize the condition of our New England Society of Friends. A few hundred miles to the north, hundreds of thousands of men with supreme devotion have marched away to die for an unseen king and for an empire founded on the hearts and affections of men. Have we, as a Society, a degree of efficiency that will give us a corresponding state of spiritual preparedness? Does our church so mould us that we are equal to our situation?

To determine the condition of our Society, let us consult the various reports that are given in the minutes of New England Yearly Meeting of 1916.

According to the report entitled "Summary of Reports of the Spiritual Condition of the Membership," out of a resident membership of about 2950, about 1617 members, or 55 per cent, attend the meetings, while about 1170 Friends, or about 40 per cent, at least occasionally give vocal expression to the religious life in our meetings. Judging from the list of names and addresses of ministers given at the end of the minutes for 1916, twenty-two out of our sixty meetings have no minister. In the remaining thirty-eight meetings listed as having pastors, several of the ministers are non-residents. Indeed, according to the reports of the Efficiency Committee, four out of our nine Quarterly Meetings have no Friend giving the whole of his time to church work; and in the same report it is stated that in most sections of the other five Quarterly Meetings the same conditions prevail.

It is safe to conclude, then, that only about 44.4 per cent of our meetings have regular pastors. In the report of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee, it appears that thirty of our sixty meetings have either received outside help during the last year, or now are in need of aid. Only two of these needy churches may be said to be in city limits. Finally, as recorded in the report of the Board of Young Friends Activities, about twenty-five of our meetings, nearly one-half, have no form of young people's work. Only half of our members, then, attend our meetings; only about 44.4 per cent have regular pastors; over one-half of our churches have received external help; in nearly one-half of our meetings there is no young people's work.

From these startling facts it is clear that we, as a Society, are not efficient, and that we should find some remedy. Fortunately, in the report of the Efficiency Committee we have suggested the way in which our meetings may gain new power. The slogan of this committee is one which should be written on the walls of every meeting house in New England. Their aim is given as follows: "To get the whole meeting in each locality at work for the whole community, and to secure a vital and practical radiating religion at the center of each church group." The entire necessary program is here given in a masterly way.

The second remedy found in this report reads as follows: "Everywhere the crying need is for efficient workers. The country meetings in many communities minister to a large territory and are in many cases in the midst of unchurched people. The gifted young Friends among us must be searched out, and must be kindled and prepared for this immensely important work. They must be given a vision and be helped to see that here in these quiet localities is one of the most urgent and one of the most strategic fields of practical service in the world, and they must be called with an irresistible appeal to consecrate themselves, out of loyalty to Christ and to the church to do this missionary work"

And a third solution is offered in these words: "Where a full-time worker seems at present impossible, we should endeavor to discover and to mobilize as many qualified persons as possible who can work part of the time in the service of their meetings while they are carrying on their chosen vocations. As far as may be, these available workers in our own groups should be sought out, liberated, equipped and set to work for the expansion of the power of the meeting and for the extension of the kingdom."

Thus we see that our ill-attended meetings, largely depending on outside help because of no regular worker, and in many cases giving no special attention to the peculiar needs of our young people, must be in some way filled with an aim so wide, so practical, and so vital that our young Friends will catch a vision and will consecrate themselves to the bringing in of God's Kingdom in every part of New England. The question remains, How is this to be done?

Conference at Northfield

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of our Yearly Meeting has an answer to our problem. A brief review of the success of the last conference at Northfield will make very clear just why a Friends' Camp there will solve the difficulties of our Society. Last July, in a conference composed of about sixteen hundred persons, four hundred or more young women were filled with a realization of what part they might play in the bringing in of God's Kingdom, and these four hundred girls returned to the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other churches, determined to realize that vision. Two young Friends there at the time were indeed somewhat lost. The reasons why these young people felt that they were indeed on a Mount of Transfiguration are easy to enumerate. The beauty of the country itself cannot but fill one with the beauty of God's peace. The camp conclave in the early morning, the Bible classes, the mission classes, the consecutive addresses late in the morning, give a wonderful forenoon. The tennis matches, the walks or drives, the denominational rallies and the quiet hour, bind congenial acquaintances into enduring and helpful friendship. The quiet, personal, devotional service at sunset makes practical all the new glimpses of truth received during the day, while the missionary addresses of the evening give a vision of what service in God's world can mean.

Our readers may admit that our meetings need to secure our gifted young Friends as leaders, and may know that the Northfield influence has transformed many lives and has originated many uplifting movements. But just how will a Friends' Camp help our meetings from Maine to Rhode Island? To answer this query is not difficult. Let us again notice the aim of our Efficiency Committee which states that the aim of our meetings shall be to serve the entire community with the meeting as a radiating force of men and women in whom the life of Christ is reincarnated. The denominational rallies at Northfield will all be centered about this great aim. If possible, some competitive enterprise between the various meetings may be inaugurated in order to bring this purpose before the minds of our young Friends. Such an appeal, urging self-cultivation for the sake of serving the community cannot but find an answering chord in the hearts of our youthful church members. Thus we see that a Friends' Camp at Northfield will indeed aid us in realizing the motto of our Efficiency Committee. It will also help realize the second point made in this same summary. We have noted that our gifted young leaders must be searched out, and be inspired to work in our weaker meetings. Selecting delegates for our camp ought to do just this. From now until July, every meeting in New England should be scrutinizing its members, endeavoring to discover potential leaders. And these leaders need not necessarily be church members at present. The girl possessing executive ability, tact, and a keen mentality is the candidate who will be inspired at Northfield to work for our meeting.

Again, our Efficiency Committee states that these young leaders "must be given vision." They must be helped to see that an important work in the country awaits consecrated Friends. They must be called with an irresistible appeal to dedicate themselves and do this work. Northfield can do this with perfect ease. Character is contagious. Simply place these alert Friends for a week in the society of the leaders of the conference, strong, splendid men and women standing for the biggest things in life, and the matter of our delegates catching a vision will be assured. Beside the numerous missionaries of the denominations we will probably have some of our own missionaries in our own camp. Its success is thus assured.

So we see that our meetings can gain vigor by having our potential leaders receive a vision of what service for God can mean. And in those devotional meetings at sundown the conference leaders take care that the delegates hear that "obedience to the vision" is more important than receiving the vision. The conference turns out no impractical visionary.

At this point it may be well to give a few mechanical details. The camp will be held under the auspices of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, which has appointed Eleanor Gifford as camp leader. Several young married women will serve as chaperons, while the counsellors will be carefully selected college girls. The expenses of each delegate will be $16.00.

Our situation as a church makes it imperative that some new method be adopted. The old methods have not been conspicuously successful. Last year the Congregational and Methodist churches succeeded in having about a hundred and twenty girls in their camps. Why should not Quakers try the "conference method?" Let every missionary society, every Christian Endeavor Society, every Sunday School and every Young People's Society in every meeting send its delegates. Especially the closed meetings should do the same. Is there any society so lacking in ingenuity that it cannot raise $16.00 within eight months? In most cases young Friends cannot afford to attend Yearly Meeting, and also attend Northfield. The sending of delegates solves that phase of the question, and will not cause a diminished attendance at the larger church gathering. So with at least two delegates from every meeting, our New England Society will receive through a Friends' Camp at Northfield a company of inspired young leaders who will bring new power to the home meeting. Is it worth trying in your society?

Revising The Church Boards

Many Friends will remember that a concern for a more efficient organism in the work of the Five Years Meeting arose at the Men's Conference which was held at Richmond, Indiana, in October of last year. This concern was directed particularly towards the work of Church extension, but was finally made inclusive of all the work of the church. The entire subject, together with the need of a more adequate financial equipment for the Boards, was referred to a committee composed of S. E. Nicholson, Miles White, Jr., L. Hollingsworth Wood, John H. Johnson, D. W. Edwards, Wallace Kemp and Addison H. Naylor, which has come to be known as the Committee of Seven.

This committee was directed to give attention to the question and to report its conclusions to the next Five Years Meeting, which is to meet in Richmond, Indiana, in October of 1917. As the Men's Conference was the creature of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, the Committee of Seven, upon request, made a report of its conclusions to date to the Executive Committee at its recent session. This report is appended below. The Executive Committee encouraged the Committee of Seven to give further attention to the subject matter involved, and to have the report published, in order that the entire membership may have ample opportunity to consider the same before it is finally brought before the Five Years Meeting.

It is hoped that interested Friends will seriously consider this matter and pass on to the Committee of Seven any further suggestions or criticisms. It is realized that inevitably there will be differing opinions as to the wisdom of the combinations suggested, as well as of the financial plans. The Committee believes that the wisdom of its report can be successfully defended, but the whole question is left open for further consideration and adjustment.

The report is as follows:

Report of the Committee

To the Executive Committee:

The Committee of Seven, appointed by the International Conference of Men Friends, which met in Richmond, Indiana, in October of 1915, having been requested by the Central Committee to present to this body a report of progress, we take pleasure in submitting the following:

The minute of our appointment is found on page seven of the printed proceedings of the conference and is as follows:

"We have had our attention forcibly called to the openings for church extension in the newer settlements of our country as well as in our large cities. That this work, as well as that of other important departments, may be advanced, we have appointed a committee to confer with the Boards of the Five Years Meeting and to report to its next session, in 1917, a plan for the revision of the work of these Boards, if any revision seems to them best, and a plan for suitably financing their needs."

The committee has conducted a somewhat extensive correspondence upon this question in an effort to see how nearly the members were agreed upon the different matters involved. In addition, communications were sent to each of the Boards and Committees of the Five Years Meeting, inviting their attention to certain tentative suggestions that were being considered by the committee. Copies of these suggestions were also sent to a number of interested Friends throughout the country and a statement of their views, together with the views of the Boards, was solicited. Finally the chairman, some months ago, held several conferences with interested Friends in various Yearly Meetings, both in groups and singly, seeking to get the whole question involved before Friends generally throughout the country.

It has seemed to the committee from the beginning that there are more Boards and Committees of the Five Years Meeting than the size of our denomination would warrant, and that such Boards and Committees as we do have are not sufficiently co-ordinated with the working machinery of the different Yearly Meetings, nor are they related to each other in a way that will guarantee the best exhibition of that sympathetic team work which is so essential in a working organization.

The committee has given consideration to the object of its appointment under three general heads; (1) A reduction of the number of Boards and their relation to each other; (2) The co-ordination of the Boards with the corresponding machinery of the Yearly Meeting and (3) the proper financing of the boards for efficient service.

(1) It has seemed to the committee that there can be an adjustment and a combination of the Boards of the Five Years Meeting that will add to the efficiency of the work and probably save something worth while in the way of administration expenses. There are many reasons why Friends should have a home mission department that will combine all the home mission activities of the church and thus avoid on the one hand duplication of effort and on the other hand avoid the dilemma of one Board relying upon another to accomplish results. We, therefore, are united in asking the next Five Years Meeting to consider the following suggested arrangement for our boards and committees:

(a) A Foreign Mission Board as constituted at present;

(b) A Home Mission and Social Service Board, combining the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board, the Social Service Board, the Peace Association of Friends in America, the Board on Legislation and Temperance and the Board on the Welfare and Condition of the Negro;

(c) A Board under a suitable name combining the Publication Board, the Bible School Board, the Educational Board and the Board on Young Friends' Activities, with two departments, one on publication interests and the other on publicity or propaganda;

(d) Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs;

(e) Board of Trustees, which shall be the financial board of the Five Years Meeting.

Some conferences have been held with Philadelphia members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, looking to a possible incorporation of this work with the proposed Home Mission Board, but this question will have further consideration by the committee.

If the present tendency toward secretarial work shall continue it seems all the more important that as many boards as possible shall be put under one heading in order to limit properly the number of secretaries. The committee will also recommend that in the interests of economy in administration expenses, as well as greater efficiency in service, the boards shall be made up of a fewer number of persons, and that they be not confined to their own membership in appointing subcommittees for special departments.

2. In order that the work of the Yearly Meetings may be properly co-ordinated with the work of the Five Years Meeting, it should be understood that each Five Years Meeting Board has general oversight over the work in its department in all the Yearly Meetings, keeping in mind the welfare and progress of the entire church, authorized to make surveys of the entire field or any portion of it when occasion seems to require, with the understanding that the corresponding Yearly Meeting Board shall be the working agency to carry the plans into effect in so far as they concern a particular Yearly Meeting. When plans are agreed upon that do not concern a particular Yearly Meeting territory, the general Board should have direct supervision until such time as some Yearly Meeting can take over the work.

3. It will be readily seen that the success of the work of the Boards will depend primarily upon adequate financial support. Undoubtedly there are many resources in the church or closely connected with it that have never been touched in any practical way. In the light of the better organization herein contemplated and with the understanding that the entire church is to get under the burden, we suggest that the next Five Years Meeting direct the raising of at least $1,500,000 during the succeeding five years, this amount to be invested in some equitable way for the benefit of various departments of the church.

There are certain men and women possessed of abundant means, somewhat closely connected with Friends who as yet have never done anything worth while for the church; these in addition to our own active members who have means. There are many farmers among Friends who are well to do, but who have never been appealed to in any large way. Probably there is a large number of our members, who, in lieu of paying a definite amount to this fund at the present time, would be willing to enter into an agreement to pay the interest on sums in varying amounts during their life time, with the understanding that the principal would come out of their estate, the interest to be used each year by the various boards according to the plan of agreement.

It is also suggested that cash or securities could be given in trust to the trustees, who would enter into an agreement to pay to the donor, or someone designated by the donor, during his life the interest received from the funds or securities deposited and who upon the death of said person will hold the cash or securities for the Five Years Meeting, the income to be applied to such work of the Boards as the donor may direct.

The above will indicate the matters which have been before the committee as well as the conclusions which have been reached thus far. The committee invites the fullest consideration of the questions herein involved by all interested Friends and will be glad to avail itself of suggestions from any and every quarter, although realizing how impossible it will be to satisfy the views of all upon such important matters.

On behalf of the Committee,
S. E. NICHOLSON,
Chairman.

BETTER PREPARATION FOR THE MINISTRY.

Editorial reference was made last week to the subject of the better training, preparation and equipment of our ministry. The following report was presented to the Executive Committee from a joint meeting of the Evangelistic and Church Extension and the Educational Boards of the Five Years Meeting, this subject having been referred to their joint consideration by the last Five Years Meeting. The report should have the prayerful and careful consideration of the entire church membership and especially of our ministers, whom the suggestions contained in the report are designed to help. The following is the

Report

"At a joint meeting of members of the Executive Committees of the Evangelistic and Church Extension and Educational Boards, the problem of the better educational training of ministers and those called to the ministry received careful and prolonged attention. The joint committee was united in recommending to the Executive Committee that the Five Years Meeting be requested to set certain definite educational standards as highly desirable for our ministers.

"Quarterly Meetings should encourage young people who feel called to the ministry to secure a college education in some one of our own colleges, and also should hold up a course in one of the best theological seminaries, as furthering still more their capacity for leadership. Our young people should have the benefit of the same kind of advice as that given to Timothy, to study to show themselves approved, and it is very unjust to our youth to acknowledge their gift in an official way before they have secured the elementary education offered by a standard American High School.

"Provision should be made by the Quarterly Meeting, when needful, to render to such young people financial as well as moral support as they go forward in their work of preparation.

"The committee also recommends that our colleges, in conjunction with appropriate Boards of the Yearly Meetings, take on such phases of extension work as will be best suited to the needs of ministers, present and prospective, who may not be able to enroll in the regular academic work, to the end that the needs of all may be appropriately met and the general level of the educational qualification raised, and suggests that if this be approved by the Executive Committees, its chairman be authorized to communicate with the college thus concerned."

The Executive Committee designated the following institutions, which are listed alphabetically:

Earlham, Friends University, Guilford, Haverford, Nebraska Central College, Pacific, Penn, Pickering, Whittier, Wilmington.

A committee, composed of Robert L. Kelly, Ellison R. Purdy, and Walter C. Woodward was appointed to consider the immediate application of the last paragraph of the report to our ministerial needs, and to endeavor to secure the establishment of extension courses as soon as practicable and wherever possible, as a means of affording help to those who are now ministers, wherever the need of help is manifest.

EVANGELISM AND CHURCH EXTENSION

Believing that the work of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Boards is vital to the life and perpetuity of the Society of Friends in America, The American Friend has asked each Board in the Yearly Meetings composing the Five Years Meeting to send for publication a statement of the plans and work of the Board for the coming year. These will be published from time to time as rapidly as they are received.

Western Yearly Meeting, Enos Harvey, Superintendent, is the first one to respond, and its report is found below. The Superintendent desires the publication of a report of plans made to the Yearly Meeting in 1910, as embodying a system which the Committee is trying to establish. The report is as follows:

Western Yearly Meeting

Minute of Yearly Meeting:

57. The following from the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight has been read, considered and adopted. Subordinate Meetings and pastors are desired to make every reasonable effort to carry out the plan.

Power is given to the Nominating Committee on Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Work to reorganize the Committee in accordance with the plan.

Report

To Western Yearly Meeting:

The following proposition was introduced to this meeting, which was unanimously endorsed and directed to be forwarded to the Yearly Meeting for its consideration.

Believing that our present plan for supplying the pastoral needs of the church is inadequate, we submit the following supplement and ask its prayerful consideration:

1. That this department of church work be placed, as now, in the care of the Executive Board known as the Evangelistic, Pastoral, Home Mission and Church Extension Board of Western Yearly Meeting.

2. The General Superintendent and five persons appointed by the Yearly Meeting shall constitute this Board. The chairmen of the Boards of the respective Quarterly Meetings shall be advisory members with the privilege of meeting with the Executive Board at its call, taking part in its proceedings.

3. The Board shall meet on the First Third-day of the Tenth Month and the Second Third-day of the Eighth Month each year for the transaction of business. During the interim it may meet on the call of the General Superintendent.

4. In the appointment of this Board one member shall be chosen to serve for one year, two members for two years, and two members for three years. After the first organization members shall be appointed to serve three years.

5. At its regular meeting in the Tenth month the Board shall organize by electing a chairman, a Secretary and a Treasurer. It shall keep a full and correct record of the proceedings and shall render a full report of its work to the Yearly Meeting.

6. The Board, in connection with the Chairman of the Evangelistic Boards of the Quarterly Meetings, is empowered to group the congregations in the limits of the Yearly Meeting into regular pastoral charges subject to the following suggestions: When practical each congregation shall constitute a pastoral charge. Other congregations shall be grouped into pastorates as their interests may demand, care being taken not to associate in such pastorates parts of two Quarterly Meetings, unless necessity demands it.

7. The Board is empowered to look after the financial interests of each pastorate, arrange for the support and state definitely the minimum amount each will pay.

8. When the congregations in the limits of the respective Quarterly Meetings are thus grouped, the action shall be binding on the Meetings affected and the Secretary of the Executive Board shall furnish the Clerk of each Quarterly Meeting an extract of the grouping of congregations as made and the support of each pastorate which, when approved by the Quarterly Meeting, shall be entered on its minutes.

9. The Secretary of the Board shall procure a map, locating all the congregations and pastorates in the limits of the Yearly Meeting, make and keep a record of the same as grouped and the support each pastorate pays.

10. If dissatisfaction should arise in the grouping, or the interest of the work should demand a change, the Chairman of the Board of the Quarterly Meeting shall notify the Secretary of the Executive Board of such conditions. When officially notified the Board shall take the matter in charge, make the necessary investigation and make such changes as in its judgment the interest of the work demands, observing suggestions as in the original grouping.

11. It shall be the duty of the Executive Board to see that all pastorates are supplied with pastors and to consider petitions from pastoral committees or others interested, and to grant such petitions so far as the general welfare of the church will permit.

12. When an agreement is entered into between a pastor and a Meeting such agreement shall hold until either the pastor or the pastorate deem it wise to change. Under such conditions the party desiring a change shall give the other party three months notice prior to the following Yearly Meeting of his or their decision. In the calling of pastors, committees and Meetings are advised not to allow personal likes and dislikes to control their selection and guide them in these important matters, but to prayerfully consult the mind of the Lord and move only when it seems clear that the selection is according to His will. It shall be the duty of the pastorate, through its committee to file with the Secretary of the Board, on or before the Third day of the Eighth Month, their choice of pastor or pastorate as they may feel drawn by the Holy Spirit.

At its regular meeting in the Eighth Month the Board, in connection with the Superintendents of the Quarterly Meetings affected shall consider all petitions and requests for pastors, thus filed. After prayerful consideration they shall make such assignment of pastors as in their judgment the Holy Spirit may direct.

Should the Committee thus convened from any cause fail to make assignments, the Executive Board of the Yearly Meeting may make assignments, it being so authorized and empowered by this Act.

13. The Secretary of the Board shall notify the pastors and pastorates of their assignment immediately following the meeting of the Board and file a list with the Clerk of the Yearly Meeting for publication, also furnish the Clerk of the Monthly Meeting of which the pastorates are a part, an extract of the assignment of pastors within its limits, which shall be entered upon the minutes of the Monthly Meeting.

14. It shall be the duty of the Executive Committee to render financial aid to the weaker pastorates to the extent of means at its command, using care and discretion in such aid.

15. Quarterly Meetings are requested to extend care in the selection of their Chairman, see that persons are chosen who are adapted to the work, qualified for the position, in full sympathy with the workings of the church and sound in the doctrines of Christ as held by the Friends Church.

16. Pastors and pastorates in calling evangelists shall keep in close touch with the Executive Board, through the Quarterly Meeting Chairman. They are advised not to open their meeting houses or lend their influence to evangelists who are without proper credentials from some evangelical church. No evangelist shall be employed who has not been endorsed by the Executive Committee.

17. The General Superintendent, with the cooperation of the Quarterly Meeting's Superintendent by correspondence or personal visits, shall have general oversight of this department of the church work. The General Superintendent shall be empowered by the Yearly Meeting to make any temporary changes in the pastoral necessities of the Meetings, and when from unforeseen conditions, any pastorate shall be without a suitable pastor, he may make such arrangements as may seem to meet the emergency, reporting the same to the Executive Committee.

18. Funds for the support of this department of church work may be raised by appropriations of the Yearly Meeting, and voluntary contributions.

19. The pastoral year shall begin with the First Sabbath following the Western Yearly Meeting.

20. Believing that the time demands of our church better statistics clearly setting forth the work of each local Meeting, the Executive Board shall prepare suitable blanks for such purpose, and that a complete list from all our local Meetings be gathered at our next Yearly Meeting and thereafter, and that this list be published in full in the Minutes.

21. The Executive Committee is empowered by the Yearly Meeting with authority to carry out this plan.

Taken from the Minutes of the meeting on Ministry and Oversight, held Ninth Month, 15, 1910.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

ANNOUNCEMENT

Our annual meeting occurred on the 17th and 18th of last month.

The most important matters claiming our attention were plans for the work on the mission field during the coming year and the vital question of securing financial support for the work.

When the reports from each field had been presented, we faced the necessity either of increasing our foreign missionary expenditures this year by nearly 50 per cent or of taking a backward step—requesting the missionaries to diminish the work already attempted and declining to send out any new workers or to permit those now on furlough to return to their fields.

In deciding what action we should take, we first studied with the greatest care conditions on each field and plans which had been proposed for next year's work.

Item by item we reviewed the estimates of funds needed for the work and, finding that they could not safely be reduced at any point, we felt that we would not be true to the trust committed to us unless we approved the additional expenditure and called upon Friends in the particular meetings of each Yearly Meeting to contribute their share of the full amount required.

For the current expenses of our foreign work this year $60,641.44 is needed.

For buildings and equipment there should be raised in addition at least $12,000, and if possible $18,000.

Responsible for the administration of your foreign mission work, we give you the facts which we have had to face and take this opportunity of announcing our decision as to what should be done this year. We are confident that you will approve the decision and now call upon Friends everywhere to work and pray and give to the end that these needs may be fully met.

American Friend's Board of Foreign Missions

THIS "OPEN LETTER TO KANSAS" WHICH APPEARED IN THE AMERICAN FRIEND TWO WEEKS AGO DESERVES TO BE READ BY FRIENDS EVERYWHERE. WE REPRODUCE IT HERE IN CONNECTION WITH THE "ANNOUNCEMENT" ON THIS PAGE.

Richmond, Indiana,
October 19, 1916.

To the Members of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

Dear Friends: We, your representatives, who have just attended the meeting of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, feel impressed to write you this letter, giving our impressions of the meeting.

Many important matters were acted upon in a spirit of great love, harmony, and mutual condescension, and as we cannot doubt under the immediate guidance of our Master, Jesus Christ.

We wish to call your attention to one of these which is of immediate, practical importance, that is, the call for funds. As the estimates from the various fields were read one after the other, they all called for a very much larger amount than last year, yet we could not find anything in the items that seemed unreasonable or unnecessary.

The Board decided that this was a call to us and the church to step forward in faith, that if our Lord called for these expenditures He would furnish the means to meet them, so we granted appropriations for the work next year of $60,641.44, although the receipts last year were only $42,950.40. We know not where the increased funds are to come from, but we believe this is a challenge to the church, and we trust that the friends of Kansas Yearly Meeting will respond to the Lord's call.

"The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth laborers into His harvest." We cannot all go, but we may all have a part in the work by providing the means for others to go. May we one and all pray, work and give as the Lord may direct.

$60,000 FOR MISSIONS

WHAT IT WILL MEAN

To raise the amount called for this year by the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions.

To Quakerism in America

To raise this sum for the current expenses of our missionary work this year will mark a new epoch in the history of American Quakerism. It will give Friends a sense of power and the consciousness that we are as a people taking a worthy share in the task of carrying the Gospel to the whole world. If we can make the increase which is called for this year, we will probably not do less in any year in the future and the church will go on from strength to strength.

To the Particular Meeting.

Every local meeting which raises its share of the $60,000 fund—and no meeting ought to contribute less than an average of $1.00 per member (many will give more)—will find its vision enlarged, its ability for useful accomplishment increased. All will discover, what many meetings have already found out, that an increase in gifts to foreign missions, instead of diminishing the church's ability for work at home, actually increases its ability. Funds will be more readily raised for all worthy objects within the church and outside.

To Missionary Volunteers

Those of our young people who are hearing the call to service on the mission field will watch with deep concern the events of this coming year within the Society of Friends. Success in this year's undertaking will be equivalent to saying to these young Friends, "The church will stand behind you with her gifts and with her prayers and make it possible for you to take up the work to which you are called." Failure to provide the funds needed would be equivalent to saying to these prospective missionaries, "The funds are not available; the Society of Friends can not use you on the foreign field; you will have either to stay at home or take up service under some other organization."

To the Missionaries Now On the Field.

It will give them the most convincing proof that Friends at home are heartily supporting them in their difficult work. It will mean that they will not be asked to "make bricks without straw" and that they will be provided with the funds and equipment necessary for accomplishing what the church expects of them. It will further give them assurance that the work will not be allowed to stop when their connection with it ceases.

For Africa

It will mean that two missionary families can be sent to the field and that two families who have been on the field for five years can return to their homes for much-needed rest. It will mean better facilities for medical work and industrial work.

The Gospel will come to thousands who have never heard it before.

For Cuba

It will mean additional native workers trained for the ministry and other forms of Christian service, that the teachers in the schools will have more time for personal work with their pupils, and that the evangelistic work of the mission may go forward unhindered.

For Jamaica

Our raising $60,000 will mean that the work for East Indians, the only work of its kind in the island, will not have to be cut down, that our splendid boarding schools at Happy Grove, where young men and woman each year are making decisions for the Christian life and being trained for citizenship and service in the church may have enough teachers and sufficient school equipment to do the work of which they are capable.

For Mexico

It will mean that the work which we are now doing in Mexico in spite of the revolution may be carried on unhindered. Further, it will mean that our workers shall be ready to go in the moment peace is restored, or even earlier, to reorganize the scattered churches and to establish the day schools and boarding schools which are the hope of the future, and to carry the message of the full Gospel of Christ into the towns and villages of our Mexican field which have long been sorely neglected. As Friends, we can not neglect our opportunity in Mexico and be true to our Lord, who has called us into that work and is opening the way for us to render a great service to that needy country.

SUCCESS IN THE PARTICULAR MEETING

When a meeting house is to be built or a library or hospital erected, or when an academy or college is raising an endowment fund, those who are in charge make personal visits to each individual whose contributions is desired. The nature of the undertaking is fully explained, its advantages are made clear. No one expects to secure large contributions for any object until the donor knows what the money is needed for and how it is to be spent.

In raising money for missions we must proceed in the same way. First, we must let people know where and how the money they are asked to give is to be used. We must enlist their interest in the work to be accomplished.

A general appeal to "those who are interested" to "give liberally" will not bring results. Success will only follow persistent, personal cultivation of those whose support is needed on the part of the Missionary Committeemen and workers and through personal requests for gifts. No meeting will do its full share this year unless the members of the local meeting and congregation, women and children as well as men, are visited personally, and the work, its needs and its importance clearly explained.

Instead, therefore, of taking a missionary offering in the face of a First Day morning meeting or at some special missionary service, it will usually be found much better to follow the practice which an increasing number of meetings are now using of canvassing the entire membership for missionary offerings and for funds for the current expenses of the meeting. Most people can give more readily if their pledges are made upon the weekly plan; even children can almost always give one or two or five cents per week, while, for many of them, the annual gift of $2.50 or even $1.00 or 50 cents if given all at one time, would be out of the question. Older people can, of course, make larger weekly offerings in proportion to their greater ability. Where every member gives every week, the total will usually be larger than where only a few give and make their entire offering at one time.

Every place where God leads, there is your field.—Moody.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

NOTICES

A series of articles will appear soon on this page setting forth the duties of Quarterly Meeting Superintendents and other Yearly Meeting Officers.

Has Your Meeting adopted the Goals for an Efficient Society gotten out by the Young Peoples Board? Ask for information.

We are going to publish the contributions of Fifty of the Meetings making the largest donation to Young Peoples Work on Young Friends Day. Don't you want your Meeting to be in that list?

Pastors, please send us the names of the young people of your Meeting who are in colleges this winter. We want to get in touch with them. We are planning big things for College Young Friends this year. Mr. Porter the National Secretary of the College Young Mens Christian Association is working with us in this.

YOUNG FRIENDS DAY

Experience the past two years in observing Friends Rally Day, revealed the fact that not all societies can give the program in full, nor on the date named by the Young Friends Board. This may be due to local conditions, which generally govern matters of this kind. Consequently we suggest that, when it is impossible to give the program on the day designated, it be given at the most convenient time, and that the program be given in whole or in part, or with whatever changes that need to be made to suit local conditions.

Each year, we endeavor to select a time that would be most suited to a majority, and just the kind of program that would both convey our message, and minister to the needs of a large majority.

The program this year places considerable emphasis upon finances. We do this not only because the Young People's work in every yearly meeting is crippled for lack of funds but because we believe the religious enthusiasm which we are trying to spread among both young and old will grow more rapidly if people will put funds into it.

The work for this Day or evening, and preparatory to the Day, should be done efficiently. Postals should be sent out, placards or posters put in display windows, and announcements made at all religious meetings whenever possible. Written invitations to your friends, should be sent out, also to the members of kindred organizations, and others who may come within the scope of your activities. To plan along this or similar lines will insure success.

Make it an evening of pleasure and profit to all, and a credit to your C. E. Society and church. The co-operation and fellowship and the stimulating effect from an evening spent in this way will mean much to the future success of Christian Endeavor in your community, and to the life and activities of your young people.

WHERE THE MONEY COLLECTED ON YOUNG FRIENDS DAY GOES

This money will be used to pay each Yearly Meetings quota to the Support of the Young Friends Board of the Five Years Meeting. What is left over will be turned into the Yearly Meeting Treasury for expenses of local interest. Isn't this a back handed arrangement, some one might ask? Shouldn't we first contribute to our Yearly Meeting Work and then give to the Young Friends Board? Such argument is logical if one still considers the Young People's Board as an organization apart from the Yearly Meetings. If, however he considers that we are of vital interest to each Yearly Meeting and the whole church, and that one work is as important as the other, then shouldn't the funds go to the place of greatest need first?

Have the visits of Thomas E. Jones meant anything to the young people in your Yearly Meeting? Has the faithful work of Lillian E. Hayes counted for anything? If we cannot see the results yet, is our vision great enough to see how it may mean a tremendous lot in the future? Will we give it a chance to try? Do we realize that hundreds of dollars have been spent in sending Mr. Jones all over the country, for the purpose of bringing new hope, vision and loyalty to our young people? This was done entirely on a venture. The Board believed in Friends, and believed that they would support so important a work when once they understood it. We still believe this.

When the appeal is made on Young Friends Day we believe each Friend will say I will give my share to this work, rather than to throw the responsibility on some one else. Shall our faith be misplaced? Together with asking for funds we request a much more important thing, and that is the sincere prayers of all Friends for the guidance of this great Movement. It must be God's work, done according to His plan. He will direct us if we but let Him.

THE YOUNG FRIENDS MOVEMENT

The Young Friends Movement is not an organization as such. In the large it is simply the Christian activities in which the young people of the Friends Church are actually engaged. These varied activities, C. E., Quaker Study Circles, Missionary Societies, Social Service plans, etc., are scattered over the United States, England, and several other lands. In the past each meeting has been quite independent of the others, each Yearly Meeting quite independent of other Yearly Meetings, and English and American Friends have been quite independent of each other. In recent years a consciousness of our oneness has begun to spread and intensify among us. This growing consciousness of oneness, springing out of the varied Young Friends organizations, has come to be expressed in one term as "The Young Friends Movement," and this movement has taken concrete form in America by the appointment of a Young Peoples Board by the Five Years Meeting, of which Thomas E. Jones is field Secretary.

But what is the significance of the consciousness of oneness among us which has come to expression in this form? It is this; there are still many Friends, young and old, who believe that if all Friends joined other churches so the Friends should cease to exist as a denomination, there would be a definite and vital loss to the religious life of the world. What is this Quaker contribution? To my mind it is a living fact, and therefore cannot be adequately expressed in words, for the full meaning of any living fact either in the natural or the spiritual realm cannot be so expressed. Who could define a horse by words merely, so a person who never saw a horse would be sure to recognize the first one he should see by means of the worded definition? Then how much more difficult is it to define adequately in words any living spiritual truth. These truths have to be experienced to be really known.

But how shall we suggest in words, the significance of the Friends message. As I conceive it, it is the logical outcome of the movement which is known in history as the Protestant Reformation. And what is the heart of that movement? We have already suggested it, viz., that true religion is a living fact, and therefore whenever it is couched in a worded formula or a ritualistic ceremony it thereby becomes cold, frozen. This suggests why men tend to repeat religious formulas, creeds, habitual religious expressions, and even the Lord's Prayer as mere forms of Godliness without power, and therefore it follows that living Christians are ever finding new ways to express old truths both by word of mouth and by methods of social service. This idea is commanding increased attention today. It appeals especially to young and vigorous thinkers. It is a great call for the best there is in the Young Friends of today.

But we cannot make our lives tell as they ought without some direction. We have the organ by which this direction can be made more effective for us all in the Young Peoples Board of the Five Years Meeting. This is our Board; ours to inspire, ours to direct, ours to support. Let us as young Friends, be worthy of our calling.

NOTICES

We wish to call Young Friends attention to the article elsewhere in these columns, by Ruthanna M. Simms, "An Echo." It contains splendid suggestions for a Study Class.

You will receive a little booklet, "Mission Study," put out by the American Board of Missions. We wish to especially call your attention to this, and ask that you read it over carefully. It will contain splendid suggestions for the organization of these classes, "What is a Mission Study Class; Why organize one; What is required; How to secure classes; Theme for 1916-1917; Suggested books on Home and Foreign Missions; Special courses for men, For boys and girls; How to increase membership; Helps for the Leaders, etc." It is the most complete leaflet along that line we have ever seen. If your copy does not reach you in due time, write to the American Friends Board of Missions, Richmond, or to the Young Friends Board.

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT

Ever since the burning of the main building of Penn College, last May, the location of the College has been a matter that has attracted a great deal of attention.

Some twenty years ago, through the generosity of Charles and Albert Johnson, Penn College came into possession of what was then known as the McNeil farm but which is known to others of an earlier day as the John White farm. This is a tract of 49 acres lying just north of the present campus and extending from the New Sharon road to Market Street. About the time this land became the property of the College, James M. Davis offered to furnish funds for moving the old College building out to it. At that time, however, the Board of Trustees did not think it possible to do this and for the time being the enterprise was abandoned.

At different times since then the question of moving out on the new campus has been agitated but it has never been thought possible to make the move because of the lack of funds. At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees, last June, the question was considered at great length and it was decided to remain on the old campus. All through the summer, however, it was quite apparent that there was a growing interest in the new campus. This had developed to such an extent that at a called meeting just after the close of the $400,000 campaign the question was again up for consideration. But again it was voted to remain on the old campus.

The obstacle in the way of moving has always been a lack of funds. Every one has conceded that the new campus was very superior to the old. The Board of Trustees have hesitated to make the move for fear that they would plunge the College again into debt. They have, therefore, steadfastly refused to authorize the move until sufficient funds could be provided so that the equipment of the College would be adequate out on the new campus. Since the meeting in August a group of men have been constantly at work striving to devise means which would make it possible to locate the new building, which is about to be erected, on the new campus. They have felt that now was the time to act as wherever this building was erected would remain the campus through all future time.

A meeting of the Board of Trustees was called on Thursday, October 19th, to again consider the situation. At this time a plan was made whereby the funds adequate for the erection of such buildings as are immediately needed were pledged, and the Board voted that if $81,000 could be secured in guarantees, that the old campus would be abandoned in favor of the new. At this writing this sum of money has very nearly been reached. Friends of the new campus have extended their credit which will make it possible to put funds available for the use of the Board of Trustees in erecting these new buildings and having them completed by the opening of college in September, 1917. It is the understanding that if funds for the erection of a girls' dormitory are received from some other source that the guarantors shall be released to the extent of these funds. Certain collateral has been put up by the College to secure the subscribers to this $81,000.

If this move can be made, and it now seems assured, it will mean that Penn College, at the opening of the college year 1917, will have three buildings, costing in the aggregate $230,000,—these buildings equipped in a modern and up to date manner, and located on a campus more than twice the size of the old campus.

It seems to be an enterprise of very great significance, not only to Penn College and Iowa Yearly Meeting, but to Friends everywhere. Friends all over the United States were sufficiently interested in rebuilding Penn College to give in large amounts. Of the $400,000 received from the campaign conducted last summer, a little more than half was contributed by members of the Society of Friends.

The management of Penn College feels, now that the institution is out of debt, has an endowment of a half a million and funds provided so that new buildings of almost a quarter of a million value are to be erected, that the institution is started on a period of unprecedented prosperity. It shall be the purpose of the management, in which purpose they shall sincerely hope to be successful, to make Penn College of greater value to the Society of Friends and to the cause of righteousness in general than she has ever been in the past. Friends who have wealth which they expect to dispose of are asked to consider Penn College as a suitable recipient and it is suggested that Penn College be made a beneficiary in the wills of such Friends. An educational institution, such as is Penn College, is worthy the consideration of all people who expect to assist those movements in the world which are making for righteousness.

D. M. EDWARDS,
President Penn College.

C. E. DEPARTMENT

Will Young Friends' Day on November 26 be observed in YOUR meeting? Some material giving suggestions for the program have been sent to you. Let's make the day a big success.

In connection with Young Friends' Day, let's make a special effort to complete the enrollment of all the young people in our meetings that day.

AT PLEASANT RIDGE, IOWA

The members of the meeting here and some neighbors gave the pastor, J. S. Hockett, a pleasant surprise on the evening of October 25. It was prayer meeting evening, and the pastor, thinking there would be only a few out, invited the early arrivals over to the parsonage in order to avoid unnecessary lighting. The meeting had gotten nicely started when others began to arrive and soon the lower rooms were filled with about 35 persons present.

After prayer the pastor turned the meeting over to others. The visitors came with meat, flour, groceries and apples and some with cash. A very pleasant evening was spent, the company leaving at a late hour with many good wishes for the pastor and his wife.

AT ACKWORTH, IOWA

Over fifty men of Ackworth community and a few from other places were present on the day set for volunteer labor in the improvement of the cemetery, and a great deal was accomplished. The women served a bountiful dinner. The Cemetery Improvement Association now has over $900.00 in its permanent fund. All interested are invited to contribute.

Ackworth took first honors at the County Sunday School rally. Automobiles decorated in goldenrod, sumac and asparagus carried the representatives of the Cradle Roll and Home Department. The rest of the school marched in order from the tiny tots to the Men's Brotherhood. The Elizabeth Fry class of women wore white caps and kerchiefs. In the whole procession there were 3,600 people.

The men have shown great enthusiasm in organizing their class as a brotherhood. They had seventy or eighty men out at their recent supper and program, and have the names of nearly forty as members of the class.

The young people's classes have secured a piano for the use of the church.

The Workers' Conference will be held once a quarter. The Quarterly Meeting superintendent of Bible School, J. O. Eno, of Indianola, met with us in October. He emphasized the work of decision day. After his talk the workers considered various needs of the School from screens to graded lessons.

Minnie Bassett, pastor at Ackworth since October, 1914, is now at the White's Bible Teachers' Training School in New York City. George McClellan came to Ackworth as pastor in September, moving into the residence which Friends recently secured for the use of the minister.

AT RICHLAND, IOWA

Mrs. Cheeseman gave an interesting report recently of the W. F. M. S. convention held at Lake Okiboji.

Mrs. Farr and Miss Allen recently visited our Society, and the visit was very much enjoyed by all present.

Viola Smith of Salem, has recently conducted a series of meetings at the Woolson church. She was assisted by a singer, Miss Lotcher.

The funeral services of Hazel Morrow were held at Rubio on October 21, conducted by the pastor, W. I. Kent.

The gospel team of Packwood did not meet with the people of Hopewell church on Sunday evening, the 29th, on account of the sickness of the leader. We hope they may yet come in the near future.

FROM THE FIELD

A Bible School was organized last spring, in the extreme eastern part of Des Moines, in Stowe School Building, by the Home Mission and Social Service Committee of First Friends Church.

Members of the Committee with others of the church are officers and teachers in the school. The school is growing and there is now held as a part of the closing session each Sunday a service, in which a brief message is given by one of the workers or some one invited for that purpose.

FIFTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

William West and wife of New Westville, Ohio, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at the Friends church in that place on October 11. Forty relatives and friends, some of whom had been present at their first wedding fifty years ago, ate dinner with the couple in the church basement. At two o'clock Mr. and Mrs. West repeated the marriage vows which they had given fifty years ago, according to Friends' ceremony. Mary Thomas of Richmond, Indiana, presided at the piano, while Mrs. Earl Brandenburg sang two numbers, "I Love You Truly" and "The End of the Perfect Day."

The church was decorated nicely for the occasion with festoons of yellow crepe paper and huge bouquets of yellow fall flowers. The meeting at Anderson, Indiana, where William West served as pastor for one year, sent a beautiful bouquet. The couple was presented with a purse of $45.00. At the close of the program light refreshments were served to ninety-nine guests.

CORRESPONDENCE

Chungking, West China

Sept. 6, 1916.

A large number of Kweichow soldiers have recently been quartered in the little village near the Boys' High School and in a large temple property near. One of the officers sent his card with the request that the soldiers be permitted to drill on the school athletic field. In view of the all powerful position of the soldier we considered what might be the consequences of failing to accede to the request. Two members of the Mission and K. P. Yang appointed an interview with the officer and laid before him our long standing conscientious objections to war or preparations for war, at the same time offering freely the use of the field for recreation or athletic exercises of a non-military nature. The interview resulted in a very pleasant chat together, and on leaving, the officer took with him copies of a number of our peace tracts, including "William Penn" and "The Federation of the World," recently translated by Isaac Mason. I also presented him with a pocket New Testament.

ROBERT L. SIMKIN.

DAVID E. SAMPSON

1845-1916

By L. L. HOBBS

The Society of Friends has made the most of the individual. Their belief in individual guidance and acceptance of this guidance in greater or less degree have produced self-reliance and independent thinking.

The mode of worship among Friends, based as it has been on silent waiting before God, one for one, those who worship expecting His presence and looking for a fresh putting forth of His spirit as a preparation and guarantee for vocal service, evidently sprang spontaneously out of the recognition in the world's salvation of the worth and potency of the individual.

On account of this exaltation of human instrumentality, the Friends church has produced examples both of men and of women who have made a positive contribution to the power of Christian civilization. There has not been wanting, however, the full recognition of God's supremacy over all; and Micah's inquiry has been a source of comfort and assurance to Friends in all their history: "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?"

In every Yearly Meeting there have appeared persons of this distinctive individualistic type of belief, whose lives have been moulded by immediate divine guidance, and who for this reason have shown such sterling integrity of character and such spiritual insight as to unify by their effect the entire body of Friends the world over.

There recently passed from our sight in North Carolina a Friend, who, though not a member by birthright, found the Friends' doctrines, methods of worship, and democratic government peculiarly acceptable to his mind, as affording what he considered to be the best interpretation yet given of the Gospel of Christ and in itself a call to labor therein for its promulgation.

The place which David E. Sampson for nearly forty years occupied in North Carolina Yearly Meeting, coming with his wife and one child in 1871 and settling in the limits of New Garden Monthly Meeting, ought to be known both as revealing his life and character and as a reminder to young people of the power of persistent righteousness when coupled, as it was in his case, with good judgment, untiring energy and steadfast faith. In this sketch it will be helpful to know how valiant a Christian man, how gentle yet how firm, was Thomas Sampson, David's father; for Godly parents along with early religious training in a Christian home still continue to be, as a sequence, the best fortification against the allurements of a wayward, thoughtless life and the most sure prophecy of future power in the work of world betterment.

As a child David Sampson was frail; and an attack of scarlet fever when he was thirteen left an after effect in his eyes, from which he never recovered. This was a handicap to his education. But he studied through the eyes of a friend and made commendable progress. He possessed an excellent memory, which was made more retentive on account of the necessity of depending upon memory more than would have been the case had his eyesight been unimpaired.

While a schoolboy, through the instrumentality of his friend and companion, now Dr. Apperby of London, he experienced conversion; and upon his last visit to his native land two years ago he found the little room in which the two boys knelt and received divine favor and blessing.

Within a few years after the settlement of the family at New Garden, in consequence of the searching ministry of the Gospel at Yearly Meeting time, David Sampson was lead to accept the doctrines held by Friends, and became ever afterward a consistent member, and was soon recognized as a valued interpreter of the Friends' faith, being recorded as a minister in 1884. Previous to this date he felt a call to labor in the mountain districts of North Carolina, where Friends' meetings had formerly flourished, but, on account of emigration of large numbers, had been discontinued. New Garden Monthly Meeting approved of his concern and the family removed and settled at Westfield in Surry County. This decision of David Sampson was an important event in his life, and also in North Carolina Yearly Meeting. The work was greatly blessed of God; and as a result there are at this time two large Quarterly Meetings in Yadkin and Surry Counties with a combined membership of 2,632.

The Friends' Mission at Blue Ridge arose out of David Sampson's interest and earnest and continuous labor in Patrick County, Va. There is now at the mission a Monthly Meeting and a good school. Subsequently he extended his work in almost every direction, and wherever he settled a Friends' meeting sprang up. He removed to East Bend in Yadkin County, a town near the Yadkin River. This place became the center of his operations for twenty-five years. A good meeting house was built there, and East Bend Monthly Meeting has at this time 189 members.

Meetings were established at White Plains and at Mount Airy, the county seat of Surry County; and in a short time Surry Quarterly Meeting was established with a membership reported this year of 889.

After leaving East Bend, David Sampson was instrumental in establishing a Monthly Meeting at Graham; and last of all he settled in Winston-Salem, and forthwith a Friends' meeting sprang up there, which has become a Monthly Meeting with a membership of 113. This belongs to New Garden Quarter. The labors of David Sampson in this last meeting, in the establishment of which he was the leading spirit, were blessed in a marked degree. The meeting grew rapidly in members and in interest. There is a good commodious meeting house in Winston-Salem, and New Garden Quarter will hold its next session with Winston Friends.

In all these years of untiring devotion to the work to which he felt called, David Sampson stood for righteousness in every phase of life and toiled industriously for that end. His opposition to evil of every kind made him a pioneer in reform.

He was a prohibitionist when it was unpopular to oppose the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks. In the campaign for prohibition in North Carolina he was a zealous and faithful worker, and his speeches in behalf of the movement were clear, argumentative and impressive. His advocacy of arbitration as a means of settling international controversies was in full accord with the position Friends have ever maintained on this subject.

While his education was necessarily somewhat limited on account of the gradual failure of sight, he was nevertheless remarkably well informed on all questions that everywhere affect the conditions of men.

Foreign missions had in him an ardent supporter. In every educational endeavor he took a sympathetic and intelligent interest. The success and prosperity of New Garden School and of its successor Guilford College gave him great pleasure and encouragement. He was progressive and yet conservative; and any cause that made for righteousness and the upbuilding of the people appealed to him and received his sympathy and support.

In his varied travels and labor in the ministry and in building up meetings and founding the Blue Ridge Mission he had the assistance of his wife Emma Sampson, who by reading and writing for him and accompanying him in most of his journeys performed a valued service. Her death occurred in 1904.

Afterwards he was married to Sarah C. Marshburn, a woman of remarkable strength of character and business ability, whose sympathy and co-operation in the latter years of his life deserve full expression of appreciation; for without her constant care and assistance his work would have been greatly hindered, if not prevented.

He was permitted to continue his activity to the end of his life, even to the last day. No one ever saw him discouraged, for his faith was strong, and his confidence in the power of devout men and women to bring about large results in church and state quickened his energy and made him cheerful and helpful. His loss is keenly felt in North Carolina Yearly Meeting. His judgment on all questions claiming the consideration of the Yearly Meeting was helpful, and his unabating interest in the large things concerning the Society of Friends brought inspiration and hope to all who felt the kindness of his sympathetic spirit.

EMERGENCY RELIEF WORK.

London, England, October 16, 1916.
Editor The American Friend:—

Many thanks for five pounds, ten shillings and one penny, another contribution forwarded by you for our work. As long as this wretched war goes on this work must go on too, and with the coming of winter the need is ever more pressing. So I thank all who so kindly contribute.

Stephen Hobhouse was arrested last week as an "absentee", and handed over to the military. He refuses all sorts of war service.

Very sincerely thine,

ANNA B. THOMAS.

NOTE.—The American Friend will continue to receive and forward money for the Emergency Committee of English Friends, for Ambulance Unit work, War Victims' Relief work, Armenian Relief and other similar matters. Such funds should always be sent to the office at Richmond, Indi-

Which Do You Prefer?

It is important for reasons of health and practical economy for every housekeeper to ask herself this question:

"Do I prefer a pure baking powder like Royal, made of cream of tartar derived from grapes, or am I willing to use a baking powder made of alum or phosphate, both derived from mineral sources?"

The names of the ingredients printed on the label show whether the kind you are now using or any brand, new or old, that may be offered is a genuine cream of tartar powder, or merely a phosphate or alum compound.

Royal Baking Powder contains no alum nor phosphate.

DEDICATION AT ECONOMY, IND.

Friends at Economy celebrated their centennial and the completion of their new building on October 22. President Robert L. Kelly and Truman C. Kenworthy were present, the former preaching at the forenoon service, the latter soliciting the $1,600.00 necessary to lift the indebtedness. It was a time of general rejoicing, when, in the afternoon, the last dollar was subscribed and the church was dedicated free from debt.

Ray Ballard, pastor of the M. E. church, together with his congregation, assisted both in the forenoon and afternoon services. Dinner was served in the basement at one o'clock by the Sunathla (The Friends' Aid Society), to 275 people. During the afternoon the "Girls' Quartette" from Dublin furnished music and the service was more informal.

President Kelly made a brief address to a class of young people, who were received into active membership of the church. A paper was read by Mrs. Albert S. Jessup, which gave a brief history of the church for the last one hundred years. Also letters were read from Thomas Charles who taught a high school in the old building in 1860 and 1861, from John L. Rupe, one of his pupils, from Judge W. O. Barnard of New Castle, from Theodore and Corinna Barnes of Indianapolis, and from Dr. Edmund D. Clark of Indianapolis; also a greeting from Byrom Robbins of Detroit and from Katherine Porch of Indianapolis, all of whom expressed an interest in our program.

A good delegation was present from Dublin, including several members of the committee appointed by Dublin Quarterly Meeting to establish the Monthly Meeting in 1911. Reminiscences of earlier times were given by Frank Osborn of Muncie and Hannah Stanley and others. Truman C. Kenworthy preached a sermon at the evening service that was well received. The Economy Friends' Choir furnished music for the forenoon and evening. The day closed with the universal verdict that Economy Friends with their new equipment, have taken a decided step forward. Oliver M. Frazer has been pastor for the past seven years.

CHURCH AT WORK

Corinth, Virginia—Virginia Quarterly Meeting was held at Corinth October 21. The visiting ministers were Samuel R. Neave from Patuxent Monthly Meeting, Md.; L. Oscar Moon, of Baltimore; Charles Mesner, now located at Sedley, and Emanuel C. Burger of Ohio Yearly Meeting, who brought helpful messages during the various sessions. The report on the state of the church showed increased activity and spiritual life. The statistical report showed a net gain over last year. Plans are under way for the observance of rally day in the Bible Schools of Lower Virginia during the month of November.

Peace, temperance and social service have been actively engaged in during the past year. Charles Mesner has recently located for service in the Sedley field and Alonzo E. Cloud will continue the work at Corinth and Somerton. This makes the tenth year of his stay in this field. Plans are under way for more aggressive work during the coming year. On Saturday evening a social was held in the auditorium of the academy for young people of the Quarterly Meeting. The room was decorated beautifully with autumn leaves and boughs, harmonizing with the color decorations of brown and gold. After a pleasant social hour the meeting was addressed by Charles Mesner on the subject of "Power for Service." This was followed by appropriate remarks from L. O. Moon, Dr. R. L. Raiford, and others.

Prof. C. E. Trueblood was appointed Field Secretary of the young people's work. At ten o'clock a bounteous luncheon was served by the Corinth C. E. Social Committee to about 75 Endeavorers, after which we sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and parted feeling it was good to be together.

Rally day was observed in our Monthly Meeting on October 8. About 80 members responded to their names at roll call and many absent members were heard from with words of encouragement. The topic for discussion was "The Place as Fathers and Mothers We Should Fill in the Meeting for Worship and the Church Activities." This was discussed by Sue F. Raiford and others. The second phase of the subject, "The Part the Young Friend May Have in These Things" was led by Herbert H. Babb, and although only 18 years of age, he handled the subject in a masterful way. The work of the Monthly Meeting during the past year has been encouraging. The statistical report showed a net gain of five.

The work of the Bible School has received much attention and three rooms for Sunday School purposes have been added to the church. The Pastoral Committee has been enlarged to include the Bible School Superintendent, the President of the W. C. T. U., the Clerk of the Monthly Meeting, the President of the C. E. and the Chairmen of the various Committees not already represented.

The C. E. is planning for a sunrise prayer meeting and the distribution of baskets containing thanksgiving dinner to needy families. At the conclusion of the Monthly Meeting the members met on the lawn of the parsonage and were served to a splendid luncheon by the ladies of the church, at the close of which Alonzo E. Cloud addressed the members, outlining plans for future work and calling upon all for assistance in the work.

Huntington Park, California—A reception in honor of the new pastors of this meeting, Sanford J. and Blanche Ford Pickering, and also for the new students of the training school, was given recently in the auditorium of the school at this place. William P. Pinkham, president of the training school, gave an address of welcome, while Harry Cox, superintendent of the Sunday School, and Earl Barker, president of the C. E. Society, spoke on behalf of these organizations. John S. Kimber, evangelistic superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, also had a place on the program. S. J. Pickering spoke in response on "The Opportunities of the Church," followed by his wife, who spoke on "The Needs of the Church."

Twenty-one new members were received into the C. E. Society recently. On account of the rapid growth of the Sunday School, new departments and classes have been organized and more teachers installed. It has also been necessary to secure new quarters just east of the training school for the beginners and primary department. A ladies' mission study class has recently been organized and is under the leadership of Mrs. Pickering. The new pastors are being appreciated greatly for their clear, forceful sermons.

Muncie, Indiana—Members of the Friends Memorial church here observed their annual rally day on October 15. However, in an effort to gain more permanent results than is usual, a series of meetings was held beginning on October 10 and closing on Sunday night following. On Tuesday evening the pastor had charge of the service on the subject, "Why I am a Friend." Several others also spoke on the subject. Wednesday night was given to the work of the Peace and the Social Service Committees. On Thursday night the Home and Foreign Missionary Society discussed various phases of missionary work. On Friday night there was a supper, followed by a social hour. Six members appeared in the Quaker garb of other days. For the Sabbath cards had been sent out inviting "Thee and thy folks" to each of the services. Attractive features were added to the usual Bible School program. One was a response by each class of their number present and their class motto. All marched into the main auditorium to the music of the orchestra. The youngest children as well as the adults had their attention closely held to a short sermon on "Manners," by the pastor, William J. Sayers. The Junior Endeavor in the afternoon and the Senior Endeavor at 6:30 o'clock had special rally day services. In the evening, Theodate Wilson, a member of the meeting and Secretary of the local Y. W. C. A., brought the message.

Winchester, Indiana—Charles E. Tebbetts preached a most excellent sermon to an appreciative congregation at our meeting here on October 15. Winchester Friends Messenger Society received an invitation to attend the Lynn Society on the afternoon of October 5, and forty-four of our ladies accepted the invitation and motored to Lynn, where we were delightfully entertained with a good program, followed by the serving of delicious refreshments. October 26 was "Guest Day" in the Messenger Society, and a program was given and refreshments served. Many were in attendance.

BIBLE SCHOOL

November 19

Subject—From Melita To Rome.

Lesson—Acts 28:11-31.

Golden Text—I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Romans 1:16.

These are the closing verses of the history of the church, and the biography of Paul as recorded by Luke. About the apostle's subsequent career we know but little. There are items here and there which are taken by many to be evidences that he was released at the end of the two years, but there are many who hold that he was put to death shortly after the period in question. At any rate he is nearing another crisis in his life. He had already been a prisoner for about three years, two more were to be added to the number. But he was not discouraged; far from it. It was his custom to turn that which seemed to be a defeat into a sure victory. He would preach the gospel whether in bonds or a free man.

At last he finds brethren. Now he must have rejoiced in the opportunity. For months he had been denied such a favor. Now he can feel that he is with those who have a real personal interest in him, his welfare and his gospel. Only a returned missionary who has been alone in his field may know the joy of such a meeting. Say what we will about stout hearts and braving the foe alone, we have all found that the encouragement which comes from associating with our fellow Christians means far more than we can tell. For this reason we have founded churches, formed societies and banded ourselves together. Dear to us is the spirit of brotherhood.

It is very interesting to note the attitude of the Jews in Rome. They seem to have been a fair minded group. They had heard from many sources that the new sect was unpopular to say the least, but they wished to know the facts about it. They seem to have been willing to listen. Too often, at other places, they had refused to even hear the arguments favoring Christianity. These were true students. Fairness always grants a hearing. If the evidence is convincing the hearer has a chance to take immediate advantage of the opportunity to accept; if the evidence is lacking the lover of truth can make his opposition effective because he knows what he has to oppose. It is not to be supposed that all of these Jews accepted Jesus as the Messiah, but it is probable that a number of them did.

Again our attention is called to Paul the man. The new situation seemed to stimulate him to new undertakings. As usual he was active and aggressive. He did not sit down in his prison quarters and say here I am, shut up and helpless. He made arrangements to meet his friends. He sent out invitations for the Jews to come to him. He made the very bonds which were a physical burden to him contribute to his cause. We wonder if Friends might do anything of this kind.

Canadian Wheat To Feed the World

The war's fearful devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and there is an unusual demand for Canadian wheat. Canada's invitation to every industrious American is therefore especially attractive. She wants farmers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves while helping her to raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and Other lands can be bought at remarkably low prices. Think of the money you can make with wheat at its present high prices, where for some time it is liable to continue. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government this year is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or Canadian Government Agent.

J. M. McLACHLAN, 215 Traction Terminal Bldg INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA

The gospel from the prison walls was undoubtedly effective. God alone knows how many soldiers—officers and privates—heard that story during those two years. He alone knows to how many quarters of the world those same soldiers carried the story of the brave Christian who was faithful to his cause while in bonds. From here too went certain letters now in the canon of Christian scripture. It was to Paul a great opportunity.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC November 19

"Why Christianity is the Hope of Our Country." Ps. 9:1-20.
(Home Missionary Meeting.)

This meeting should be in charge of the Missionary Committee. Decorate the room with the Stars and Stripes. Sing patriotic songs.

"For its own sake our American life must be charged with spiritual power; America plays so important a part in world movements;

What we are as a people means so much in support of what we say as Missionary heralds;

We send out hundreds of thousands of unconscious as well as conscious ambassadors every year; our unconscious as well as conscious life must be tuned, therefore, to proclaim the truth;

Foreigners come and go by the million who are made better or worse by contact with American ways and things;

Our nation is growing so rapidly in numbers and wealth that saving our land guarantees an incomparable spiritual investment;

Our cities remain unevangelized vice and wickedness prevail in shocking degree in all of them;

Many of the older country communities have become or remain lifeless and unattractive;

Hundreds of new towns are growing up in new territory where no religious and few wholesome social institutions have been established;

Great bodies of serious-minded workmen misunderstand the church and are misunderstood by the church;

There are hundreds of thousands of lumbermen and miners living in temporary camps, some with their families, and the most without, whose life must be cleansed of its sordidness and vice;

There are 300,000 Indians whose "problem" has not yet been solved and which spiritual forces must attack with a vigor and sanity never yet displayed;

There are 400,000 Mexicans residing in the United States upon whose territory our civilization is now encroaching as never before, and who are in great spiritual need;

Our national responsibilities have been extended to adjacent islands and other territory of Spanish-speaking people for whose spiritual welfare we alone are held responsible;

In the present conflict of social forces Christ must finally mediate."

The above will answer the question, "Why have Home Missions?"

NEWS NOTES

On the evening of October 4 the Student Volunteers of Whittier College spent an enjoyable evening at the home of President and Mrs. Rosenberger.

Under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., of Whittier College, John S. Kimber is giving a series of addresses before the Bible Study Class on the Tabernacle.

The First Church at Indianapolis, Indiana, is planning for an every family visitation in the near future for the purposes of encouragement and spiritual uplift.

The meeting at Bolton, Massachusetts, held a social and supper for the congregation and invited guests on October 20, at which T. A. Sykes of East Lynn, gave a strong and stirring address on Christian Citizenship.

The C. E. Society at Bolton, Massachusetts, entertained a large delegation from the Baptist C. E. of Clifton on October 24. After the regular meeting a social time was enjoyed and refreshments served.

Prof. Roderick and Mrs. Scott, the latter the daughter of President Robert L. Kelly of Earlham College, have arrived safely in the Orient. They were met at Yokohama, Japan, by Yuri Watanabe, the Japanese girl who graduated at Earlham last June.

YOUNG FRIENDS CONFERENCE FOR SOUTHERN NEW YORK

In the week end of November 11th and 12th is to be held at Yorktown Heights, N. Y., a conference for the young Friends of Southeastern New York. It is intended to reproduce in miniature the Cedar Lake Conference, and accomplish for this local section what the national conferences accomplish for the society at large. The idea originated in the Brooklyn meeting and has been carried forward by young people connected with that meeting. A keen interest has developed in most of the communities, and a large and representative group is expected to gather at Yorktown Heights. The following unusually attractive program has been arranged:

PROGRAM

Saturday

- 3:15 P. M. Opening Announcements.
- 3:30 P. M. Class Bible Study—Henry Caddbury.
- 4:30* P. M. Class—The American-Japanese Problem—L. Hollingsworth Wood.
- 6:15 P. M. Group Supper.
- 8:00 P. M. Address—Rufus M. Jones.

Sunday

- 10:00 A. M. Bible School.
 - 11:00 A. M. Meeting for Worship.
 - 3:00 P. M. Open Forum—What shall we do the coming year?—Thomas E. Jones.
 - 6:00 P. M. Group Supper.
- *Note—Other classes may be organized in such subjects as Missions, Young People's Methods, etc.

JAMES B. UNTHANK

James B. Unthank, for twenty years president of Wilmington College, and for many years clerk of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, later pastor at Dayton, Ohio, and recently a valued member of West Richmond Meeting, at Richmond, Indiana, died on the morning of November 2, after an illness of only about five days. A fuller account will appear later.

NOTICE

Friends in Indiana will please note that there will be a State Anti-Secret Society Convention at North Manchester, Ind., November 14 and 15. A strong, constructive program has been arranged and Friends who are in sympathy with the work should see that the church is represented. If you cannot go then, send a letter expressing your convictions on the subject. For programs address G. L. Wine, North Manchester, or the undersigned.

CORRESPONDENCE

On October 14, I had the pleasure in company with a committee of New Bedford Monthly Meeting of visiting the unoccupied Friends meeting house at Pembroke, Massachusetts. This building was erected in 1706 and was remodeled in the 60's of the last century. It is located about twelve miles north of Plymouth, the home of the early Pilgrims. Around it rest the remains of the worthies of two centuries past. Pembroke Friends were not all without fame. It was the birthplace of Brown, the great grammarian, and Greenleaf, who gave the boys of sixty years ago the puzzles to solve. The large burial lot nearly surrounds the meeting house and includes many unmarked graves. Some are marked with field stones and are unnamed. There are some white marble stones of the prescribed size and of late date.

In common with other neglected old burial lots in New England and old England as well, this is the resting place of uncanonized saints and uncrowned kings. Let us not disgrace our denomination by neglecting them even if they do seem to say "Ichabod."

CHARLES W. GODDARD.

DIED.

Abbott—Harriet Abbott, wife of Calvin Abbott, died at the home of her daughter in Los Angeles, California, October 14, 1916. She was a life long and consistent member of the Friends church. She had been in failing health for several years. Funeral services were held in the Friends church at Pasadena, and the body was laid to rest beside that of her husband, who preceded her three years ago.

Fry—Mary C. Fry, daughter of Samuel and Lois F. Deane and wife of Pliny Fry, was born in Hollowell township, Maine, September 22, 1841, and died at Muscatine, Iowa, September 9, 1916. In 1853 she moved with her parents to Muscatine, and a little later became a teacher both in Iowa and Illinois. In 1870 she married Pliny Fry, who later was recorded a minister. Together they did home mission work in Iowa, in five of the New England states, and in western New York. She was always a devoted helper in the gospel work of her husband, until failing health came two years ago. At about the age of sixteen she definitely gave herself to the Lord, from which time she lived a life manifestly filled with the Holy Spirit. At different times she held many important offices in the church and was an efficient worker. Her deepest and sweetest thoughts found expression in poetic strains of a high order. She leaves the husband, a sister and a brother.

Newlin—Charles O. Newlin died at his home near Plainfield, Indiana, September 12, 1916, aged 76 years, 1 month and 20 days. He was a birthright Friend, and from boyhood was interested in all branches of church work. As long as health would permit he was an active worker in both church and Sabbath School. For many years he was Chairman of the Book and Tract Committee of Western Yearly Meeting. He is survived by the widow, two sons, two daughters and four grandchildren.

Newlin—Hannah Newlin, daughter of Isaac and Rachel Newlin, died at her home in Bloomingdale, Indiana, October 26, 1916, aged 72 years. She was a life long Friend. Not called to public work of any kind, yet she was faithful in her humble life. Of her it may justly be said: "She hath done what she could."

Oliphant—Emily Ida Oliphant, daughter of Exum T. and Emily Cox, and widow of Horace M. Oliphant, was born at Coloma, Indiana, April 14, 1867, and died at the Good Samaritan Hospital, Kokomo, Indiana, October 15, 1916. She was a birthright Friend, was converted in early life and her faith in Christ and love of His house, His people and service increased with the years. She married H. M. Oliphant at West Branch, Iowa, in 1902, and he preceded her to the other world only three months. She had recently gone with her two little children to make her home with her two sisters, Martilla and Mary A. Cox, at West Middleton, Indiana. Interment at North Manchester, Indiana.

Pemberton—Enos E. Pemberton, son of Isaiah and Tacy Pemberton, was born in Marion County, Indiana, July 20, 1852, and died at his home in Marshalltown, Iowa, June 24, 1916. Soon after the death of his father he moved with his mother to Hartland, Iowa, where the greater part of his life was spent. He was a birthright Friend, was converted in early life and was an earnest Christian worker, sharing to a great degree the responsibilities of the work in the Hatland meeting. The last few years of his life were spent at Marshalltown, where he maintained the same earnest spirit of service for his Master and the church. Interment in the cemetery of his old home church at Hartland.

Perisho—Elias N. Perisho, son of John C. and Fannie M. Perisho, was born near Westfield, Indiana, March 12, 1853, and died at his home near New Providence, Iowa, July 24, 1916. He was a birthright Friend, was converted near the age of twenty-one and died in the triumphs of Christian faith.

Raiford—Mills E. Raiford, a minister of Corinth Monthly Meeting, Virginia, died at his home near Ivor, Va., April 17, 1914, aged 62 years 6 months and 6 days. Growing up in the war-swept district, his educational opportunities were limited, yet during all his life he labored for the advance of education and of Christianity in his community. He was one of the founders of Corinth Meeting, and of the Friends' School situated there, and for twenty years served in the gospel ministry.

Taber—Benjamin Taber died at his home in Fair Oaks, California, October 8, 1916, aged 90 years and 11 months. He was a life long Friend, active in the church and public welfare, and was especially interested in the temperance cause. Funeral services were held at the home conducted by Harry Hollingsworth, pastor of Citrus Heights Meeting. Burial at Hesper, Iowa.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

Not as I Will

By HELEN HUNT JACKSON

Blindfolded and alone I stand
With unknown thresholds on each hand;
The darkness deepens as I grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
Yet this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go,
That doors are opened, ways are made,
Burdens are lifted or are laid,
By some great law unseen and still,
Unfathomed purpose to fulfill,
"Not as I will."

Blindfolded and alone I wait;
Loss seems too bitter, gain too late;
Too heavy burdens in the load
And too few helpers on the road;
And joy is weak, and grief is strong,
And years and days so long, so long;
Yet this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go,
That I am glad the good and ill
By changeless laws are ordered still,
"Not as I will."

"Not as I will:" the sound grows sweet
Each time my lips the words repeat.
"Not as I will:" the darkness feels
More safe than light, when this thought steals
Like whispered voice to calm and bless
All unrest and all loneliness.
"Not as I will," because the One
Who loved us first and best has gone
Before us on the road, and still
For us must all His love fulfill,
"Not as I will."

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE

On account of the great advance in the price of paper, the Publication Board has decided to ask all subscribers to The American Friend to share the greatly increased cost of publishing the paper the coming year. There is simply no other solution of the problem. On the first day of January, 1917, the price of the paper will be advanced to $2.00 per year, covering all expirations on and after that date, and all new subscriptions after that time; to ministers the price will be advanced to $1.50, and to foreign subscribers, where increased postage is necessary, the price will be $2.50. All subscribers and Friends generally will please take notice. All subscriptions, whether new or old, until that time will be taken at the old price. It will be a good time for new subscribers to get in at the old rate.

BY WAY OF TONIC

Editor American Friend:

Once more the fact has been impressed upon us in a striking way that Friends have a heritage of priceless ideals. By general consent, the greatest poet in the world today, or in this generation is Rabindranath Tagore, of India. The attention of the world was called to him when a few years ago he was awarded the Noble Prize for producing the greatest piece of current literature. As is well known, he is now in America, and is speaking in the great centers of population and at some of the centers of learning. When he spoke at Earlham College a few nights ago, his auditors were stirred by his remarkable appeal for a broader and a more unselfish brotherhood than is indicated by the present movement of western civilization toward nationalism. As one saw him in his oriental robes and with his long beard and white hair, and heard his shrill and penetrating voice, he was reminded of the patriarchs of old, and all the more so because of the loftiness of his theme and the earnestness of his appeal. It was interesting to learn in private conversation with him that he knew thoroughly and appreciated the ideals of Friends and was deeply moved by the suffering which English Friends are now passing through for conscience sake. In fact, it is significant that his business manager, Mr. Pearson, is an English Friend, thoroughly acquainted with Joseph John Gurney and the Earlham of England (as well as the Earlham of America), and with all of the other English personalities who have made the name of Friends respected throughout the earth.

We were privileged to converse familiarly of places and personalities and ideals of common interest. It is generally known by Friends that the other great idealist of this generation, Tolstoi, has ideas similar to our own. It has occurred to me that perhaps it is not so well known that Tagore is a kindred spirit also.

While on this general theme, it may be of interest also to refer to a recent address on The Development of Memory, by James R. Angell, head of the Department of Psychology of the University of Chicago. He is one of the leading experimental psychologists of our time, and he is an authority for the statement now generally known to psychologists that the latest and most trustworthy experiments demonstrate the fact that the memory is best developed, among other things, if the individual instead of rushing from one line of thought to another, will, after the consideration of a given theme for not too long a time, pause in silence and meditation for an appreciable period. By this means, the ideas become set, and the mental machinery not only conserves what has been done but receives a better preparation for what is to come. Prof. Angell spoke as a relentless scientist and was discussing only mental operations, but I came away from the lecture feeling that if only George Fox and his contemporaries had patented their ideas and allowed their spiritual descendants, through the years, to receive royalties on them, Friends might all by this time be millionaires. Perhaps we should be more appreciative than we are of the richness of truth that has been handed down to us by those great mystics who, through the processes of intuition, were able to get a firm grip on the realities long before the present day psychologist worked them out by his tedious and laborious laboratory investigations.

ROBERT L. KELLY.

Finish every day and be done with it; you have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities no doubt crept in; forget them as soon as you can. Tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. Today all is good and fair. It is too dear with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.—Emerson.

Young Friends Day, November 26

The hope of the church to be is its youth of today. The next generation must be able to contribute yet more largely to the building of a Christian civilization, else Christianity will lose its progressive and developing spirit. The young people's movement now is a prophecy of what the church of tomorrow will be. To the extent that it lacks virility and sympathetic encouragement will the future church reflect the weaknesses of its earlier years; or to the extent that it is propagated in the warm, sympathetic atmosphere of Christian hopefulness and encouragement, will its development take on the characteristics of successful discipleship.

Yet it is not alone for the sake of the future that the church must direct its paternal care to the youth of this generation. The great problems of this age need the touch of buoyant, consecrated youth. There can be no successful mobilization of the religious forces of Christendom today that does not take into account the strength and devotion of young manhood and womanhood. The church can make no fruitful drive for a larger communion or a broader religious program or a wider reach of influence unless it enlists the loyalty and the enthusiasm and the faith of its youth in the attempt. The exceptional opportunities which Christianity has now to enforce its claims upon humanity at large will be dissipated, unless our young people are to become a vital part of the organic endeavor in this direction. The church must have the hopefulness of youth, or it will die from the rigors of traditionalism.

Whatever else the church may need, it must always have momentum. There must always be in it that quality of life and action that keeps it moving and growing, and there is no element so fruitful of the progressive spirit as the whole-heartedness of youth. Is it not too often true that the great task of winning others to the church and the Christian life is laid upon the aged, and that too seldom do we expect our young people to be evangelistic in the broad meaning of the term? If our young men and women could be possessed of the idea that the best way to keep their faith is to pass it on to others, what a busy program might be injected into the life of all our local meetings!

The church must feel a positive responsibility to its young people. Many a young man is left to wobble in a state of indecision, when the church should be presenting to him a clean-cut issue of Christian living and service, that would clear away the cobwebs of uncertainty and doubt and sweep him at once into the current of religious activities, thus ministering to his own safety and the strengthening of the church. The surest way to impress the value of spiritual things upon many minds is to give them an enlarging view of the needs of humanity, and make them feel the responsibility of supplying those needs to the extent of their influence. It is such responsibility that drives sincere men and women close to the very heart of God.

The Society of Friends in America cannot afford to be indifferent to the appeal for the observance of Young Friends Day in all local meetings on November 26. Through carelessness we can crush the very life out of the young Friends movement; through a proper realization of the importance of the day we can go far in assimilating a large proportion of our young people with the active, working organism of the church. What an opportunity the day will afford to test the readiness of the church as a whole to meet young Friends upon the common ground of mutual interest and co-operative purpose!

The Board of Young Friends Activities needs money, and already the church is debtor to her young people for what has been done thus far, but this is incidental to the larger opportunity of bringing older and younger together in the spirit of true yoke-fellowship for the sake of the Master and his cause. Perhaps our young people would outlive the cold indifference that would lead most of our meetings to ignore the opportunities which the observance of this special day would afford, for youth is buoyant and full of hope, but the church will suffer tremendously if it fails to meet its children halfway in a great enterprise.

What better thanksgiving theme can suggest itself than the spirit of interest in the things of the kingdom on the part of our younger membership? And in what better way can the church pour out its soul in thanksgiving than in bidding the children to come into its family of fellowship, for "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Divine Dependables

By CHARLES M. WOODMAN

In these days, as in the days when Scripture was written, God is ever seeking for ways and means by which He may communicate His messages and Himself to the needy world. In the first chapter of Luke there is a story of how God revealed His message to a priest as he performed his duties at the altar in the temple. We read, "There appeared unto him (Zacharias), an angel of the Lord, standing on the right side of the altar of incense." A study of this man, his activity, and his attitude of heart will suggest some of the essentials upon which God depends today as then to get His message to humanity. This man, like many others of his generation, was looking for the Messianic revelation of God. The world then, as now, cared little whether it heard from the throne of God or not. It preferred to be left to its own petty ambitions, its seeking of place, its effort to keep the flood of the world miseries from inundating its chosen field of self-gratification.

This man was content with such portion of the divine revelation as should be meted out to him. He did not think as some have since, and possibly do today, that the whole plan is layed out before the comprehension of his infinite mind. What came to him was only a part of the full revelation. He was but a cog in the wheel, which with others of similar and different nature, turned to usher in the coming of the Christ. He was to be only the father of the man whose supreme work in life was to tell the nation that the Messiah was to come. Though he was that far removed from the Christ he was prepared to be a part of the channel through which the divine revelation should flow. It is significant to note that God needs men and women of this type today who can throw themselves, up to the full measure of their ability, into the divine program and play their small but essential part in ushering in the larger and more complete unfolding of God's Spirit in the community. It is a great thing to be the sun, but it is no small thing to be the morning star, and is by no means an insignificant office which calls upon you to point your finger to the sky, and herald the breaking of the morning star through the clouds of the night. The essential thing is to be a part of the ordered whole. In faithfulness to this lies the advance of the kingdom, and individual peace.

Zacharias was one of many priests. He was in his place in the regular order of religious service. He had a routine of sacrificial work to perform. To this man in the ordered performance of his daily duty the Lord appears with a special message. Zacharias will ever stand for us as the man who in his religious obligations is regular and dependable. The work of God in the world is done in what we may call regular ways, rather than by special and unusual methods. Think of the thousands and tens of thousands who make up the very warp and woof of the program of the kingdom. It is this host who are the divine dependables. If the Church is the chosen instrument to bring in the Day of Christ, it is these who support the Church with their money, who give to its service of time and energy, who are the background and backbone of every congregation upon whom God depends in the ushering in of any important phase of the kingdom's coming.

In the ancient Hebrew order there was a group of carefully chosen men who became the priests and were hallowed for this particular task of cherishing and being responsible for the things of religion and worship. Today, and with the Society of Friends especially, the Levitical office and the priestly function rest upon no holy orders, upon no priestly office. The Holy Spirit today makes use of the regular faithful dependables who are always in their place, and always ready to be responsible for the welfare, progress and work of that portion of the Kingdom of God which falls within the circle of their lives. It surely looked like a fine thing to have a special group of men in that old day, when the Israelites were crossing the desert, upon whom rested the responsibility of taking down, caring for and setting up the tabernacle. But I often think of how spiritual religion might have spread more widely and gone more deeply into the life of the people if a piece of the tabernacle had been entrusted to each of the families of the twelve tribes. It may have been impossible then, but in this age when every believer is a priest unto God, and potentially a prophet before God the only lines of separation for spiritual obligations are those which separate the divine dependables from those who have by lack of faithfulness never risen to that point of privilege and responsibility.

The attitude of this man appears to have little else in it than the simple and faithful performance of duty. Routine is not an unknown thing in religious performance. Much of the service of the dependable people of our day is done in just this spirit. Some have quietly made the decision that the church shall have such a portion of their money; they forthwith pay it as regularly as they pay the grocer's bill. Some have quietly decided that on the Sabbath they shall be found in their place in the house of God; forthwith they meet the obligation as regularly as day by day they go to business. In these, and other ways, the people of God fulfill their duty. It is difficult to overpraise or overestimate such faithfulness. Upon it God depends for the pushing forward of His work.

The real import of the message of this paper lies, however, in what happens by the altar; in what may and should on occasion take place in the regular performance of all religious obligation. God is not going to leave His dependables without some splendid token of His spiritual presence. He sees this man at the altar; He takes into account the faithful performance of the routine; He enters it, and, as the fire ascends, the angel appears standing on the right side of the altar. The divine is entering into communion with the human in a very special way. There are three lessons in connection with this divine manifestation worthy of note.

1. This special revelation took place in the midst of the performance of the routine religious duty. This is significant. There is no place in all human life where fellowship with the Great Spirit ought to be easier, or where He speaks more often than in the very midst of our regular religious duties. There is no place where the distance between heaven and earth is shorter than on the mountain top of some religious service. They used to build their altars on hill tops to teach this. They erected the temple on a hill. People went up to worship God. Surely here the material clouds ought to be the thinnest; surely here the sunlight can most easily break through; surely here we may look for Him, and be most sure of finding Him.

2. Consider the revelation in its method. An angel appeared to him. We do not see angels now. Men are losing their faith in the winged messengers of their childhood picture books. What shall this appearance mean to us? If it is ever to be a choice with me of seeing an angel or of possessing a living sense of being a part of the completed whole, of knowing that I am one with God, of realizing that He has taken me as an ingredient into the great unfolding composite plan, then there can be but one answer. Angel faces will pale into insignificance beside the far greater truth of realizing that He has lifted me up and placed me as a bit of pigment upon the palette with which He is painting the great divine masterpiece, and that He is willing to use me as a part of that. He who merely sees angels will go out to be the same kind of a man he was before; but he who catches this other vision, this inward sense of divine reality in the soul walks hereafter on higher levels of life.

3. Hereafter a new obligation rests upon the man who has caught the vision at the altar. His religion functions hereafter not simply in the temple and in the temple service; the part he is really and vitally to play in the great plan after all is in the home. The home of Zacharias is hereafter to be linked up with the great Messianic message as a part of it. It must be so today. God will most easily reveal Himself in the place and routine of religious worship in the sanctuary, but all such revelations carry with them wider obligations of duty which reach the home, business and all the phases of human relationships. God's dependable man is the one who finds the angel at the altar, and carries his message as a divine trust into all his life.

AMONG THE REFUGEES IN RUSSIA

By M. CATHERINE ALBRIGHT.

The following letter (by Florence M. Barrow), dated August 31, has been received by the Friends "War Victims' Relief Committee" in London and gives interesting details of the work of investigation, now being carried on. Additional workers have recently gone out and have taken condensed milk and other stores. One hospital has been re-opened, and medical assistance is being given in two other centers as well.

"The people are very welcoming, though at the moment they are a little puzzled as to why we come, as we do not appear to have any help to give, though they realize we are connected with the hospital which has already been a boon to so many. We have now visited nearly all the 437 refugees in this village and I should like to try and describe to you some of our visits. I expect you have pictured a little these straw-roofed primitive villages. The long wide street, with its one-storied wooden or mud-covered houses, looks very desolate, for there are no gardens or even trees to be seen and often clouds of blinding dust whirl before the strong wind making it difficult to see and unpleasant to stand. On market days, in bright sunshine, it looks very different, for the dresses of the women and the blouses of the men are mostly of brilliant sateen, green, red or yellow, and stand out in wonderful contrast with this grey background. In the evening, too, when a flaming sunset lights up the end of the street there is a strange beauty about it all.

"The plan is to work down each side of the street, going from house to house and asking, Are there any refugees living here? for though we have all the names, there are no addresses, for no houses are numbered or named. Often we are invited to go through the high gates with their curious pointed roofs which join the houses together and are led to a low, mud-plastered shed at the back and asked to go in through a low door hardly four feet high. In the half light we can see a sort of baker's oven with a few cooking utensils strewn about, and large sunflower heads from which the seeds have been taken for food, and a mattress or two on the ground. In a little room beyond dimly lighted by two or three windows which are not made to open, a woman spins coarse brown wool, and round her are children of various ages and sizes and a woman sitting idly and dully with her hands in her lap. We ask how many live there altogether—eleven, we are told. The woman at the spinning wheel has four children, the eldest, a boy of 14, the youngest a girl of 2.

The husband is at the war and they have had no news for a year. They were sent to Tashkent last autumn, where they were housed if it can be called so, or huddled together in barracks and badly fed. They were all ill there and left behind the grave of the little girl of 7. The woman's face lights up for a moment as she describes the cemetery which was so beautiful and had such lovely crosses, but the weary, hopeless look comes back again when we ask if they are better here. Yes, better, but what is it when you think of home and the farm and the sheep and the cattle; here we have had no money now for seven weeks and there are only a few kopeks to be earned at the spinning—you are fortunate if you can get any to do at all—and when the Winter comes what can we do? the children have no boots and these are all the clothes we have, and her voice trembles and she struggles to keep back the tears. The clothes are rough home-spun linen with beautiful patterns woven in red and are fairly clean. The close little room swarms with flies and all the children have sore eyes.

"The other woman also comes from Grodna and has been to Tashkent, too, but she has left two graves there and her husband died of cholera on the way. The eldest boy is 16 and has gone today to work for their landlord, who lives in the larger house on the street. He will earn a little bread in return for his work in the fields, but tomorrow he may not be wanted and will have nothing to do. There are five children altogether and they would like to go to school next winter if they can, but they have no warm clothes and no boots. The mother cannot find any work to do and said if she could only get some knitting or some spinning she would be happy. None of the peasants here weave as they do in the districts from which the refugees come.

"The woman who looked worn and suffering and as if she were 60 instead of 40, told how they had missed her mother and her sister on the way and then her husband died and then three of her daughters. The two little girls of 9 and 6 who are left are delicate, and the fair-haired good-looking boy of 16 seemed very depressed, for there is no work to be had and he has no warm clothes or boots for the Winter.

"As we go from house to house it is the same story. The long weary journey from home, first with the horse and cart and some of the household possessions (some they buried before they left and wonder if they will ever find them again), these then have to be sold or left and then the journey day after day in the crowded train in which people were ill or dying, then the miserable Winter in Tashkent where hundreds died, and now the months in this out of the way village where the inhabitants are kindly but very poor and ignorant, where work is scarce and food is dear, and where now they do not even receive their scant allowance. As these men and women talk, often so quietly, but often with tears, of all they have gone through and of their anxieties for the future, it becomes very real and almost more than one can bear to listen to it all.

"We shall feel it a great comfort when we have anything to give that may ease their present lot and they realize that the English people's sympathy is shown not only by words, but in some more practical way. We have found many cases suitable to be sent to Mogotova for medical treatment, but we cannot decide definitely about them till we have visited the other villages.

"The need is even greater than I imagined possible and we do long that money may be forthcoming to provide clothes and at least milk or soup for the children when the Winter comes. If you are able to send anything that can be knitted into stockings, that will provide both occupation and clothing. As for clothing, we do hope the bales will come all right via Archangel.

"Blouses (to hang loose at the waist, for they wear them over the skirt), skirts (the brightest colors the best), long chemises and small shawls to go over the head are wanted in any quantity.

"The boots which have been ordered have not yet come. Every family needs boots this winter, only a few of the men have any which are not worn out.

"We have had a visit today from Dr. and Mrs. Fox and have discussed the possibility of their having a dispensary open here one day a week with, if possible, a nurse living here with a relief worker and interpreter.

"We had only been here an hour before a man arrived with his head bound up, wishing it dressed, then a woman desperate with toothache, then a pathetic old man whose son, he said, was dying of fever, would we not go at once and see what we could do to help? We explained we were not doctors, or even nurses, and had no drugs or bandages, and could do no more than give directions common sense dictated. This, and our visiting, shows the need for medical help, but it cannot be managed till other nurses come.

"The work is most interesting, but the saddest it has ever yet been my lot to do."

It will be seen that the need of assistance through the coming Winter is very great and the Committee expect to spend at least $35,000 in the next few months in endeavoring to help the district which has been assigned to them.

YOUNG FRIENDS DAY

By JAMES WOOD

"Old men for counsel; young men for action." That is easy for the old men, for counsel is cheap as compared with action. Doing things costs.

I want to play the old man's role of counsellor, and advise Friends everywhere throughout the land to observe Young Friends' Day on the 26th of the present month, and to make much of it.

In the early days of our branch of the church young Friends were the real builders and the church lost its power when the time came—and alas! how it came—when only members past middle life were recognized as competent for real service.

The critical period with the children and young people of all Protestant churches is the time between the Bible School classes and church membership. Just here they lose their interest and depart in vast numbers. Their active minds see no place that interests and appeals to them, and they reach the deadening verdict of "nothing doing."

We must correct past errors and now is the time. Let all the membership have an interest and show it. Help the young people to find something to do and then help them in the doing. Give them church appointments all the way along, and have a due proportion of them as members of the Yearly Meeting delegations to the Five Years Meeting.

Young people may make some mistakes. Let them make them. The correction of mistakes is one of the best schools of life. We rise by our mistakes, and who of us has not made them? The church must look beyond the present. What shall the future be? It will be what the young people with God's help make it. Make November 26th, 1916, a red-letter day in American Quakerism.

Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE

(Copy of letter from Leonard Wigham describing an incident during political disturbances in the city of Suining, Szechwan., Friends' Mission, Suining, Sze., China, July 3, 1916.)

To make yesterday's proceedings intelligible, I should explain that in consequence of the troubles that arose about Yuan Shi-kai's assumption of the Imperial title, the central authority in Szechwan province became very weak, and various groups of soldiers in different parts declared independence, and called themselves "protectors of the state." The two groups, or juntas, which concerned us here, had their headquarters at Tungchwan (60 miles to the northwest) and Shunking (about the same distance to the east).

These two little provisional governments each cast longing eyes on Suining, which is a fairly opulent commercial city. Both sent proclamations and asked the Suining authorities to declare independence, but to make that independence identical with the independence of the writer's government. Suining halted between two opinions, till a body of a few hundred Tungchwan troops occupied the city, and then, perforce, we became an appanage of the Tungchwan state. The Tungchwan people were more or less orderly in their conduct, but they levied many thousands of dollars from the city treasury and the funds of the Chamber of Commerce. They were with us, in greater or less numbers, for nearly two months, during which the death of Yuan Shi-kai was announced, and other changes took place in the political outlook.

But Tungchwan and Shunking, in spite of superficial reconciliations, remained at loggerheads. Hence the city was alarmed when, on the 28th of June, the news was brought in by spies that a large force of Shunking soldiers were coming over here from the neighboring city of P'ung Ch'i. Some of the merchants, whom we have got to know through the Institute, came to ask us to try to save the city from the fighting which would probably occur if the two parties met. Mr. Curnow, of the Methodist Mission and I wrote a letter to the Shunking people saying there was already a garrison here, and unless they had express orders to come here, there was no special need for their presence. This was of no effect, and the party, several hundred strong, entered Suining in the afternoon of the 29th. No opposition was offered, and they professed perfect friendliness and co-operation with the Tungchwan people. Our merchant friends seemed quite happy for the next two days. But yesterday, Sunday, 2nd of July, the Shunking leaders invited the Tungchwan leaders to their headquarters, and having got them there, forcibly detained them. They also similarly got into their hands the chief civil magistrate of the city and some of the leaders of the merchant body. These latter were friends of ours, and their retention brought mutual friends over here to ask us to see what we could do to save them, as they could get no news, and were afraid of violent measures being adopted.

While we were discussing what we could do we heard that the city gates had been closed, evidently by order of the Shunking people, so that we, who live outside the city, were shut out from our friends inside, and these who had come to see us were cut off from their families. (However, it turned out later on that entrance could be had through the East gate, and they went home that way.) In the meantime they begged us to go and see what we could do to save the city, for this move made us think very likely the two parties were going to fight on the streets. So Dr. Davidson, J. P. Rodwell and I went to the south gate, and asked to be admitted, that we might visit the Shunking officers, passing our visiting cards in under the city gates. After some delay the gates were opened and we were admitted with one servant, everybody else being strictly excluded. We found all the street corners occupied by parties of Shunking soldiers, the shops all shut, and the streets as quiet as a Scotch Sunday. Lines of people stood silently watching as we passed. Arriving at the headquarters of Shunking in a large temple, we were interviewed by one of their chief officers, a man named Fu. He seemed quite friendly to us.

We said that, of course, we were taking no sides, but were simply concerned for the safety of the city, and the lives of the citizens, and if we could do anything that would help towards peace we should be very glad to do so. The officer said that the Tungchwan people were such as could not be tolerated in the city, and unless they left promptly they would be driven out or killed. He knew, however, that this would cause much suffering to the populace, and therefore if the Tungchwan men would all clear out this afternoon (it was now one o'clock) the imprisoned leaders would be released, and the whole party would be allowed to go unmolested, with their arms and baggage. With this message we visited the headquarters, or one of them, of the Tungchwan party. They also received us kindly, with thanks for taking so much trouble. They were not sure whether the other party's assurances were to be trusted. We could only tell them that we really believed they would do as they had promised, and advised them to accept the choice as left to them. We also promised to go with them to a considerable distance outside the city.

We had to go back and forth twice between the two places, before fairly satisfactory terms were finally accepted. Once we interviewed the imprisoned Tungchwan leaders and got letters from them to their henchmen. Various hitches occurred, and much palaver took place. Mr. Curnow, who lives inside the city, was associated with some of these discussions. At last, after four o'clock, the poor Tungchwan troops turned out in the rain, with their arms, forced laborers to carry their baggage, and made their way, unwillingly enough, to the north gate, we three foreigners bringing up the rear. I suppose there were three or four hundred in the procession. We accompanied them out of the city, and for about a mile further, to the top of a hill, where we halted in the shelter of a big tree.

Here we proposed, that as they had left the city, and we according to promise had accompanied them so that no foul play should be attempted, we should go back and demand the fulfilment of the terms, and the release of the Tungchwan leaders. The officers with us, and the soldiers, insisted that only one of us should go, and made it pretty clear that they were prepared to enforce their wishes. So, as we realized that they had good reason to mistrust the bona fides of their opponents, we fell in with this without resistance, and J. P. Rodwell went back to the city, and Dr. Davidson and I remained with the Tungchwan friends, in the capacity, perhaps, of hostages. We moved after a while to rather better quarters, a small temple where we could have shelter, and here began a long vigil.

It was four hours before we got any news of our colleague. The soldiers who were with us guarded us, and stopped all passers-by, fearing the spreading of news of their movements, I presume. Darkness came on, and we still waited with what patience we could. Fortunately we could communicate with home, so we got a little food. About eleven o'clock we received a note from J. P. Rodwell saying the Shunking people demanded that all three of us should be allowed to go to the west gate before they would release the prisoners. Our Tungchwan friends feared a trap, but we told them they might send an escort of soldiers with us. They were another hour debating the question, but about midnight they agreed, and we went down, with about ten soldiers and two officers, to the dispensary premises outside the west gate. J. P. Rodwell came along pretty soon and reported progress. He then returned to the city to try to get the prisoners out that night, and we waited at the dispensary for another two hours.

After 2 A. M. he returned without his men, but said the Shunking men faithfully promised to release them at daybreak. Our Tungchwan friends, or guard, accepted the position, and without any demur on their part we went to bed, getting a good sleep from four to six. Early in the morning we were asked to go to the west gate, and at about seven the prisoners were duly released, and we were intrusted with a message to the Tungchwan people to make haste and get a long distance from the city. So matters stand at present. At any rate a street fight has been prevented, though one does not know what the next development may be.

(Signed) LEONARD WIGHAM.

Leonard Wigham, the writer of the above letter, is one of the senior and most trusted missionaries of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association. His letter is typical, both of political conditions which have prevailed in many cities throughout the greater part of this province, and also of the valuable mediation and saving of life which have been accomplished by missionaries in probably over a score of cases in Szchwan. In Suining no great issue, or principle, was at stake, it being simply a petty quarrel between rival factions, and the same may be said of almost all the disorders which have disturbed the province, especially since the first larger question of Republicanism versus Monarchy was settled by the cancellation of the latter.

Since the above letter was written Suining has been taken possession of by at least one other party of soldiers, but entirely without bloodshed I believe.

HOW TO WORSHIP

Over the entrance to the little parish church at Hawarden, England, where William Ewart Gladstone worshiped, are inscribed these directions, which are suggestive for any worshiper, in any church:

"On your way to church. On your way to the Lord's house, be thoughtful, be silent, or say but little, and that little good. Speak not of other men's faults; think of your own, for you are going to ask forgiveness. Never stay outside; go in at once; time spent inside should be precious.

In church. Bow down very humbly and pray. Spend the time that remains in prayers. Remember the awful presence into which you have come. Do not look about to discover who are coming in, nor for any other cause. It matters not to you what others are doing; attend to yourself. Fasten your thoughts firmly on the holy service; do not miss one word. This needs a severe struggle; you have no time for vain thoughts. The blessed Spirit will strengthen you if you persevere."

A BEAUTIFUL HOME LIFE

A temperance speaker relates a bit of experience that is as interesting as it is suggestive. She was to speak at a certain small town, where she arrived in the afternoon. At the station the visitor was met by the president of the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union, a soft-voiced woman with a young face beneath silver hair.

As the two ladies were riding along the shady street, pupils from the public schools began to throng the sidewalks.

At a crossing a bright-faced boy stood waiting for the ladies to pass, and lifted his cap with a courteous gesture and sunny smile.

The hostess leaned from the carriage with a pleasant greeting, and the gray cap covered the brown curls again as they drove on. "One of your Sunday School class?" ventured the speaker. "No," replied the hostess; "my only son, Harry."

As they approached the home, they nearly overtook a young girl of about fourteen, and a middle-aged man, walking briskly. The man was listening in a deferential way to the girls' merry chatter. At the gate they paused, the man lifted his hat in a parting salutation, as he held the gate for the girl to precede him, then, bowing, he passed on.

"This is our home; that is my husband."

And you have another guest, or is the young lady a caller?" asked the speaker.

That is our Margaret, our oldest child. She and her father are great chums."

That evening, at the daintily appointed tea table, the youngest child, a bashful girl of seven or eight years, had the misfortune to drop and break a fragile piece of china. Her face crimsoned with distress, and the violet eyes lifted to her mother's face were large with gathering tears. The speaker winced, dreading discordant notes where all had been harmonious. "I hope they will not send her away in disgrace—poor little thing!" her thoughts ran.

But even as she thought, with perfect courtesy the mother spoke the same conventional words of reassurance which she would have used had the honored guest broken the cup. Seeing the quivering lip of her cherished child—her guest from God—she added, softly: "Mother knows you are sorry, dearest. Just let it pass and overcome it," while the father, with ready tact, engaged the speaker in conversation.

The speaker was charmed. That evening, walking with another white-ribboner, she could not resist saying, "Your president seems wonderfully blest in her children."

"Yes, but she has anxieties as well as the rest of us," was the unexpected reply. "Margaret has grown so winning that even the college boys would walk around by the high school to walk and talk with her, until her father quietly happened to be returning from the court house to his office past their house every time. Yes, it does take his time, but he is queer. He thinks that is one of the things his time is for. He thinks it pays."—Northwestern Chr. Advocate.

WHO IS TO BE PITIED?

At the recent missionary conference held at Garden City, Long Island, a Belgian expressed, in tender, touching words, sympathy for the German missions in India, South Africa and elsewhere, which the war has reduced to dire extremities. Coming from a Belgian, it was all the more significant. After all, there is a high plane of Christian fellowship above the noise and din of battle. In that sphere there are no racial prejudices, and when the war is over, the Christians of the now contending nations will be the first to cement the bonds that have been broken. But the Belgian followed this with a statement which was, if anything, still more startling. Referring to the disaster that had befallen his own country, he said: "Don't pity us; pity yourselves. For you have only grown rich out of the war." "Only grown rich." That word "only" has a sting in it which it will do well for Americans to feel. What the Belgian meant to drive home was the thought that while his people and the other suffering nations were being disciplined into placing a higher value on religion and learning their spiritual lessons, the people of the United States have grown rich in material things only, and on the adversity of the peoples at war. There is much in this to make us humble. Where is the nation that can stand much material prosperity?—The Lutheran.

JENNY LIND'S REPLY

The Swedish Nightingale, Jenny Lind, won great success as an operatic singer, and money poured into her purse. Yet she left the stage when singing her best and never went back to it. She must have missed the money, the fame and the applause of thousands, but she was content to live in privacy.

Once an English friend found her sitting on the steps of a bathing machine on the sea sands, with a Lutheran Bible on her knee, looking out into the glory of a sunset. They talked and the conversation drew near to the inevitable question, "O, Madame Goldschmidt, how is it that you ever came to abandon the stage at the very height of your success?"

"When, every day," was the quiet answer, "it made me think less of this (laying a finger on the Bible) and nothing at all of that (pointing to the sunset), what else could I do?"

The man who has no love in his heart will render no service of love, but he whose heart is full of love will always be doing his Master's work and performing some beautiful service and doing some noble deed and thereby making this world a little better place to live in.—Leonard Guess.

The $60,000 Program

TWO OBJECTIONS ANSWERED

It Can't Be Done.

Some people are telling us it can't be done. They say if the Board of Missions received only $42,000 last year for current expenses, it is hopeless to expect to raise $60,000 this year.

There are some things happening just now, however, that make us wonder if it is after all such a hopeless undertaking. A letter has just come telling how one meeting has nearly doubled its missionary offering. Last year they raised $115 for missions. They had an every-member canvass a few days ago and in one afternoon raised $195. It took a great deal of work for several weeks to prepare for the canvass. But they say it was worth all it cost.

Another letter this week tells how an entire Quarterly Meeting is being worked for missions. The Missionary Superintendents are busy visiting the local meetings, telling them about the effort being made this year to raise $60,000 for Missions, and encouraging Bible School pupils, Young People's Societies, and all members of the meeting to work and give and pray for Missions. Last First Day three different workers were out visiting the meetings of the Quarter in this way.

Entire Yearly Meetings are co-operating. One of the largest has greatly improved its missionary organization this year. The secretary of this Yearly Meeting Missionary Committee is receiving monthly reports from each Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, telling of visits made, of plans that are being used for cultivating the missionary interest and support of every member of every particular meeting.

Now, if every local meeting will work as did the one mentioned above, and if every Quarterly Meeting is cultivated for Missions as is the one already referred to, and finally if the Missionary Committee of every Yearly Meeting will stand behind the Quarterly Meeting and local workers with suggestions, encouragement and a call for frequent reports of work accomplished, can we not raise $60,000 this year as readily as we raised $42,000 last year?

We Have Nothing To Work With.

"You are asking us to make bricks without straw," is an assertion we sometimes hear. "You ask us to raise this year nearly half as much again as was raised last year, but you don't give us the facts about our foreign mission work; at least you don't give it to us in such form as we can use in arousing interest in Missions or in securing larger offerings."

Those who have felt this difficulty will be glad to know how the Board is meeting it. The following material is available for use in connection with this year's $60,000 program:

1. The Annual Report of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, which will be published in the December Number of the Friends Missionary Advocate. If you don't get the Advocate, send a postcard to the office of the Board at Richmond, asking for a copy of the report and one will be sent to your address postpaid. This offer holds only while the supply lasts.

2. An eight-page leaflet entitled, "Essential Facts," which gives the main facts about the Board of Missions and its work, including a con-

A PRAYER ANSWERED

A letter written by one of our missionaries at the Mexican border on the opening day of the annual meeting of the Board of Missions closed with these words: "We are bearing in mind that the annual meeting of the Board begins today and are earnestly praying that heroic steps may be taken in advance along all lines." Before the letter reached the Board office three days later, the prayer had been answered. How the Board of Missions met the situation is revealed by the "Announcement" which appeared on this page last week. It is one of the most important statements the Board has ever issued.

cise statement of the program before us as a church this year. The leaflet is for general distribution. One copy should be in every Friends' home. Enough copies to supply each family will be sent to every meeting which will agree to have them distributed or left in the homes.

3. A sixteen-page folder entitled "Mission Study, 1916-1917," contains a full explanation of how to organize and to conduct mission study classes and reading circles. It also tells what books are best to use, how to secure helps for leaders and other useful suggestions. Copies for limited distribution may be secured from the Yearly Meeting Young People's president or secretary, or from the office of the Board of Missions in Richmond, or the Young Friends Board in Dunreith, Indiana.

4. Mexico Pictures. A packet of pictures illustrating Friends work in Mexico, each picture accompanied by a description, is being prepared. The pictures will be ready January 1st. They will sell for 25c per set. Bible School teachers will find them useful in teaching missions. And they will be very helpful for mission study classes and for private use. Children will find them especially interesting.

5. A booklet entitled "The Pastor a World Leader," the first number in a series of four booklets called "Missionary Ammunition," is being prepared and will be distributed to all Friends pastors about December 1st. These copies will be sent out through the Yearly Meeting Missionary Committees.

6. Stereopticon slides on each of our Mission Fields may be secured for an evening exhibition from the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions. A typewritten lecture accompanies each set of slides. The lecture and slides can be sent to any address for a nominal rental of $1.00, the exhibitor paying transportation charges.

7. Small outline maps of our Mission Fields are being prepared. They will show the location of stations and out-stations. They may be secured in any quantity needed and placed in the hands of Bible School pupils and members of mission study groups. The maps will be ready January 1st. The price will be announced later; it will be very small.

8. News from the Mission Field will be published regularly in the missionary department of The American Friend and in the Missionary Advocate.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

CAN WE AFFORD TO OBSERVE YOUNG FRIENDS DAY?

Some Meeting may ask if she dare observe Young Friends Day, believing that by so doing she is tying herself up with either some "Unsound" or "Too Sound" Movement. Certainly this "Holier than thou" attitude must be risen above. It has been the undoing of every sect, society and church. It has caused many splits among Friends. What are idealistic, hopeful young people to think of the misunderstandings and criticisms found among Friends? Can they gain enthusiasm for a denomination of such a negative attitude? Where is friendliness of spirit, forbearing love, and invincible belief in our brothers? I say it unhesitatingly there is not a Meeting in the United States or Canada that should not observe a Young People's Day. It is not necessary to follow our program. We hope you will make a better one or adapt this one to your needs. No principle in theology or testimony in method is being compromised by such an observation. The purpose of the Young Friends Board is to rally the loyalty of young people to the Friends Church, to fire them with religious zeal and love for Jesus Christ, and to train them in the most efficient methods of church work. We emphasize several minor points but these three are the main ones. Will you remember them? Why stand apart and question? Let us this coming year rally around the standard, "The Entire Church at Its Entire Task." In East, West, North and South enthusiasm should burst forth. Its stimulating invigorating challenge should sweep back and forth across the country. In the face of world crises and reconstruction Friends certainly should unite their forces for God. Surely our light will be removed unless we combine our energies for promulgating His Kingdom. Let us fix our eyes on our task instead of each other. Young Friends Day can be made a powerful factor in uniting Friends throughout the country.

YOUNG FRIENDS DAY CONVERSATION

In a recent conversation a young Friend was asked if his Meeting was going to observe Young Friends Day. His reply may be of interest to some one. "Why, of course, we are going to observe it," said he. "Any Meeting that would not is unworthy the support of her young people. This is the first real effort that the church in general has made for us young people and we are going to stand by her."

PLANS OF SERVICE

Some weeks back, we sent out the request in these columns for information regarding Young People's Study Classes and Christian Endeavor Societies. The following have responded. Will not others let us hear? Tell us of your aims, methods of study, and program for the year. We will pass the information on to others as we are doing here. Don't forget to write us after you have observed Rally Day and tell us what sort of a meeting you had, and something you hoped to accomplish.

Name: Young Friends Society of Newport.

Time: First day at 6:15 P. M.

Average attendance: Ten, with one older person present.

Have a roll call, but no constitution or by-laws.

Meeting opens by vocal prayers by many of the members.

Aim: "To look up and to lift up."

Study: At the present we are studying the book of St. John. Take a chapter a week. Have a different leader each Sabbath, who speaks on the chapter, then the meeting is thrown open for questions on the chapter, or interesting remarks.

Have a Question Box. Interesting questions are brought in for discussion.

Officers: President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer and Corresponding Secretary.

FROM FRIENDSWOOD, TEXAS

"There is at this Meeting, so far away from any other Quarterly Meeting, a live, a very much alive, Christian Endeavor Society with about 25 members.

In our Sabbath School there are organized classes most of whom have regular monthly meetings. Some of these classes have done special work in study classes in Friends History and in other work as Missionary, Social Service, etc. But just at present I know of no carefully planned study work being taken up by our strictly young people, owing perhaps, to school work being on at present. In our Academy, we have Bible in the course of study and none of the students balk at it but are glad to take the work.

The Endeavorers have completed the little book in connection with the Efficiency work. Their Efficiency Chart as I see it on the wall of the Meeting room is becoming almost covered with the red seals and the thermometer continues to rise, although but 25 members, yet the older people like to attend and help out in the work so that one might think there were 50 members instead of 25 if one should drop in to the Endeavor meeting.

It certainly is an inspiring thing to come in contact with these earnest educated, refined people holding such splendid services, and doing such good work for the Master in all the various lines of church activity, and that too, in this so recently storm-swept region. One year ago last August, almost all lost a home or barn blown down and furnishings crushed or destroyed from rain and flying debris. There is no note of complaint, but only praise to God that all lives were spared even though some were in houses blown to pieces. Yesterday we took dinner with a family whose house had been blown 25 feet from its foundation and part of the building wrenched away. There were five of us who sat down to dinner, by using a rocking chair and an organ stool we had enough for all to sit on at the table. So meagerly now are these houses, many of them, furnished, and the people what we well-to-do Northerners might call poor, yet richer in comparison than many Indiana people, given to hospitality, serving God with a thankful heart, beautiful indeed to see, and maintaining their little Academy at great sacrifice too.

This year has been very favorable and we are having better times all around.

NOTICES

Christmas Holidays are coming on. Why not ask your Meeting to hold a revival service led by a Gospel Team of College Students? These broad-shouldered, consecrated chaps will no doubt give an entirely new vision to your young people. Send requests to our Board and we will put you in touch with some teams, now in training.

PEACE DEPARTMENT

NOTE—It is hoped that this page may present in brief form a record of activities typical of the work Friends are doing for peace. News items, short, pointed arguments, suggested plans, all will be welcome, and will be used subject to the limitations of space and the proper distribution and arrangement of the matter received. CONSCRIPTION AUTHORIZED BY CONGRESS

A correspondent from Knightstown, Indiana, asks for information in regard to the clause in the National Defense Act passed by the last Congress which provides for the conscription of American citizens in war time. At the time of the passing of the bill, it seems that few even of the Congressmen knew that the clause was there, and in view of this fact it is thought that the objectionable clause can be removed when Congress meets again; it at least seems certain that a very determined effort in this direction will be made.

The history of the conscription clause is given as follows by the American Union Against Militarism, in a bulletin sent out late last summer:

When President Wilson signed, on June 3, the so-called "National Defense Act," sometimes called the Hay-Chamberlain act, he signed a law which provides, in time of war, for the conscription of American citizens between the ages of 18 and 45.

He didn't realize it at the time. At least there is every reason to think that he didn't. Certainly very few of the Congressmen and Senators who voted for the army reorganization law, knew that there was a general conscription clause in it, slipped into the law by Hayden of Arizona, clinched in conference committee by Hay and Chamberlain and unwittingly adopted by both Houses.

When the Hay bill was reported out to the House by the Military Affairs Committee, it contained no provisions whatever for conscription, unless the technical provision permitting the President to "draft" the National Guard into the Federal service in time of war be so considered. But on Wednesday, March 22, Chairman Hay presented a "committee amendment" which had been drafted, he said, by Hayden of Arizona. This amendment provided for the establishment of "reserve battalions" in time of war.

The "reserve battalion" is an English idea. When a regiment is sent to the front, to be cut to pieces under fire, a "reserve battalion" is established at the home depot to secure recruits, train them and feed them to that particular regiment at the front as rapidly as they are needed. A sensible scheme and in marked contrast with the American plan, which has been to form all the new recruits into new regiments, regardless of how badly cut to pieces the older regiment on the firing line may be. When the veteran regiments in the Civil War were reduced to three and four hundred men, the practice was to consolidate several regiments, producing vast confusion in regimental records and no end of jealousy and friction among the officers. Hayden's amendment would abolish all that.

But down in the middle of the section was the following clause:

"If for any reason there shall not be enough volunteer enlistments to keep the reserve battalions at the prescribed strength, a sufficient number of the unorganized militia shall be called into the service of the United States to maintain each of such battalions at the proper strength."

The "unorganized militia" means all male citizens, with certain specified exemptions, between the ages of 18 and 45. The whole section was read in the usual sing-song by the clerk. Mr. Hay made a somewhat indefinite explanation of the reserve battalion idea; Minority Leader Mann quizzed him a little; then Hayden was called upon. He made an enthusiastic speech on behalf of the "reserve battalion" idea, ignoring the conscription feature in it. That closed the debate. The amendment was put to vote and carried viva voce. When the bill went to the Conference Committee, where meetings are secret and without official record, the word "called" was changed to "drafted."

But when Messrs. Hay and Chamberlain reported to their respective Houses the full text of the compromise bill, neither thought to mention the existence of the draft clause. The unwritten law is that the conference committee is bound fully to inform both branches of Congress of all significant changes made in a bill in committee. This was not done. Only by luck or the greatest industry on the part of the individual senator and congressman could the existence of this "joker" have been discovered. The thing was buried in the middle of Section 79, the title of which: "Reserve Battalions for Recruit Training" indicated a technical and wholly innocent provision. There is, as we happen to know, the greatest indignation in both the House and the Senate at the lack of candor displayed by the two men responsible for putting the thing through. Section 79 could never have passed either House had its real character been understood.

It may be suggested that the House should have grasped the conscription character of the amendment from the presence of the word "called." But the word called is associated with the idea of volunteers. In time of war, when enlistments fall off, the President issues a fresh "call for volunteers." It is a stereotyped phrase. Furthermore, on the very next day, when the House was still discussing the Hay bill and Representative Miller of Minnesota was trying to see if the language regarding the "drafting" of the National Guard could not be softened somewhat by providing that the National Guard should be "ordered" or "called" to the colors in time of war, Chairman Hay insisted that "called" didn't mean the same as "drafted."

MR. MILLER: Could we not substitute the words "call into the service of the United States"?

MR. HAY: There would be the same trouble with that language.

MR. CANNON: Why the same trouble? Why not amend it so that it would read:

"He shall call by proclamation into the military service of the United States," instead of:

"He shall draft into the military service of the United States"?

MR. HAY: The trouble about that is that it is the nature of the troops we are dealing with. Now, he can call the volunteers into the service of the United States, but this language is necessary in order that they may cease to be militia.

But if the word "called" disarmed or misled the House, Mr. Hay knew what was intended by that language, for in Conference Committee, as we have said, the word "called" was changed to "drafted" and the conscription character of the section was clinched.

SAND ARROYA MONTHLY MEETING

On the evenings of September 13th and 14th, Theo. Foxworthy, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was with us and gave us two very helpful and instructive sermons.

Arrangements have been made for Ira B. Hoskinson to preach for us the first Sunday in the month.

A gospel team has been organized in our meeting with a membership of twenty-three. Two appointments have been made and much interest is being manifested by all.

Our C. E. Society appreciates the article in The American Friend under date of September 28, written by Thomas E. Jones. We are glad of the suggestion of opportunities opened and will be thankful for any contributions along the lines mentioned.

DENVER QUARTERLY MEETING

Denver Quarterly Meeting was held at Colorado Springs, Colorado, October 20-22. Delegates were in attendance from three of the six Monthly Meetings. Reports from four of these meetings indicated good work done. Denver has no pastor at present, but the C. E. and meeting are held with interest and profit. Boulder Friends are making a great effort to erect a new church building.

At Deer Trail one of the country churches has been moved to the village and is being put in repair for occupancy. Colorado Springs is doing advanced work. An active missionary society has recently been organized. Our Extension Pastor, I. B. Hoskinson, is looking after some of the out-stations as opportunity offers. The work calls for more money for the prosecution of the same.

Clinton Nellis, of Deer Trail, preached three excellent sermons which were much appreciated by Friends and members of other denominations who were in attendance. Preston Lane and wife, both former pastors at the Springs, attended some of the sessions and took an active part. Nixon and Minnie Rich of Kansas Yearly Meeting arrived on Saturday evening. A storm prevented them from leaving home as early as they had anticipated. They live in Southeastern Colorado, some two hundred miles away. They crossed this distance in their auto to attend our Quarterly Meeting. They took an interested and helpful part in the three meetings held on Sabbath.

Abbie Fry has been confined to her home since her serious accident on July 30. She sat through four sessions of the meeting, manifesting her usual interest. She greatly enjoyed this privilege, and also the company of Friends in her home. Louisa Hoag of Denver, interested the women in making articles to send to the sick and wounded soldiers who are being cared for in Switzerland. This work began the following Monday and is being executed with alacrity. "Forward" is the determination of Denver Quarterly Meeting.

CORRESPONDENCE

British Expeditionary Force, France,
October 9, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

The arrival of The American Friend with the note respecting our address has suggested to me the thought that your readers would be interested in some account of the work that I am engaged in here. I have to be very careful what I write, and cannot tell you the size of the camp without betraying military secrets.

I arrived here rather more than two weeks ago, and am living in a little room in this hut, another of the workers, a Scotch evangelist, occupying a similar one next to mine. We are on high ground and only three miles from the sea, so that the air is very bracing and keeps us in good health for the arduous work in which we are engaged.

We get our own meals, and with the help of some of the soldiers, take care of and keep the large hut and smaller rooms clean. We provide writing materials free and thousands of letters go from here every day to loved ones in Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. We also provide newspapers and magazines, also a lending library and chess.

But the spiritual work is by far the most important. We have a Bible reading for Christian soldiers every afternoon for an hour, attended by about 100, and we have a gospel service every night from 7:15 to 8 o'clock, followed by an after meeting at which every night numbers of men decide for Christ, and sign our decision card.

The hall seats 500 and is crowded every night. Last night I preached to between 600 and 700 men, every bit of standing room being occupied while men stood in crowds in the doorways. Their attention was quiet and earnest and one could hear the clock tick at times, so wonderful was the stillness. At the close many accepted Christ as their Saviour.

One feels that the work is tremendously urgent and important, as many men are moved on from here to the firing line every day and soon enter eternity.

There is another hut belonging to the Soldiers' Christian Association in another part of the camp, nearly as large as this. We are proving here that it is not necessary to have cards and billiards and comic songs and worldly entertainments to attract men. "Christ crucified" is our theme and we are proving that the old gospel is still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes."

May I ask the thousands of readers of The American Friend to share in this soul saving work by remembering us in prayer? My fellow-worker and I share the preaching and we have three devoted lady workers helping in other ways. Many thousands of men have been converted in this hut, which has been open for more than a year.

With warm remembrances to my many friends in America,

ARTHUR DANN.

A plan in the head is only worth half as much as a plan in operation.

THE IOWA PAGE

RURAL CONFERENCES

At the session of Iowa Yearly Meeting, Ancil E. Ratliff, of Fairmount, Indiana, gave some very stirring addresses upon the matter of Rural Church Activities. So much interested were the people of Iowa Yearly Meeting that the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of the Yearly Meeting instructed the Superintendent, Charles O. Whitely, to plan for a series of conferences and invite Ancil Ratliff to visit the field and be the principal speaker.

Charles O. Whitely went to Ames and visited the Extension Department of the Agricultural College, and found them ready to co-operate in this work and speakers who are in sympathy with the problems of the Rural Church will be supplied at the different conferences.

Penn College will also be represented in some of the programs and Christian Education will be presented by able speakers from this institution. The conferences are all to be characterized by a deep Spiritual and Evangelistic atmosphere.

Places and dates are as follows:

1. Cedar Creek (near Salem) Thursday and Friday, Nov. 16 and 17.
2. West Branch, Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 20 and 21.
3. Lynnville, Thursday and Friday, Nov. 23 and 24.
4. Bear Creek, Monday evening, Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 27-29.
5. Ackworth, Monday and Tuesday, Dec. 4 and 5.
6. Woolson, Thursday and Friday, Dec. 8 and 9.
7. Bangor, Monday evening, Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 11 to 13.
8. New Providence, Wednesday evening, Thursday and Friday, Dec. 13-15.

Besides the above schedule, several extra datings have been arranged for single services at places that can be reached while changing from one conference to another.

EVANGELISTIC WORK

Honey Creek Quarterly Meeting was held in Iowa Falls October 6-8. Each session was peculiarly uplifting, under the felt presence of the Lord. The message on Saturday was brought by Leroy Hawks, the new pastor at Illinois Grove. Charles O. Whitely was also present and had a helpful part in the meeting. He remained in Iowa Falls for a few days and held meetings each evening. These meetings were a source of refreshing and spiritual power to the whole church.

Carrie Butler, pastor at Paton, attended a meeting of the Summer Assembly Board in Oskaloosa and then visited with and assisted Viola Smith in her meetings at Woolson October 12.

Milo Reece of Oskaloosa, preached at Springdale October 15. His messages were well received and he was invited to return at a later date.

Raymond Renaud, of Lynnville, is preaching each Sabbath at Olivet and Leighton, two churches, not Friends, not far from Oskaloosa; Henry Bogue is preaching each Sabbath morning at Bloomfield Meeting. Both of these young men are students in Penn College.

The Friends of Bangor Quarterly Meeting held an all-day meeting at Nevada. A large company of people gathered and an interesting time was experienced. One feature of the occasion was a donation of provisions to the pastor, Allen Jay, and family. Nevada is a small meeting and unable to do much in the matter of finances. Allen Jay has done a faithful work here and this was a splendid expression of the confidence and good will of the Friends of the whole Quarterly Meeting.

Charles O. Whitely, through personal visitation, has arranged for Rural Problems' Conferences in Cedar Creek, West Branch, Lynnville, New Providence, Bangor and Bear Creek. One or two other places will likely have a conference, yet to be arranged for.

A visit to Ames College met with a hearty response on the part of the extension department and they will provide for speakers who will work in full sympathy and accord with the purposes of the Conferences. Communities where these are to be held should put forth unusual efforts to have the various meetings advertised. There is every reason to believe that not only information but inspiration will come to every attender upon the sessions of the conferences. The more people there the more will gain this help and the greater impact will the meetings have on the community.

It is quite important that the Church as a whole shall feel a responsibility for the conference so as to place the spiritual power of the Church around it and to cause the community to realize that the church is vitally interested in it. The attitude which the local Meeting assumes toward these Conferences will determine their value. Surround every speaker with a circle of prayer and results will be of one sort. Fail in this and look upon these Conferences as something entirely outside the realm of prayer and the whole community will be disappointed.

Oskaloosa College Ave. Meeting observed "Auto Day" on October 29. It was a meeting for elderly people, shut-ins, members of the Home Department of the Bible School as well as a meeting for owners of autos. Arrangements were in charge of the Devotional and Press committees. Quite a little press notice was given, the mail was used and telephones called into service. Owners of autos were asked to look up people who otherwise could not get to meeting, and invite them to ride with them. The front of the Meeting House was decorated with auto tires, chains, horns, etc. The Mayor of the city gave a talk on the city auto ordinance and the pastor, E. H. Stranahan, spoke on "Safety First." A hard rain during Saturday night interfered with some of the plans, but nevertheless, the meeting was quite worth while.

D. B. Cook, superintendent of Evangelistic work in Bear Creek Quarter, paid a visit to the Meetings of that Quarter situated in the far western part of the State; the latter part of October.

A Request.—To aid in making this department of The American Friend more interesting and helpful, pastors, evangelists and others are urged to send news items of events taking place in your Meetings to E. H. Stranahan, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

EVERY YOUNG FRIEND IN IOWA YEARLY MEETING ENROLLED!

This is the slogan of our Young People's work just now. In accordance with the Sixth goal of our C. E. Union program for this year, the Enrollment Campaign is now begun. For some time the Young Friend's Board of the Five Year's Meeting through its secretaries has been urging the various Yearly Meetings to make this Enrollment Campaign. Up until the present time nothing definite or systematic has been done about the matter here in Iowa.

At our recent Yearly Meeting, however, the Resolutions Committee decided that the time had come when this matter should be taken up in earnest. They also decided that we would secure the names and addresses, together with certain other information concerning the young people of our church here in Iowa, not only to be forwarded to the Young Friends Board but that we as an Executive Committee of the C. E. Union should keep duplicate copies of all cards filled out and place them on file with our Secretary. If this Enrollment is made thorough and complete it will be of very great advantage to our Young People's work. Not only this, but the various Committees of our Yearly Meeting can also have access to this very valuable information.

It is a big task to undertake to get all of the young people of our Yearly Meeting enrolled. But it is a task that is well worth while and one that ought to be undertaken. A number of persons out over the Yearly Meeting have been asked to become responsible for this work in their various Quarterly and Local Meetings.

Remember—We want every young friend in Iowa Yearly Meeting Enrolled! whether you are a member of a C. E. Society or not has nothing to do with this Enrollment Campaign. We want all the Young People of our Yearly Meeting Enrolled. Help to make this complete in your Meeting when the Enrollment is begun!

C. E. DEPARTMENT

Lynnville, Iowa, Oct. 23, 1916.

Dear Pastors and C. E. Workers:

As we take a retrospective view of the Junior C. E. work, it is with a certain amount of discouragement, since we have only five Junior Societies with 133 members. Several Societies have been laid down, either from lack of time, interest or a suitable person for superintendent. We realize that in order to keep the church alive, we must fit the young people to take the place of the older ones. The C. E. is a training school for the church, so the children should be trained in the Junior for the Young People's Societies.

As this is the age of efficiency we need all the training we can get for Christ and the church. Hence I believe that every child from the age of eight to twelve or thirteen should be enrolled in the Junior C. E. Let me urge every pastor or anyone who is especially interested to arouse interest among the Juniors and organize societies wherever it seems wise. Let us make this the best year for Junior work we have ever known.

Yours in C. E. work,

TACY E. RATCLIFF,
Junior Supt.

AT EARLHAM, IOWA

Sunday, October 8 was "Rally Day" in the Friends Church, and as such was a very considerable success through its stimulation of attendance and revivification of interest in religious matters. The morning services were united in one, in the course of which the work of the Adult department was related by Richard Haworth, of the Home department by Mrs. Stribling, and of the Cradle Roll by Mrs. Brauer. The Sunday School Superintendent, A. J. Hadley, also gave an interesting talk upon "How much each person becomes valuable in the right place."

The church was nearly filled in the evening for the service which was to be the crowning event of the day, the building of a ship, consisting in a figurative way of a "Ship of Salvation to the Heathen." It was a real ship, however, nearly four feet in length, and complete in every detail, from keel to masts and sails. Sixteen parts were required, furnished by as many different persons, and as each was handed to the master builder, Marion Compton, and his assistant, Wilfred Haworth, it was accompanied by a short talk. Meanwhile the ship took form upon its pedestal and was finally completed, whereupon a number of the little folks brought up bags of coins to be placed upon its deck as a cargo to the mission field.

A charming tableau then came in to being, for five little girls, representative of Faith, Hope, Truth, Love and Patience, took their places in a half circle upon the platform; and when the lights in the house were extinguished, it was seen that the white clad little ones carried flashlights which they flashed merrily as they sang.

In the background appeared the American flag held by Lane Wilcox, adjoining the flag of Christianity held by Charles Allen; and between them, Miss Lois Hoskins, who brought the two together, typifying the unity of Christianity and the American nation.

The choir gave frequent appreciated selections. Mr. Haworth was interesting in his remarks upon "The Boat as a Missionary Factor."

Another unique feature of the day was the distribution of many cards entitled, "A Campaign of Tens," whose purpose was to enlist their owners in the performance of ten special lines of endeavor during the ten weeks from October 15 to December 24.—Earlham Paper.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

November 26

Topic—The Grace of Gratitude. Ps. 107:1-43. (Thanksgiving Meeting).

(Plans for the Societies not planning to use the Young Friends Rally Day Program.)

Begin the Meeting by singing the Doxology. While all are standing, let each one repeat some text on praise of thanksgiving. As these texts are given the Endeavorers may be seated.

Choose hymns of thankfulness. The offering may either be money for Missions, or for any special work which demands your attention, or it may be fruit and vegetables for some needy neighbor. This can be attractively arranged in the front of the room, and left to the care of the Home Missions or Social Committee.

A young girl in Scotland was in danger of perishing in a storm, when the stream was in flood. She vowed that if God would save her life and help her in the future, she would build a bridge over the dangerous chasm. Her prayer was heard. She lived to build the bridge, and to leave an endowment for the poor of the parish. On the keystone of the bridge were written these words: "God and We." That was the secret of success in her life-work.

In the November issue of THE WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION we read some striking paragraphs on how We Need Thanksgiving Day. When the "Lady Elgin" went down only a few yards off the shore near Evanston, Ill., with her precious human cargo, the crowds watched from the shore powerless to help; all save Nat Spencer, who was a powerful man and trained swimmer, plunged into the water again and again until he had saved twenty-three women. Nat Spencer went out into life an invalid, and not one of the twenty-three women whom he had saved that day, said thank you! A busy New York man was grateful to the agent at the little country station where he had taken his family for their vacation. He wrote the president of the road congratulating him on having such a kind and intelligent agent at this place. This letter brightened the day for the busy Superintendent, and may have changed the entire career of the young man in the country depot.

Have you said "Thank You" for some kindness which you have received from one who "is paid to serve you any way?" The clerks, the watchman at the railroad crossing, the elevator boy, the letter carrier, the milk man, the grocer boy, the girl at the Telephone Exchange? When she has tried especially hard to get your party, have you called her again and told her how much you have appreciated that?

"Gratitude ought not to be a one day virtue; it should become the lubricant that eases and softens the machinery of daily life."

CHURCH AT WORK

Newmarket, Canada—On November 5, at the Friends meeting house, a very successful social was held on behalf of the Sabbath School. A program, which was composed of a dialogue, cartoon drawing and pianoforte solos, etc., was very much enjoyed by the good crowd that attended. Some of the students and Friends of Pickering College came down and took part. After the program we all adjourned to the school room, where refreshments were served. The proceeds, which amounted to nearly $20.00, went in aid of the S. S. funds. Everybody seemed sorry when the time came to separate.

Friends Chapel, Ohio—Van Wert Quarterly Meeting was held here November 4 and 5. There was a good attendance and spirit. Pastors were present from the various Monthly Meetings, among them being three young men pastors, Fred Bouse, Clifford Pearson and Mearl Wilson. Truman C. Kenworthy, General Superintendent, was also present and rendered acceptable service. Meetings were held on Friday night, Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night, as well as the meetings for business on Saturday.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—On the evening of October 27th the C. E. Society of the meeting here came together in the Sunday School rooms of the meeting house for its annual banquet and election of officers. Sixty-three persons were present and one of the most enjoyable evenings of the year was experienced. After a four course banquet which was filled with much laughter and fine music, toasts were given by Elmer D. Gildersleeve, Mrs. Albert Shepard, Stuart E. Barton, Ira V. Warren, Miss Minnie Myers and D. H. Lewis, the pastor, the latter acting as toastmaster. The toasts were not only filled with many witticisms, but many helpful suggestions and criticisms were offered for the betterment of the work of the Society.

At the close of the evening Mr. Lewis set forth the following slogan for the new year, "Get one," and a "Get One" Club was launched which was joined by almost every one present. It is planned to keep this slogan before the minds of the young people by the hanging of an electric sign in the front of the meeting room, and a list of the members of the club is to be posted with a blank space for the name of the new member secured. The Society looks forward to a prosperous year.

On Monday evening, the 30th, the Sabbath School of the meeting assembled for a Hallowe'en social. About 160 persons were present to enjoy the games and the refreshment of the evening. The rooms were beautifully decorated and in the middle of the room was placed the witches kettle over a fire of sticks which glowed yet did not burn. After refreshments were served two witches appeared and amid wierd music they made strange motions over the pot, which suddenly belched forth flames and smoke and fumes, and out of the smoke there came a huge birthday cake, borne in the hands of one of the witches and presented to the pastor, D. H. Lewis, as a reminder that they not only celebrated Hallowe'en but his birthday as well. The evening was brought to a close by singing and speech-making which was much enjoyed by all.

Mt. Airy, N. C.—Our new pastor, Henry McKinley, and family arrived August 20, and went immediately to the parsonage. There they were welcomed by the ladies of the church who had prepared dinner for them. We are glad to have these Friends with us for the coming year, and feel that they will be a great help and blessing to us. We are glad to have Roy Mitchell with us for the winter, as he will be such a help in the C. E. Society.

Quarterly Meeting convened at White Plains August 23 with a good attendance. We had helpful talks by several persons especially Lewis McFarland, the General Superintendent, Henry McKinley and Samuel Pickett. John Kittrell and wife and singer spent a few days with us just recently and he gave a very helpful talk at prayer meeting. We are expecting him to hold a series of meetings here after Christmas.

South Salem, Oregon—On Thursday evening, October 26, the South Salem Friends Church gave a chicken pie supper for a get-together of the adult members to discuss the work of the coming year. The supper ended with the following program: "The history of the founding and growth of the church," which was established just four years ago. The pastor, H. E. Pemberton, spoke of "Our Opportunities," which are so numerous if we are only on the lookout for them. The President of the C. E. Society gave a talk on "The Church Needs from the Endeavor Standpoint."

The Missionary Committee explained their plan for raising missionary money by the use of the envelope system. A paper on "Tithing" was read and discussed, showing how many times in the scriptures we are admonished to pay our tithes unto the Lord. "Former and Present Ways of Financing a Church" was a subject considered in another paper. The Finance Committee suggested plans for raising the budget the coming year, and before the company separated two-thirds of the necessary funds were subscribed voluntarily. All felt that it had been a very profitable evening, having been fed socially, physically and spiritually.

Carmel, Ind.—Carmel Meeting has adopted and entered into the financial budget system and are looking forward to a successful year's work for the Master under the leadership of Gertrude Reinier. The Bible School observed Rally Day with a good program and quite an increased attendance. All of the activities of the church seem to be looking up and out in anticipation of a good revival meeting to be conducted by Gertrude Reinier.

NEWS NOTES

The London Friend records a pilgrimage of Friends to Scotland in September of the present year.

Since the opening of the college year about 200 new volumes have been added to the Earlham College library.

Dr. Herbert E. Tebbetts is now located as a physician at Whittier, California, instead of Pasadena, as announced some weeks ago.

No local Friends meeting in America should overlook or ignore the observance of Young Friends Day with appropriate exercises on November 26.

Prof. Edwin Morrison, of Earlham College, has been made a member of the Executive Committee of the Mathematics Section of the Indiana Teachers' Association.

Walter R. and Myrtle M. Williams and Carrie B. Wood have arrived at their destination in China, the latter after a two weeks' stay in that country going on to Nowgong, India.

The November missionary meeting of the First Friends Church of Indianapolis, was held at the meeting house on the evening of November 8, with the younger women of the church in charge.

Albert H. Brown, head of the Friends School at Hobart, Tasmania, recently spent part of two days at the Westtown School, Pennsylvania. On the second evening he gave an account of Australian Friends.

Prof. Harlow Lindley, of Earlham College, was selected as chairman of a committee at the recent State Teachers' Association to prepare a syllabus for a new course of history for the high schools of Indiana.

Charles Lescault and wife began a series of meetings at Westfield, Indiana, on November 5. There is a large attendance and good interest. E. Howard Brown and wife are in pastoral charge of the meeting.

Word has been received at Richmond, Indiana, that Charles E. Tebbets and family arrived safely at Whittier, California, which is to be their future home. They have found a warm welcome there among Friends.

An opening social evening was spent at the local meeting at Toronto, Canada, on the evening of September 29. The company was divided into groups under the names of Elizabeth Fry, Margaret Fell, John Bright and John Woolman. Each group discussed the topic, "The Work of Our Meeting—Is it a Burden or an Inspiration to Me?"

All our subscribers should take note of the announcement in The American Friend last week and this week that on and after January 1, 1917, the subscription price of The American Friend will be advanced to all subscribers by 50 cents. After that time the regular subscription will be $2.00, to ministers $1.50, and to foreign subscribers, $2.50. This is made necessary because of the increased price of paper stock.

Prof. B. W. Kelly, of the Richmond, Indiana, High School, and chairman of the Book and Tract Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting, read a paper before the science section of the Indiana Teachers' Association on "The Relation Between High School Physics and Industry." The paper will be published upon request of the Association in the American Journal of Science.

The November issue of Friends Missionary Advocate is a "China Number," and is an interesting and profitable presentation of the situation in that country.

The W. F. M. S. of the First Church in Indianapolis will support a Bible woman in India this year, in addition to their other usual work.

Canadian Wheat To Feed the World

The war's fearful devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and there is an unusual demand for Canadian wheat. Canada's invitation to every industrious American is therefore especially attractive. She wants farmers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves while helping her to raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and Other lands can be bought at remarkably low prices. Think of the money you can make with wheat at its present high prices, where for some time it is liable to continue. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government this year is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or Canadian Government Agent.

YOUNG FRIEND'S DAY

OBSERVE YOUNG FRIENDS DAY

By TIMOTHY NICHOLSON

I have read with much interest and entire approval, the admirable article on page 854 of last issue of The American Friend under the caption, "Will it pay to observe Young Friends Day?"—I answer emphatically, YES!

A Young People's Christian Endeavor Society should be organized in every Friends congregation of one hundred or more members, and activity encouraged by the pastoral committee, so as to keep in touch with the Five Years Meeting in its spirit and action in creating a Young Friends Board. I regularly attend the C. E. meetings at East Main St., not to take much part in the services, but to encourage by my presence.

I approve special days for special subjects. In many of our Meetings we have Peace Day, Temperance Day, Missionary Days, Mothers' Day, Children's Day, etc., and I approve adding Young Friends Day.

If any pastoral committee cannot arrange to have this on the 26th inst., select a First Day early in the month. Some of the youths should have a part in the service of that day and a liberal collection should be taken for the expenses of the Five Years Young Friends Board.

Richmond, Indiana.

YOUNG FRIENDS DAY

By DAVID M. EDWARDS

The Young Friends movement is one of great significance. It presages more for the future of Quakerism in America than any other one thing. Its success will depend wholly upon the universality with which all young Friends enter heartily into sympathy with it. No arrangements could mean more for its success than to set aside a day which shall be universally observed as Young Friends' Day.

However, the mere setting aside of this day will mean nothing unless Friends everywhere take note of it and observe it in an appropriate and practical manner.

The breadth of this movement makes it possible for young Friends everywhere to enter it unreservedly. No matter what phase the activity of the young Friends in any community may take, it is a part of the young Friends movement.

The purpose of this movement is to correlate all the activities of the younger members of the Society of Friends in America so that a united front will be presented in our forward march.

It is earnestly to be hoped that the day which has been mentioned as Young Friends Day, namely, November 26th, will be universally observed. Let everyone interested in this, make the strongest appeal he possibly can for this observance and let everyone enter heartily into the efforts to make it a success.

BIBLE SCHOOL

November 26

Subject—A Living Sacrifice.

Lesson—Romans 12.

Golden Text—Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service. Romans 12:1.

This letter to the Roman Church was written by Paul from Achaia shortly after he left Ephesus (third missionary journey). In it he expresses his hope of visiting Christians in Rome. We presume also that he outlines in this letter his main conceptions of the doctrinal side of the gospel in order that they might know his views and be prepared to receive him and his doctrines rather than those who were opposing him. It is a great document. One of the most influential in all Christian literature. The portion selected for this lesson is full of instruction well worth long and serious study. It is useless to undertake to adequately present it in these few notes.

The American Revisers have divided the chapter into three sections. The first deals with the idea of the "living sacrifice." The second with the proper estimate of one's self. The third contains a number of practical suggestions regarding the Christian life.

We might search a long time to find a better illustration of what Paul means by "a living sacrifice" than the apostle himself. Certainly few men have suffered more for the sake of the gospel than he. In order to appreciate this afresh read the list of his sufferings as found in II Corinthians 11. This is indeed service which appeals to the reason. It is the Apostle's desire that Christians conform their lives to the soul's eternal purpose rather than to a single—the present age. Men too often forget that they are to live through the present human life and on indefinitely, hence it is utter folly to think only of that which is temporal. Men's minds must be so reconstructed that they may conform to this larger conception. To think in terms of the eternal purpose they must be under divine instruction. To begin to share that life association with God is essential.

One of the very most important tasks of life is to get a proper estimate of one's own real worth. There are those who undervalue themselves and never rise to their possibilities because of this failure. Some overcome natural timidity, rise to the occasion and accomplish great deeds. Such were Moses, Jeremiah and others of the prophets. On the other hand there are many men of little worth who consider themselves exceptional values. In this country we find them by the thousands who are sure they are the most fitted for the government positions they are seeking. By sheer will power or audacity they force themselves into positions beyond their ability to the detriment of the office. More timid people often put up with them rather than have "a scene." The book of Esther presents a character who came to grief while trying to encompass the ruin of one whom he thought of little value, but they hanged Haman on his own gallows. Naaman, the Syrian royal officer, humbled himself in time to secure relief from his leprosy by washing in the Jordan. Many such examples can be found in ancient and modern literature and in practical life. The last section is filled with splendid advice. Few passages contain within so brief compass instruction of such great value. It should be read again and again and each sentence carefully noted.

SOUTHLAND COLLEGE

(Copy of a clipping from the Helena, Arkansas, World.)

Fine Exhibit by Southland College.

"One of the most interesting and creditable exhibits at the Phillips County Fair was that of Southland College. Their exhibit was divided into four divisions: Canning, cabinet work, plain sewing and fancy work. In the plain sewing department there were numerous children's dresses, all well and tastefully made. The material was well chosen and the patterns well designed. The fancy work department had beautiful pieces of embroidery. There were many centerpieces, towels and pillow cases that were exquisitely done, while one of the most attractive pieces at the Fair was the hand-embroidered bed cover in their exhibit. The cabinet work was unusually good. There was a beautiful library table, heavy massive and handsome. Also chairs, magazine stand and davenport. Few people who visited the Fair knew that such work was done in Phillips county. The canning club department had an exhibit that was exceedingly creditable. Every fruit and vegetable you could name, almost, had been preserved for future use. Southland's exhibit was exceedingly good."

Southland also had exhibits of hogs, wheat and other farm products, some of which were awarded first prizes. At the close of the Fair the President of the Fair Board said to H. C. Wolford, President of Southland College, "The Southland exhibits are the best on the grounds, and have done more good for Southland than any other thing that it has ever done." There is great need of contributions of money and other valuables.

THE LITERARY DIGEST

China's teeming population and her many problems will for years to come be a challenge to the Christian Church. Whatever will bestir people in Christian lands and whatever will illuminate the situation ought to be welcomed. Professor John Leighton Stuart (born in China of missionary parentage), who has been in charge of the New Testament Department of the Nanking School of Theology, writing on "Christianity's Appeal to China," says "It is only as a dynamic that Christianity will recommend itself to them, and according to New Testament records and teachings this dynamic is only possible through the indwelling Spirit of God." Every missionary devotee, every man interested in the slowly unfolding life of this ancient people, will profit by reading this masterly article.

The wide range of articles—and a notable interview with Dr. Horton—make this number exceptionally valuable to the minister and those interested in religious subjects.

Suggestive outlines, illustrations and reviews of recent books complete the eighty-six pages of this interesting number.

Coffin—Bertha E. Coffin, daughter of Dr. Wm. V. and Sarah Nicholson Coffin, died in Whittier, California, October 21, 1916, aged seven years and five months. Hers was a beautiful Christian childhood life. "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

Hightower—Elizabeth Hightower, wife of Samuel M. Hightower, was born in Southern Ohio, December 28, 1842, and died at Earlham, Iowa, on October 31, 1916. She was an invalid, unable to walk for almost forty years, but was one of the most deeply spiritual, best informed, cheerful women of Earlham, where she and her husband had lived for fifty years. People would walk for miles to spend a few minutes in her presence and listen to her heavenly counsel. Probably no woman in Earlham was more loved or saintly in character than she. She was deeply interested in all lines of Christian work.

Hill—Mahlon Patterson Hill, son of Joseph and Deborah Hill, was born near Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, January 27, 1857, and died after a few hours illness with pneumonia, October 12, 1916. He was a birthright Friend and was converted in early manhood. His love for Christ and the church was expressed in service for others and in the self denial shown in giving freely of his money for the spread of the gospel, both at home and abroad.

Mitchell—Caleb F. Mitchell died at Mt. Airy, North Carolina, on October 29, 1916. He was one of the best and most useful members of that Meeting, and was loved and respected by all who knew him. For nine years he was superintendent of the Bible School. He will be greatly missed by the poor for he was always ready to help and to give. His life was a good example of true Christian living and his influence was felt by all who came in contact with him.

Saunders—Franklin Saunders died in High Point, North Carolina, September 24, 1916. He was a member of Mt. Airy Monthly Meeting, but had been living in High Point several years. He will be greatly missed.

Wickersham—Jethro Wickersham, son of Caleb and Eunice Wickersham, was born April 9, 1823, and died at his home in Spiceland, Indiana, September 15, 1916. Services were held at the Spiceland Friends church, conducted by Charles Sweet, of Muncie.

Wyman—Irene Wyman died at the home of her daughter at Rome, New York, October 22, 1916, as a result of a stroke received six weeks previous. Her maiden name was Irene Preston and she would have been ninety years old on December 31. She married Samuel Wyman of West Branch, New York, in 1848. She was a woman of bright, cheerful disposition, beloved by all who knew her. She was a member of West Branch Friends Meeting and nearly all her married life was spent in that village. She came to Rome twenty-two years ago. She leaves three daughters, a brother, four grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

Faith

You ask what is Faith? I would answer,
'Tis the proof of the unseen, the far;
And needs not the spell of the starlight
To measure the scope of the star.

It can sense the sweet blush of the morning,
From the shadowy gloom of the night;
It can sweep back the curtains of heaven
And bathe in its radiant light.

From the desert of grieving it reaches
To drink from Eternity's spring;
While despair in perplexity's beating
The air with its desolate wing.

'Tis the image that's locked in the marble
Before 'tis evoked by the hand;
'Tis a temple that gleams in its beauty
Before the foundation is planned.

'Tis a prayer entering heaven at twilight,
For it holds in its keeping the key;
'Tis the anchor that holds when the tempest
Drives the soul through a furious sea.

'Tis the trust of a child in a promise
From lips never framed to deceive;
'Tis the feel of the weak for the stronger,
As a vine to a turret will cleave.

'Tis the test of all earthly endeavor,
The surrender of substance to skill;
'Tis the marvel of all that surrounds us,
The truth of Omnipotent WILL.

'Tis the fullness of Hope; 'tis the spirit
That rises o'er sorrow or loss;
'Tis a dream that comes true in the dreaming;
'Tis a world looking back at a cross.

Entered as second-class matter at Urbana, Ohio, June 10, 1915, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE

On account of the great advance in the price of paper, the Publication Board has decided to ask all subscribers to The American Friend to share the greatly increased cost of publishing the paper the coming year. There is simply no other solution of the problem. On the first day of January, 1917, the price of the paper will be advanced to $2.00 per year, covering all expirations on and after that date, and all new subscriptions after that time; to ministers the price will be advanced to $1.50, and to foreign subscribers, where increased postage is necessary, the price will be $2.50. All subscribers and Friends generally will please take notice. All subscriptions, whether new or old, until that time will be taken at the old price. It will be a good time for new subscribers to get in at the old rate.

ALL THINGS FOR GOOD

By ASA LEE KENT

To them who love to do His will all things
Together work for good; nor less through woe
Than weal. Where'er we go we learn to trace
A mighty Hand whose guidance does not err.
We fain oft times in dire disquietude
Would say His will was not that tempests came
To overthrow our bark, or wreck our plans,
To let the waves surge round us for a time
In angry tide; 'twas not His will that clouds
A moment hide the brightness of our sun.
We oft forget that sweetest blessings come Sometimes in sorrow's stern disguise; that we,
Bowed down beneath its weight, cannot at once
Discern wherein His wond'rous purpose lies.
How little do we know when shadows fall
Across our paths with what great gratitude
We'll one day thank Him that they came in love
To teach Love's lesson; that we'll understand
And say with glad thanksgiving, "He knew best."
Just now in darkness we may not discern
His way nor purpose, nor His hand can see,
But one day when He makes the hidden known
To our beholding, wond'ring, eyes we'll see
How all things with Him together work for good
To those who love His will through weal or woe.
Freedom, Ind.

"GIVE US WORK AND HOPE"

By LETTICE JOWITT

The Friends' Emergency Committee (169 St. Stephens House, Westminster Bridge, London) has, through its special visitors, kept in touch with the thousands of innocent "alien enemies" who have for so long been confined in the various detention camps in Great Britain.

The committee's work of providing employment for the interned civilians is carried on with the sanction of the War Office and the Home Office, and with the encouragement and co-operation of the Commandants of the various camps.

With the strain of the prolonged internment becoming more marked as the third winter of the war approaches, it is imperative that the occupants of the camps should be given the encouragement and the change of thought which follow regular and congenial employment, and this can be of the greatest value in saving them from hopelessness and despair.

The immediate need in one large internment camp is for workshops to accommodate several hundred men for making toys and fancy goods, shoemaking, basket and hat making, general woodwork and cabinet making, clothing and metal work, with the addition of store rooms and a room to serve as a center for religious, social and educational meetings. A careful scheme has been prepared which will probably involve an expenditure of $5,000 in that one camp. There is need of more than double that sum if the scheme is to be extended to other camps, where the cry, "Give us work and hope" is making itself heard just as persistently.

The sum is a large one, and on this side the demand for relief funds of all kinds is making it very hard to raise money quickly. Are there not sympathisers in America who will help to relieve the distress of mind of these unfortunate victims of war by setting them speedily to interesting work?

The cost of transit would probably preclude sending over wooden workshops in sections ready to put up, but if the Committee could receive a cabled assurance that part of the necessary sum were forthcoming they would be relieved of a weight of anxiety.

Will Friends and others in America use this channel to help and by doing so aid many to keep their self-respect and their belief in the love of their fellowmen?

Is not this one way of setting forth the love of God?

An Unsettled Conflict

It is significant of the grasping spirit of militarism that it cannot write a so-called preparedness bill for peaceful America without injecting into it the principle of conscription. Not satisfied to confine the military idea to the ranks of those who are advocates of war under certain conditions, they must invade the realm of conscience, and, by force of the mailed fist, drag into the midst of bloody conflict those who believe there is a better way for the solution of all international questions. To such extremes do men go when they see specters in the air, and bogies in every bush, and enemies everywhere.

What the future of militarism in America is to be is uncertain. Left to itself, the program has only just begun. Already there are rumors of new pressure upon the coming Congress, and certain newspapers of the military type are reminding our law makers that America is not yet safe. The spirit of materialism is rampant in the land. The program of Jesus is a bit of ancient lore, too idealistic for a practical age like this. Even the church, in large part, is being swept from its moorings and is lending its voice for preparation against the day of the visitation of wrath by some unnamed community of the world.

Probably the next issue will be to add to the militaristic burden already imposed. The issue ought to be the undoing of some of the wrong already done. The pity of it all is that the church cannot stand as a unit for the ideals of brotherhood and good will that are the surest defence of any people. Even Friends are divided upon the preparedness issue, although it must be said that only a minimum of our membership stand for armies and guns and forts.

The church must stand for brotherhood or its gospel will not avail, a brotherhood that is willing to suffer even unto death, a brotherhood that links humanity as children of a common Father, a brotherhood that reveals a community of interests which will make war as much an outlaw among the nations as are feuds among neighbors. The church cannot sing its way to heaven upon flowery beds of ease when the very fundamentals of its propaganda are being weighed in the balances.

For America to become militaristic is to negative the work of her missionaries, to put the ban upon a friendly world market for her products and to build around us a wall of exclusion that will dim and ultimately extinguish the light of our progressive civilization. The great issue which our American Church is to face is the issue of accepting at its full face value the entire program of Jesus Christ as a national and world standard, about which the human family may rally in the consciousness of complete protection against war and every ill with which the spirit of Christian idealism has a controversy.

THE PASSING OF THE SALOON

The chief outstanding feature of the recent elections was the evidence of the uninterrupted march of the prohibition cause. To the surprise probably of both friends and foes, there were tremendous gains for prohibition in every state where the issue was raised directly.

Michigan, Nebraska, South Dakota and Montana went into the dry column by most pronounced majorities. Alaska joined the procession, every town in the territory, according to the reports, returning dry majorities. Arkansas was saved to prohibition by a majority that gave no uncertain sound. Wet propositions in Colorado, Arizona, Oregon and Washington were defeated by overwhelming majorities, the city of Seattle in the latter state returning a dry majority of nearly 15,000 as against an equal wet majority two years ago. Florida and Utah are said to have elected dry Legislatures, the report being that in the former state an independent candidate was elected Governor on a prohibition issue. It is believed that both these states will enact statutory prohibition laws this coming winter. In Missouri and California the wet majorities were greatly reduced over the vote two years ago.

What effect this veritable landslide for prohibition will have upon the coming session of Congress cannot be anticipated, but it is certain that the friends of national prohibition will press with new enthusiasm for the adoption of the Sheppard-Gallinger, Webb-Smith resolution, providing for the submission of this question for the action of the states. To the limit of their influence, Friends throughout America should get ready to make themselves heard in behalf of this resolution by their Senators and Congressmen at Washington.

The passing of the saloon is an end in itself that is imperative for the highest interests of our American civilization, but what is even more important, this achievement will be the indication of an awakened moral conscience that betokens brighter days for our entire social order. America is giving further evidence that in great crises the people are ready to subordinate the claims of greed and of gain to the demands of a better citizenship, happier homes, an unshackled church and a purer civilization.

This generation should not pass this problem on to the next generation for solution. Our children deserve a better heritage than that. Probably the stage in this conflict has been reached when even politics must be subordinated to this paramount issue, and when, both from the standpoint of principle and from the standpoint of expediency, men and women of every communion and of every party shall combine to write prohibition into our national constitution.

An Efficient Church Organization and How to Attain It

By BENJAMIN H. DOANE

"Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power and for the honor of my majesty?" were the words of a great king, whose idea of efficiency was identical with self-sufficiency. But "while the word was in the king's mouth there fell a voice from heaven saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken: the kingdom is departed from thee."

Many since poor Nebuchadnezzar have, like him, imagined they were kingdom builders, and have even named the city of their own building Zion, only to discover too late that it was Babylon and not the Kingdom of Heaven they had set up.

The application of the terms "Efficient" and "efficiency" needs, therefore, to be strictly limited when used in reference to religious work; for in that field, not the man, but "it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure." Hence, to speak in that connection of efficiency at all, one must be careful lest he find himself talking condescendingly of God.

For the word of the Lord that goeth forth out of His mouth returneth not unto Him void, but it accomplisheth that which pleaseth Him and prospereth in the things whereto He send it. The test, then, is, whether or not men have the Word of God, not whether they make it effective or of none effect. If they have it, you know it, because it is prospering and accomplishing that which is well pleasing unto Him; it is never void. If they have it not, you know it, because their work comes to naught, for He who was the Word made flesh declares, "Without me ye can do nothing." On the other hand, "He maketh His angels spirits and His ministers a flaming fire,"—all having this sign: "By their fruits ye shall know them"; for "every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away."

Far be it from me to make modern application of what has so far been said to any individual or church or denomination. Enough for me merely to call to mind some of the conditions under which alone God accepts the offered service of men as builders of His Kingdom.

Great natural abilities are not at all necessary, and are often detriments, as tempting their possessor into this mistaken sense of efficiency which we have styled self-sufficiency. Indeed, lack of natural parts, or some physical or mental defect, has often been glorified into a positive qualification. "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength."

Moses, with his halting tongue, the spokesman of his race. The rapt Isaiah, a man of unclean lips. The twelve Apostles, ignorant fishermen, against whom existed every human presumption and prejudice. Paul, the great public persuader of men, with his mean presence and his supposed fits of epilepsy. Francis of Assisi, in rags and too ignorant for the priesthood, yet as a layman of more worth in the church than all its hierarchy.

But I need not further multiply instances. It is not any great natural leader we need wait for. I do not want to be any man's follower, and the Lord forbid that any should follow me. The prayer of Paracelsus suggests itself: "Make no more giants, God, but elevate the race!" And the first greatest need to that end is a common basis on which men and women, with all their differences of outward conditions and inward gifts of grace, can join for growth and service. That sufficient basis, we need not be told, is Jesus Christ. As it is written, "Our sufficiency is of God"—who "is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work." And all our trouble as Christians, from the year One to this present year of our Lord, comes from our persistency in trying to lay some other foundation than that is laid, and building a structure of our own upon it.

So far as I know, the man who has seen this truth clearest and made it clearest to others, and done the most to remedy the matter in the earth, is none other than George Fox,—from whom, I believe, it is only spiritually that any of us is descended. He saw that the Christian Church had built and rebuilt and patched and extended its own man-made structures in all directions away from the pure and the sure foundation. There were idolatrous sacraments, and burdensome orders, and unwarrantable privileges, and pretentious dignities, and all-consuming tithes, for the benefit of a certain class in the church, members of a prideful profession,—“blind mouths,” “whose tongues could only lick the platter” (to combine the expressions of Milton and Carlyle), while the sheep wandered about starved, scattered and peeled. And he set about removing the cause of that condition and made a rather brave improvement in his day.

He had no secret, but only a re-perception of the ancient revelation, that there is but one body, and one Spirit; that unto every one of us, and not alone to the privileged professional few, there is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry even, for the building up of the body of Christ, that ye henceforth may grow up into him in all things who is the head, even Christ; from whom the whole body, fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the upbuilding of itself in love.

It is wonderful the result when any divine principle is a little bit followed and obeyed. The Society of Friends sprang into existence full grown. But the old ecclesiastical system also continued and still continues, and, foreseeing the danger of being deceived and tempted by outward show, and being drawn back into that which they had come out from, their founder warns them: “Take heed of destroying that which ye have begotten. Dwell in the immovable Word of God and remain in the foundation that is pure and that is sure; for whosoever goes out from the pure and ministers not in and from that, he comes to an end, though he may have been serviceable for a time. Keep your meetings in the name of Jesus Christ, then ye will see over all the gatherings of Adam’s sons and daughters, you being met in the life over them all; in which is your unity and peace and fellowship with God and one with another, in the Life, in which you may enjoy God’s presence with you.”

And then he makes this remarkably prophetic utterance, which sounds as though it had been spoken but yesterday, after the things it warns against had long come to pass,—so prone, it seems, are people in all ages to regard the re-adoption of old and forsaken evils as progress: “All they that are gotten into fellowship in outward things, their fellowship will corrupt and rot and wither away. Therefore, live in the Gospel, the power of God. And this fellowship in the Gospel the power of God, is a mystery to all the fellowships in the world.”

Fellowship in outward things, now as then, in spite of his as well as the more ancient warning, is the bane of the church. Each separate fellowship is sure sooner or later to have independent ambitions of its own, which weaken the common cause of the fellowship of the Gospel. Let the church (including our branch of it) abandon those it has adopted, realize that our eye must be single, and that Spirit alone can ever be the enduring workable bond of unity, and the seamless robe of Christ will cover all his children into one fold, with one Shepherd, agreeable to his good pleasure.

Then would the separate fellowship of the Ministry disappear again in the interest of the wider welfare. Why should ministers, as such, form a separate class, except for a selfish purpose and to create a wall of separation between them and those to whom they preach?

Then would the fellowship of the young people, as such, be seen to be as futile as foolish. A fellowship founded merely upon youth, in George Fox’s words, will soon corrupt and rot and wither away. Let the young people be willing to work, not as “young people,” but just as people, and their strength and ardor and enthusiasm will be working towards an eternal unity, instead of temporary separation ending in disunion and disintegration.

Let those whose fellowship is in superior human learning abandon it, and know with reverent humility that in the eye of the all-seeing Reality the foolishness of one man differeth not much from the wisdom of another, but “the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.”

Do, I say, nothing about details of organization and of methods. It is because I am convinced that, so far from their being palmary, they are not even of secondary or tertiary importance. And to my mind the dominant influence of and abject dependence upon methods and organization, unquestionably the outstanding feature of the activities of the church today, is simply the measure of its declension from a divine organism into a human institution, wherein success is temporary, illusory and ultimately disastrous. Though they are the best and commonest substitute for the Spirit of God, and by their means the mechanism of the church can be operated after the Spirit has long fled, they are absolutely of no consequence apart from the Spirit; and where the Spirit is, the mechanism takes care of itself without heed or attention.

Even as no man can say that Jesus is Lord except by the Holy Ghost, so only can we ever hope on earth, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his spirit in the inner man. By the efficient working of it alone in us, and not by any smooth methods of our devising, shall we hear, instead of the voice that came to Nebuchadnezzar, that heard by the disciple whom Jesus loved,—“a loud voice saying in heaven, now is come salvation and strength and the kingdom of our God and the power of his Christ.”

New York City.

A Peek Into Honduras

By I. H. CAMMACK

Fifty years ago today I was a rather care-free youth in Southeast Randolph County, Indiana; with a mental horizon that took in only a few of the great historical landmarks of the world, and with almost no appreciation of the peculiar and rare privileges of life that I was enjoying above and beyond other youths in other lands, and I was especially ignorant of the lives of young men and women in this country, 1,500 miles south of me.

Now (October 2, 1916) and for seven years past, lacking two weeks, I have been seeing these neighbor youths and maidens, and today I want to invite especially the Christian Endeavor readers of "The American Friend" to get upon your south boundary fences and look over into this neighboring field and contemplate conditions as I point out some salient features.

First, noting the geographical and physical features, you notice tropical indications; the clumps of bananas and plantains, the papaya and mango trees; the little side-hill corn patches; the weedy cactus and stone fences; the open-walled huts (we are observing out in the country). The pigs with neck-yokes, the dogs, the chickens and the children, all seem equally "at home" about, or inside the open door. Perhaps there may be also a half or quarter-breed cow, and a few goats wandering around, or the latter out on the stone fences looking for new territory to invade.

Near the house is most likely a scaffold covered by boughs, brush or corn fodder. Under it, one or two indifferent ponies or mules. In front of the one-room house is most likely a porch the length of the house. At one end of it is probably an oval earthen oven, or three stones bearing a circular piece of earthenware some two feet in diameter on which the omni-present tortillas are baked. Near it is a crude platform bearing a rough flattened stone on which the softened corn is ground by a "roller-pin" stone to the consistency of putty, then hand-patted thin and placed over the fire, being entirely innocent of salt, yeast, or seasoning except the remains of the alkaline soak in ashes or lime water.

I'll not stop to dwell upon its insipidity to us, nor its leathery texture. The people like them. So do Eskimos like seal fat, and the men who "think black" like fried ants. For me, they are welcome, but these tortillas also serve as spoons for dipping soup and black beans, and they have one great advantage over "chop sticks" in that they may be eaten. The man of the house may be at the other end of the corridor in his hammock, snoozing off his aguardiente of the night previous, and if the house fronts upon a principal road there may be a table with long-necked bottles with aguardiente and "frescos" (soft drinks) for sale.

But the young man, where is he? He may be off on the mountain-side with his machete (sword-scythe), clearing for another corn patch, or later, with the same implement, planting corn in the inches of soil between the rocks, or grubbing out the weeds. Or he may be off on the long highway, with the yoke of oxen, hauling freight to the larger town, or with two or a half-dozen pack-mules, off to the city or mines with corn, beans, rice or freight. He is barefoot or sandaled, usually in his shirt sleeves, sleeping on his two-wheeled cart, or in his blanket in some nook of the house or shed amid animals and fleas. He is to the "manner" born, and probably cannot read. He is skilful with cigarette, machete, and ox goad, and on the pony. He lives like his neighbors and his father before him. He may have one or two real full-blood brothers or sisters, but most likely his nearest kin are six or eight half-brothers or half-sisters. Two-thirds of his chances are that he and they are illegitimates. His home is not much more than a temporary camping place. He is poor, except when spending freely his small gains. He lives an hour at a time. His life is simple, circumscribed, commonplace, base, without inspirations.

But how about his country sister or half-sister? They all, most likely, are mixed with Indian and often with negro blood. His sturdy sister may be off on a several leagues' jaunt afoot to the capital city of their department, with farm produce of the lighter varieties, such as fruits, eggs, poultry, cassava, green beans and the like in a wide basket upon her head, bringing back cheap muslin, laces or calico, thread or tobacco. Or she may be the servant in some city home, but almost invariably illiterate, and is looked upon as prey by every lecherous man she meets. Soon she succumbs to the common fate and a new generation begins.

Have these young people no social life? Yes, there is often a birthday dance, and much dissipation, often ending with somebody being carried to the hospital for repairs. There is also the death watch-night, where she can sit with the women around the candle-lighted bier, while the men are outside smoking and drinking; for at such times every finer sentiment is drowned in drink. The relatives of the dead furnish the liquor and the man of the home takes a liberal supply as a bait and his thirsty neighbors accompany him to the burial grounds to drink and dig the deep grave. Thus all the solemnities of death outside of the room are smothered in hilarious dissipation. The women relatives of the dead usually remain wailing in the home. Then follow nine days of mourning. The neighbor women call and sit around smoking cirarettes and the men smoke and drink.

But what do they think about death? They think about it as little as possible. They are taught that they go directly to purgatory for an indefinite period to be cleansed from venial sins; a period that may be shortened, they think, by masses for the dead, and by prayers purchased from the priests. On Holy Sunday he recites his Latin prayers over the graves for a stipulated sum for each petition. Since all go to purgatory anyhow, what matters their indifference or a few more sins, some of which can be easily arranged (?) for at "confession"? Thus sin is cheapened, winked at, ignored, counted as a personal weakness, or a blunder, or mistake, easily condoned and forgotten.

What do they know of the Gospel? Nothing. The more devout offer many prayers to "Mary, the Mother of God," or to some favorite "Santo." Often they will borrow a "Santo" (image) for a special occasion, and have a big spree, drinking, burning many firecrackers, candles and skyrockets. Almost every day in the calendar is the birthday of some saint, and this determines the given names of thousands. Hence we find many Antonios and Antonias, Juans and Juanas, Joseas and Marias, Miguels and Rafaels, Miguelas and Rafaelas.

How fare the youth in the cities? Many of the señoritas go to the Normal schools, some aspiring to teach, but the most of them are fond of novellettes, Parisian styles of dress and undress, the dance and the cine, and nearly invariably grow up in the faith of their fanatical mothers, who are abject dupes of the Curas, and forbidden to read the Bible, but they have their "Santos" in nearly every room, where candles are often burning before them in mechanical adoration and prayer. When these girls sin grievously out of the ordinary, they "confess" and for a while mend their ways. The young men scorn the idolatrous credulity of their sisters and fall an easy prey to free-thought, materialism, infidelity, and general looseness of morals and life. These young men are generally inveterate users and debilitated victims of the universal cigarette.

Nearly all the professors of the advanced (?) schools are free-thinkers. They have easily detected the shams of Romanism and do not easily forgive the sinning Curas. Hence we are looking upon a people living far from God. He is little in their thoughts. His fear is negligible, hence life is often a burden and so cheap that assassinations and suicides are fearfully prevalent. Immorality and gambling are common. In fact, the government recently inaugurated a monopolizing lottery; and illegitimacy predominates. Free love finds an easy excuse behind the charges and regulations of the church. The picture is a dark one and grows blacker at every touch of the faithful pen. It sickens one to look upon it, and appalls one by its hopeless features. One living in the midst of it almost struggles for breath to cry out, "O! Lord, how long wilt thou forbear thy righteous judgments? When wilt thou come to dispel the darkness, rebuke the sin, and install a kingdom of truth and righteousness?"

But I desist. I recall that I began by inviting the young readers of this paper to mount your south fence and look into this field just beside you, where "every prospect pleases and only man is vile."

Now I'll invite you to get off the fence on the south side and pray: "Lord, is it true that I am my brother's keeper? Is it true that 'He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him the neglected or wilfully ignored duty is SIN'? Is it true that the salvation of these neighbors of mine is dependent upon my compassion for them, and my obedience to thee? Oh! my God, is it true, IS IT TRUE, that thou hast said 'Go'? Is it true that thou hast saved me to serve, and that some of these young people's blood in Honduras may be dripping upon my garments? Is it true that my vision has been but local, narrow, circumscribed, when thou hast said, 'lift up your eyes and look upon the fields already white unto the harvest'? Lord, do I dare disobey thee? Do I dare forget that a dispensation of the Gospel has been committed to me? Do I dare to be callous, indifferent, and selfishly fall back on the north side of the fence of godly decision and say, 'When saw I thee naked, hungry, needy, and failed to minister to thee?'"

And you, my middle-aged brother and sister, who have some money you could invest for soul-winning down here. You've been on the fence peeking over while I have been appealing to your son or daughter or young friend. You've been a little shy about looking lest some new demand be sprung upon your conscience, or possibly that more tender spot, your pocket. Before you get off the fence let me ask you, "What kind of a steward are you? Are you 'supporting' an auto, or a missionary? Where have you the most active capital invested? In 'rolling stock' or in missions? When Jesus comes will you go to your possessions, or will you leave them, or stay with them? God has made you temporarily an administrator over a bit of his resources. Had you forgotten they are his, not yours?" Many do not seem to know that they are simply servants 'in trust'? It is a sad oversight.

May an accident happen to you something like that befell Saul, enroute to Damascus. And that you fall on the south side of the fence and when you rally a little may you likewise say:

"LORD, WHAT WILT THOU HAVE ME DO?"

A LITTLE JOKER

"Father," said the little boy five years old, "I saw a lion and a lamb lying side by side in the meadow this morning."

"Tut! tut! James, don't tell me such stories," said the father.

"I tell you I did," persisted the child, "but it was a dandelion."—The Christian Endeavor World.

ENGLISH FRIENDS TORTURED

(The following interesting but equally horrifying account of the sufferings of English Friends and Pacifists is taken from the Philadelphia Public Ledger of November 10.)

Tortures to which members of the Society of Friends are said to have been subjected in England, because they refuse to don uniforms and fight, were described yesterday by Dr. Rufus M. Jones, professor of philosophy at Haverford College, and the Rev. Leyton Richards, an English Congregational minister, who has been delivering a course of sermons for several months at the Church of the Pilgrims, in Brooklyn. They spoke before a joint meeting of about 1500 Orthodox and Hicksite Friends at the Friends' Meeting House, at Fourth and Arch streets.

Letters from Englishmen who said they had been ill treated were read by Doctor Jones, who is one of the most eminent members of the Society of Friends in the United States and is widely known through numerous books on the Friends and their doctrines. He said that while about 25,000 young men faced conscription in Great Britain, all but one-tenth of their number took advantage of opportunities to escape military service by enlisting in ambulance units and the construction service.

The 2500, mostly included in the membership of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, refused to compromise with their consciences in the slightest degree. Many of them belong to the Society of Friends, and they refused to take advantage of the exemption clause in the conscription bill or any methods of avoiding direct military duty, he said.

Men Subjected to Torture

In addition to the charges of beating and "ragging" of these men, as described by Doctor Jones, the following tortures to which he charged some were subjected were cited by the Rev. Mr. Leyton:

Placed in irons and "crucified" for two hours a day.
Placed in straitjackets and starved until their spirits were broken.

Forcibly attired in khaki uniforms and transported to France.

Bullied and beaten by noncommissioned officers in prisons and training camps.

"The Government originally had no intention of turning persecutor or of harrowing those who for conscientious reasons could not fight," said Doctor Jones. "The difficulty was that the conscientious objectors proved to be far more numerous than the Government expected; secondly, the tribunals proved to be utterly inadequate for their new business, and, thirdly, the dominance of the military forces in the administration of the tribunals and over the destiny of the 'objectors' proved to be much greater than anybody dreamed would be the case.

"From the moment they refuse to take service they are 'outlaws.' It is illegal for their own fathers to give them shelter. No one may give them any kind of employment. They live in daily expectation of arrest, followed by terrible treatment.

When the arrest comes it is always in the dead of night. They are dragged from their beds, court-martialed for disobeying orders and sentenced to prison, where every effort is made to break their spirit and to compel them to fight. The tragedy has been that they were thrown at once into the hands of military officers instead of being dealt with by the civil authorities.

"Their treatment has been harsh and cruel. Thirty-six of them on one occasion were taken to France and condemned to be shot, though the sentence was finally commuted to ten years at hard labor. One valiant youth was killed by the barbaric treatment he received in the prison; others have endured inhuman torture."

Premier Saves Nineteen Lives

In telling of the nineteen sent to France to whom Doctor Jones referred, the Rev. Mr. Layton said that when Premier Asquith learned what the military authorities were doing he interfered. Otherwise the men might have been shot.

In citing specific instances of cruelties, Doctor Jones read letters from E. Everett, a young teacher belonging to the Fellowship of Reconciliation, who was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. For exposing these cruelties in England Bertrand Russell was deprived of his lectureship at Cambridge University and was refused permission to come to America, he said. A pamphlet issued by Russell said:

Everett is now suffering this savage punishment solely for refusal to go against his conscience. He is fighting the old fight for liberty and religious persecution in the same spirit in which the martyrs suffered in the past.

Everett described his reception by a colonel after he had been "pasted" until he could not stand, and then taken to a hospital and forcibly fed, as follows:

As soon as we got in the prison one of them told me with an oath to get my coat off. I told him I was not a soldier and could not obey military orders. The colonel was standing near and he thundered up and shouted: "What! you won't obey me?" with a thick accompaniment. I quietly answered, "I must obey the commands of my God, sir." "D—n your God! Take him to the special room."

Four of them then set on me. One of them took hold of me by the back of the neck, nearly choking me, shook me and dragged me along, while the others punched and thumped and kicked me as hard as they knew how. They banged my head on the floor and walls and threw me into a little cell with thick walls and a small skylight. They then told me to get my boots off, but I would not do so, and the sergeant I have mentioned deliberately punched me behind the ear and all of them set on me again and bruised me more. They at last cleared out and slammed the door, leaving me without boots, coat or braces, lying on the floor almost exhausted.

Then they came back with the colonel, who told me to stand to attention. I talked to him very calmly, for I felt Christ present with me, but he gave me a kick with his boot and the other fellows started the bruising again. When they had exhausted themselves and I still stood firm, the colonel said: "Put him on bread and water for three days to begin," and then they left me, hinting at certain tortures they would put me through.

I never felt Christ nearer in my life. Of course I was absolutely exhausted, with bruises all over, lumps on my head, swollen cheek and bleeding in one or two places, and could do nothing but lie on the floor and pray for God's protection.

In another letter Everett wrote:

I have suffered hell today. Relays of men have me, one on each arm and one at my back, putting me through all the gymnastics and drills. They kicked my ankles, dragged me on the floor, and continued for two hours in Birkenhead Park before the public. Finally I had to give in and drill.

"Objectors" Beaten When Drilling

All of the 2500 who have not yet been arrested are facing such treatment, Doctor Jones said, in giving extracts from the diaries of other "objectors." One wrote:

Four were brought here on Friday and one more appeared this morning. The first day they were put on the barracks square—it was terribly hot—each under a non-commissioned officer, who used to kick and beat them into drill positions.

After drill I saw another non-commissioned officer smacking his man across the face frequently because he refused to do up his tunic. Today they dragged another to church, which struck one as rather blasphemous.

Further along the writer tells how he resisted the wearing of a military uniform:

I dressed in my civilian clothes, and was told to put on a uniform. I told them it was against my conscience, as it was a part of the war. But they brought four military, soldiers and police, to undress me, and my clothes were wrenched off my body and a uniform forced on. I took it off again. This time I was tied up in a blanket and left for hours until next morning.

For several days the "objector" was tied in a blanket, and then a uniform was again forced on him, the diary said. Finally, after he had been harried for a number of days, he was stripped and examined before soldiers and then was tried by court-martial.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING EVANGELISTIC BOARD

(The following is the second article from Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Boards, solicited by The American Friend, this one being from Oregon Yearly Meeting.)

In taking inventory of the work of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Department of Oregon Yearly Meeting, we find that our chief assets are "difficulties and opportunities."

Our first and greatest difficulty is the many denominations and nationalities, and the shifting population represented in each community. One of the first questions to a new acquaintance is "Where did you come from?" Our communities are not bound together with community ideals and standards. They are almost entirely heterogeneous in their make-up. In some of the older states where Friends have been long established they have had time to "Quakerize" the sentiment until they need no explanation, but such is not true here.

Another difficulty here is the fact that our field of established work is so small. With a total of 2500 members scattered over Oregon, Washington and Idaho, and our full share of non-residents, together with the fact that the total above given includes the children, leaves us an adult membership so small as scarcely to be felt in this great busy Northwest. There is not sufficient variety and extent of self-supporting fields to appeal to workers of strength and ability of leadership, and as a result, after serving for a period of time in perhaps the only field in the territory that appeals to them, they are forced to some other Yearly Meeting if a change is made.

Another difficulty is the spirit of indifference to church obligations. It is wonderful to learn what remarkable church workers some people were "back East," and what fine buildings they had. Such singing seems never heard out here as they had "back East" and such preachers seem never to have blessed the coast country. But for some strange reason in coming over the Rocky Mountains their fervor and zeal suffered a serious chill from which in many instances they have never recovered. The difference between their attitude here and there is due to two or three things. First, in leaving the home church and going into a strange community they are relieved from all church responsibility and the regular places in the new field are filled and it takes some time for the new meeting to find what place they are best fitted for. Often, in the meantime, in this period of transmission there is a loss of interest. The meeting is different, the people different, and the conditions so different they don't feel "at home," so join the large army of drifters.

Again, some come from meetings in the East where Friends have been more numerous and influential and either because of pride or business reasons, hesitate or fail to identify themselves with Friends here. This fact may not seem a very flattering commentary upon our spirit of church loyalty, but nevertheless, we have lost some very strong and capable people, apparently for those reasons. If Friends in the East could impress upon those coming West the great obligation they owe to the church at large to choose locations adjacent to, and identify themselves with Friends meetings in the West, they would contribute much to our success here. We find those who have been Friends scattered all over this country who seem to have dismissed all sense of obligation to the church of whose influences they are the product. In the wild scramble for health, wealth or pleasure, this seems to be the land of forgotten church vows. In one county alone there are reported 22 preachers who have ceased all religious activity and are devoting their time to purely secular affairs.

As to the opportunities, they are legion, and if "man's opportunity is God's command," we have great responsibility resting upon us. In what is known as the upper coast country, Oregon, Washington and Idaho, there are at the present time 350,000 children untouched by any Sunday School or church privileges. We must act upon them or they will act upon us. They will soon have grown up and assumed the responsibilities of citizenship and from this standpoint alone the church and society in general should be concerned. One county alone in Oregon shows 22 abandoned churches where various denominations have made unsuccessful attempts to establish a work. In this same county there are 90 rural districts without Gospel services. We have in Oregon one county as large as New Hampshire in which there is but one settled pastor. The North Fork of the Lewis River is reported to be thickly settled for 30 miles without a single religious service. A young Friend and his wife are teaching school in a district in Oregon where there is not a preacher in a day's drive and the only religious service prior to the coming of these Christian young people was the annual visit of the Catholic priest, who came through christening the babes and collecting what funds were available. The Sabbath was a day for revelry and dissipation, saloons running wide open with gambling and all the accompanying evils. The citizens say, "we wish it were different, but what can we do?" This young man and his wife have done splendid work in establishing a Sunday School, preaching funerals, and in many ways directing them to better things.

These appalling needs almost overwhelm us when we note the effort with which we are able to maintain that already in hand, but as a matter of self-preservation at least, we are shut up to but one course, and that is to do our best to stem the tide.

Friends need not expect the regeneration of this great field over night, neither has our experience taught us that conditions which prevail can be changed by some miraculous "presto-change" method, but only by the most devoted and persistent plodding and hand-to-hand work. The time element must enter into the problem. People here more than in many places are tired of religious fads. Every kind of fanaticism is rife and people are suspicious of sects of which they are not familiar. There must be the deep spirituality, coupled with a consistent life and a policy followed that is solidly constructive in its nature.

The Evangelistic Board of the Yearly Meeting is seeking to strengthen fields already occupied and make them centers from which we may work out to surrounding points. It is often easier to start a meeting than to develop and keep it going. We have sought not to enter fields in which we would be unable to extend the necessary follow-up assistance. During the past year some good extension work has been done which promises to be permanent.

We contemplate a survey in each community where we are at work so we may have the data indicating just what is being done and what yet needs to be done.

We have a field evangelist who will reach a number of the established meetings, but we need a fund which will enable us to reach the great untouched fields with the message of the Gospel as interpreted by Friends.

EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS

Editor The American Friend:

There has been received too late for insertion in the paper already printed the following information with regard to Friends University:

The faculty contains 19 teachers of various grades, four of whom have doctor's degrees.

There are 169 students in the regular classes, 98 taking special work in music and 84 in the preparatory department.

The endowment, exclusive of real estate, amounts to $177,283.00, yielding about $10,000.00 in income, in addition to which the University owns real estate to the value of $25,000.00 which yields income, and $200,000 in grounds and buildings not directly yielding income. The income from student fees is about $10,000.00 and the total income of the college $20,594.00. Indebtedness is $6,000.00, and in all the University owns some 1600 acres of ground.

Fifteen units are required for admission to the Freshman class, and there are no students in the college admitted with less than 14 units. The number of undergraduate students taking Latin is 6, Greek 10, Mathematics 25, French 12, German 55, Spanish 38, History 88, Sociology 33, English 163, Chemistry 27, Biology 61, Physics 11, Bib. Lit. 35, Philosophy 30, Psychology 23, Pedagogy 30, Geology 30. A professional course is given in education.

The president says a small college can do professional work only to a limited extent.

About 35 per cent of the student body are Friends and 10 members of the teaching force are Friends.

The History of Friends is taught in the Biblical School.

Eighteen students have gone out to the Foreign Mission Field. About 30 are now in preparation for various lines of special Christian work, Missions, Ministry, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Home Mission work, etc. A very large number go out as teachers. Of our last graduating class, 90 per cent secured state certificates to teach. To do this they are required to take in their courses certain educational work. 15 semester hours are required of the 120 necessary for graduation.

Among the needs of the institution "a larger support fund is needed and two new dormitories, one for boys and one for girls. Will soon have sufficient funds raised to build a gymnasium."

Very truly,

ISAAC SHARPLESS.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

WHY NOT OBSERVE IT ANYWAY?

If there is a Meeting who will not observe Young Friends Day on November 26, please do not let the opportunity of challenging your young people in this manner pass by. Arrange a special day sometime in the near future. Send to us for literature. If you do not happen to care for the Five Years Meeting and the work it is trying to do, please do not assume that your young people have no interest either. Give us a chance to touch them. An efficient church in any denomination is one that is closely connected with its central Boards. A body cannot live without its parts, neither can the parts live without the body. Cannot the Society of Friends become a well organized denomination? The East needs the West and the West the East. The enthusiasm of the South must be combined with the conservatism of the North. Decadence has already begun in a local Meeting or a Yearly Meeting when it says we are good enough and can get along without our neighboring Yearly Meetings. It is not enough to get along, we should strive to get along very well.

THE REPORTS

As soon as reports come in of collections taken on Young Friends Day we will publish them. Will you see that your Meeting reports early and that its contribution is large?

OUR GOALS

During the coming year we must double our members in the Christian Endeavor. We should have two hundred new Societies by the first of March. Let's have 3000 new converts this winter also. Every Meeting in the Five Years Meeting should have a young people's society before the year is over. If you cannot start a Christian Endeavor Society start a study class, discussion group or something. Start what you can and then the way will open to change it into what you want.

RALLIES AND CONFERENCES!

How can you awaken an interest in young people's work in Meetings where there are no young Friends? Arrange some Rallies or Conferences. EVERY MONTHLY MEETING SHOULD HOLD A YOUNG PEOPLE'S RALLY OR CONFERENCE at some time during the coming year! Then there should be at least one rally in each Quarterly Meeting. Who arranges these rallies? The Quarterly Meeting Superintendent should have the whole Quarterly Meeting mapped out and know just where the most work needs to be done. He should make out a year's program of special meetings, submit them to pastors in the Quarter and set dates for their observation. Arrange for speakers quite a while before hand and try to get the best. Some recitations, special songs and papers can be fitted in around the special address of the Meeting. Look up your Quarterly Meeting Superintendent. Tell him what he is supposed to do and help him carry on the work. LET EVERY YOUNG FRIEND JOIN HANDS IN MAKING THIS A BANNER YEAR FOR THE CHURCH. Why not come swinging into the Five Years' Meeting next fall with five hundred delegates from the young people's societies? Can we do it? Certainly, if we try!

STUDY CLASSES

An excellent book is being studied by the Young Friends in Brooklyn. It is called "The Fellowship of Silence." It is edited by a Church man in England and tells why all churches should emphasize a time of silent worship in Meeting. Copies of the book can be procured by sending to The American Friend. The Indianapolis young Friends are studying the various Yearly Meetings as they are now. This calls for a well arranged program and some detailed study, but the result is most worth while. H. E. Fosdick's little book entitled "The Manhood of the Master" is being used in many groups.

And then Margaret E. Burton's "Comrades in Service" is always interesting to young people's groups. Even if you have a Christian Endeavor Society perhaps a half-dozen or more of the young people will want to meet in a mission study class.

COLLEGE GOSPEL TEAMS

What about a Gospel team for Christmas Holidays? This may be just the thing your Meeting needs to interest the young people. Send in applications right away if you want a team. These fellows come burdened with a message for your Meeting.

NOTICES

Why not have a reception to the returning Boarding School and College Students at Christmas time? It's most worth while!

It is not too late to send in your subscription for the CONFERENCE NEWS BULLETIN at 25 cents, and get the Conference Reports.

PASTORS: Please send us the names of any of your Young People who have gone off to College or The University. We want to follow them up.

QUARTERLY MEETING SUPERINTENDENTS: See to it that every Meeting in your Quarter has some sort of Young People's organization before the year closes. Hold two rallies for the Quarter and one in each Monthly Meeting.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 3

Topic—"The Consecration of Business Life." Rev. 3:14-22.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Beethoven, when he had completed one of his grand musical compositions, was accustomed to test it on an old harpsichord, lest a more perfect instrument might flatter it or hide its defects.

The old harpsichord on which to test our religious life, our new song, is the market place. A man, like muddy water, may be very peaceful when he is quietly "settled"—not shaken up by temptation. That proves nothing about his religious life. But if a man's patience and peace and principles can stand the test of business, his religion is genuine.

John Ruskin said: "Your prize-fighter has some honor in him yet; and so have the men in the ring round him; they will judge him to lose the match by foul hitting. But your prize-merchant gains his match by foul selling, and no one cries out against that. You drive a gambler out of the gambling room who loads dice, but you leave a tradesman in flourishing business who loads scales! For, observe, all dishonest dealing is loading scales. What difference does it make whether I get short weight, adulterate substance, or dishonest fabric?—unless that flaw in the substance or fabric is the worse evil of the two. Give me short measure of food, and I only lose by you; but give me adulterate food and I die by you."

Why is honesty the best policy?

How can we gain respect in business?

What kind of example should we set in business?

They say whisky has a "kick." It has. It will kick you out of prosperity and honor into poverty and disgrace. —The American Issue.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

WHAT $190.79 ACCOMPLISHED LAST YEAR AT ONE MISSION STATION

The secretary of the Mission Board a few days ago, in one mail, received two reports. One was a description of the year's work and read like a story. It was fascinating. The other was mainly statistics. It looked so uninteresting that the Secretary read it at first merely from a sense of duty. As he read it, however, he saw that this prosaic-looking statistical report tells a story as fascinating as the well-written description of the first report.

If you want to know what goes on at a Mission Station and something about what it all amounts to, just look at the "dry" figures it contained. Fifteen years ago there was nothing there but jungle and heathenism. Last year, 1543 boys and girls were attending eighteen mission schools, all organized by and conducted from this one Station.

Ten of these schools are entirely under native teachers. Some of the names are rather remarkable; for instance, Mbihi, Vyalo and Mfwogo. But the really interesting fact is that these ten schools were run at a total expense of $190.79 for the year. Does any one know, offhand, of any way of spending $190 so it will go farther?

Already there were thirty-five church members and last year nineteen more were admitted on probation, while there are 126 candidates for membership under instruction.

The Sunday School at this station has an average attendance of 811

The Christian Endeavor Society has enrolled one hundred active members.

It costs approximately $1,680 to run this Mission Station next year. One Quarterly Meeting is giving most of the money for it.

The name of this mission station is Maragoli in our Africa Mission.

AN ACCOUNT OF VISITS TO VEGUITAS IN CUBA, AND OF THE ONLY GOSPEL MEETINGS HELD THERE FOR YEARS

Special effort has been made this year to reach the much-neglected population of several outlying towns and villages.

The first meeting that we were able to hold was at the place called Veguitas, just a little distance due west of Banes. After the first meeting, which we held about two months ago, the way has been easy, for there was such a deep interest from the very beginning that we could not help feeling impelled to minister to the hungry multitude. We learned that Charles C. Haworth had previously preached in Veguitas. This made the way easier for us, and seemed to have removed the prejudice that sometimes prevails.

There was one man at this place that had certainly received the Gospel at one of these former meetings, for he took it upon himself to see to it that the meeting that we were to hold was thoroughly announced. So he left his work, mounted his horse and rode for miles throughout the surrounding country to the homes that are hidden away, sometimes far off the main thoroughfare and not at all easily found by any one not familiar with the paths that lead thither. This splendid example brought more than a hundred to the first meeting. As we did not announce these meetings, this way of inviting was carried out each time, and this faithful fellow was ready always to go out and get the crowd in. One old man walked in from another village about four miles distant.

Now, it is needless to say that this village is a promising place. The people are substantial country people, and the eight consecutive weeks that we visited the place were occasions of real spiritual blessing, and while we did not press the hearers for any expression at all, some of them gave Prayer is not requested in so many words in the articles we print here this week. But consider the tragedy of the missionary facing such conditions and such opportunities without the prayers of Christians at home! It is to keep up such work as these articles describe that the Board of Missions finds it necessary to raise $60,000 this year.

such voluntary expression as would lead one to believe that the Gospel had found its way to their hearts. Some of these same persons have now come to Banes and have found their way to the meeting house and joined with the congregation in worship.

CLEARING THE JUNGLE AND PREACHING THE GOSPEL AT THE SAME TIME

What is a jungle?

"By jungle," writes Frank Conover, the missionary in charge of the agricultural department of our Africa Mission, "we mean land covered with vegetation ranging from couch-grass to trees four feet in diameter."

When you read what follows, you will understand why Mr. Conover says, "Only one who has had experience knows how much labor it takes to wade through the thick jungle and forest and transform it into farming land. Some of the stumps are so large that it requires about sixty-five men with ropes and chains to roll them out of the way." But couch-grass is about as hard to clear as stumps, for the couch-grass has to be dug out and carried off or kept on top of the ground until dried and dead. It would be expensive business, if wages in Africa were on the same scale as here, when you plow, to keep boys working in the furrow two rods apart to dig up the couch-grass roots and to beat them out. But this is the way it must be done in those clearings where grass is found.

It is little wonder the natives become discouraged. A year ago, a number of the native boys undertook to clear small plots of ground belonging to the Mission and to put in crops of their own with the understanding that in return for clearing the land they were to have whatever they could raise on it in one year, and Frank Conover now reports that most of this past year's work in the agricultural department has been to finish clearing the land let to the natives for cropping last year. With their simple little native tools the grubbing was too much for them.

Coffee and corn are growing in the same field. Fifty acres were cleared and first planted to corn. Then, by the end of last June, this same ground was staked for coffee and coffee trees were being set out on it. Corn is raised for feed for the work oxen while the coffee promises to be a source of revenue for the Mission. Coffee raising also furnishes opportunity of teaching the African how to cultivate a crop which he can raise to advantage. "About 30,000 little coffee plants are in the nursery—most of them from seed from our own trees. Lirhandá, having more than they could use, we procured several thousand plants there. Our large coffee trees are filling nicely. At present, I am unable to say just what the yield will be—perhaps a quarter of a pound to a tree."

The nursery is a busy place. And it is, moreover, a civilizing force among these primitive people. "Two nursery beds are full of little eucalyptus trees. There are three or four hundred—the seed coming from Lirhandá Station. Also three beds of cypress. Last year we secured peach seed from Maragoli Station. This year we have supplied the several stations with trees as follows: Maragoli, 20 loquats; Lirhandá, 30 loquats, 10 peach; Ketosh, 40 cedar and cypress, 8 grapefruit or lemon, 10 peach, 75 loquats, 300 eucalyptus; A. B. Chilson, 30 loquats, 8 grapefruit or lemon, 10 peach, 25 eucalyptus; Kaimosi, 2 peach. Also sold trees outside of the Mission to the amount of Rs. 7, besides giving a good many to chiefs and natives living near the station."

Finally, we see something of the deeper significance of all this work, involving daily intimate contact between the missionary and scores of native helpers. "This department, the past year, has brought an average of ninety-one men and boys under the sound of the Gospel each month, at an average total cost of $45 per month." Thus, in the heart of Africa, our missionaries are clearing the jungle and preaching the Gospel at the same time.

SETTING UP A NEW MONTHLY MEETING IN CUBA

In a beautiful valley not far from Gibara lies a thrifty village called Velasco. Several years ago, the missionaries used occasionally to visit this village for preaching services. Usually they were accompanied by one or more young, enthusiastic, native Christians who were gaining their first experience in public service. As there were no public halls nor school houses, these preaching services were held in private houses.

After a while it seemed best to purchase a thatched-roofed house of good size, in which services could be regularly held. For a time Jose Reyes came out to Velasco every two weeks. When the number of Christians had increased a little, it seemed best for Jose to go to Velasco to live. The move was a good one, as it marked the beginning of a native church carried on without help from American workers.

Jose worked early and late. A Bible School was established; then a church was organized; and finally a Christian Endeavor Society was started. A few months ago, the Christians of Velasco sent a petition to the Gibara Monthly Meeting, asking that a Monthly Meeting be set up. The petition was granted and the evening of October 11 was chosen for establishing the Monthly Meeting. Long-continued heavy rains made the streets almost impassable. When the time came for the meeting, rain was still falling as though to try the purpose of those who had set their hearts upon the organization. The members filled the front benches, however, while their friends and interested spectators filled the remaining seats. At this service, Jose Reyes, who had previously passed an examination, was recorded as a minister of the Gospel and received his charge from one of the missionaries. After a few words of instruction to the members of the new meeting and a short talk on the church and its place in the community, thirteen were received into full membership and fifteen others admitted as candidates. Finally the necessary officers and committees were appointed.

In such events as this one at Velasco is found the beginning of the end of the work of the foreign missionary—the goal toward which the missionary is working. May God hasten the day when Cuba shall be evangelized and there shall be established all over the island native congregations, eager to carry the news of the Gospel not only to all within their own borders but to other countries as well.

OPENING OF THE SCHOOL YEAR IN FRIENDS MISSION, CUBA

At Banes the school has opened with a good attendance in spite of the fact that there is an entire new corps of teachers. Lloyd H. Mendenhall has charge of this school. His room is starting the first month with a larger enrollment than there was in the same room last year. He is assisted by Santos Trevino, one of the first Friends workers in Cuba and a former teacher at Banes, who for several years has been out of the Friends schools on account of home duties. On account of not having any other teacher Mrs. Mendenhall is heroically taking the English school which is subventioned by the United Fruit Co.

Holguin school has opened in its new quarters and has an enrollment of 110. The house is not yet finished but the teachers under the leadership of Clarence McClean are industriously working away. Three of the pupils have been examined and approved by the Provincial Examiners and will now begin their studies for the bachelor's degree.

Gibara school begins the new school year with the largest enrollment it has had at any time in the fifteen years of its history. Miss Mary Pickett is again at the head of this school and Miss Iva V. Pickering is serving her apprenticeship in preparation to take the directorship of the school later. One interesting feature of the school here is that a number of young women from the church are taking advantage of the opportunity to educate themselves. More than half the pupils are volunteer attenders at Sunday School.

The Puerto Padre school has opened in its usual efficient and successful way. Miss Lena A. Hadley has the same assistant as last year. This school is maintaining the prestige in the town which it has enjoyed since it was founded.

J. Rodil, who has been assistant pastor at Banes for the past few months and who has spent nearly two years in preparation at the El Cristo schools, expects this fall to enter Susquehanna University at Selings Grove Pa., to better prepare himself for work among his people.

Alberto Lopez, an able young man from Puerto Padre who last year assisted in the work at Gibara, has returned to El Cristo to finish his theological studies. His sister, Emma Lopez, is preparing herself for work among her people by studying at Wilmington, O.

Faustino Carrion, an earnest young Friends preacher from Havana Prov., is this year pursuing his studies at Candler College, a Methodist school near Havana. He goes home each week to preach to his people.

Francisco Gonzales, who spent last year in the El Cristo schools in this year helping in the church work at Gibara and surrounding towns. At the same time he is endeavoring to study and next spring take the examination, in the first year's work toward the bachelor's degree.

Alvaro Segura, a consecrated young man from Gibara, has entered the El Cristo schools this year to do the preparatory work to enable him to later take up the theological studies in preparation for the work of the ministry.

Manuela Garrido, a young woman who last year completed the work at the Gibara school, expects this year to enter the Normal Department of the El Cristo schools to prepare herself for teaching in the school at her home church. She was prevented from entering at the opening of the year by an attack of malarial fever, but is now better and will soon be ready to begin school work.

Angela Marcos, a student of the Gibara school, this year has charge of the native school at Velasco. The prospects for this school are encouraging in view of the fact that it is self-supporting. Angela is a good help in the church and Sunday School at this place.

THE IOWA PAGE

ADULT AND SECONDARY WORK

Two very important sections of the Bible School are the Adult and Secondary Divisions. It is said that if you would inspire a boy to do a man's work, just keep him surrounded by a group of men. For several years the Adult Division of the Church School has been growing more rapidly than other divisions. This is probably due to the fact that in the organized class more effective work is being accomplished.

The work of the Secondary and Adult Divisions is quite similar in many ways and the constitution and organization in each Division is practically the same. The class elects a Teacher, President, Vice-president, Secretary, Treasurer, and Membership, Social and Devotional-Missionary Committees.

In many schools any class thus organized is so reported and counted. Now, in order to be recognized as an organized class, the above officers and committees are required and also a report made to the State, giving the class name and motto, accompanying the report with twenty-five cents for International Certificate. The class is then enrolled with the classes of all denominations and becomes a member of the International Sunday School Adult or Secondary Organized Classes.

This links the class up with all other classes in other denominations as well as among Friends, and adds zeal and efficiency to the class work.

The past year has seen a rapid growth in the number of organized classes in Iowa Yearly Meeting, the number of Adults being 81, as compared to 47 a year ago, and 58 Secondary classes, as compared to 44 a year ago. These classes have not organized simply for the sake of organization, but to accomplish more effective service. Not all have enrolled yet with the State Association, but are urged to do so at an early date.

The Adult Division now has charge of the Home Department as a part of its work just as the elementary Division has charge of the Cradle Roll. The Home Department becomes, therefore, an outlet for the genius and energy of the Adult Division.

The Adult Class is a hive of industry. In the last report of the Adult Division to the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, the aim of the Division, as stated, is—

To realize in each adult life:

1. A knowledge of the will of God.
2. An acceptance of Jesus Christ as personal Savior and Lord.
3. An efficiently trained Christian character.
4. The fulfilling of one's whole duty in Christian service.

Its relation to the Home Department as given in the report is: "The church has a responsibility of training parents and the Sunday School should, therefore, extend its work to the home.

(a) By caring for those who cannot attend the sessions of the school.

(b) By assisting parents to equip themselves to meet the responsibilities and duties of parenthood.

(c) By promoting the study of the Bible in the home.

(d) By securing the observance of family devotions.

Under "Courses of Study" the report recommends "Special courses for elective study groups, and for the educational period in the through-the-week meetings of the Departments—

1. Teacher Training.
2. Church Leadership.
3. Parent Training.
4. Missions.
5. Temperance.
6. Community Service.
7. Local Church Problems.
8. Student Problems."

The Adult Division recommends one book a year to be read, the one for this year being "Personal Religion and the Social Awakening," by Rose L. Finney, price 75c.

From the above, which is only a very small portion of the report and its recommendations, it will be seen that Adults and Adult Classes desirous of doing something, can find plenty of work and that this Division is not isolated nor exclusive, but anxious to discover and serve the needs of the community and its individual members.

In the last annual report, the superintendent of this Division for Iowa Yearly Meeting asked the classes to report the special lines of service entered the past year. In the reports we note the following:

"We sent two barrels of canned fruits to the Orphans' Home at Des Moines; have sent flowers and tokens of love to the sick; at present we are having the committees compete to see which one can have the largest attendance these hot Sundays." (That was during the hot weather, last summer.)

"We have had charge of the Children's Day exercises this year." (This from a Secondary Class.)

"Contributed to the new church."

"Repaired parsonage, including painting, shingling and adding porches; gave fur overcoat; entered contest on memorizing and reading Scripture texts."

"Made and presented to school, chart showing class giving largest offering in proportion to membership; gave Christmas dolls to orphans."

"Sent letters to absent members; maintained basket ball and baseball teams; gave $12.00 to missions."

These are only a few of the many things being done by the Adult and Secondary Classes in the Yearly Meeting, but they are suggestive of what may be done by live classes.

Adult leaflet No. 4, price 2c each or $1.00 per hundred, gives many more suggestions, as its title indicates: "One hundred things one hundred classes have done."

The wide-awake Adult and Secondary Classes are finding something to do in their communities. As these are reported, it affords inspiration to others to try also. Let each teacher in both Divisions, if the Class is not already organized, or, has not obtained a certificate, see that the class is organized at once and enrolled with the State organization. Boost for the organized class and the organized class will boost the school.

NEW CAMPUS AT PENN.

There appeared, recently, on the Iowa page a statement concerning a proposed move from the old Penn College campus to a new tract of land, known as the John White estate, and which came to the college through the liberality of Charles and Albert Johnson. Friends of the institution will be glad to know that the Board of Trustees has voted to erect the new buildings on this campus. Work has already begun on the main building. Funds have been provided for this main building, which is really a group building, also for the girls' dormitory, which will accomodate 100 girls, a gymnasium and a central heating plant. All of these buildings will be completed and ready for occupancy by the opening of college, September, 1917.

It will be a great source of satisfaction to all Friends who are interested in Penn College to feel that this great prosperity has come to her, and that so large and promising a future opens up.

The management of the college, while thankful for these blessings, is confident that there remain many tasks to perform and that much additional support must be secured. It is the intention therefore to push forward in the work of financing the institution to meet these growing possibilities.

BIBLE SCHOOL NOTES

The Earlham Bible School has special Missionary instruction given by the Missionary Superintendent the first Sunday in each month. The Missionary committee of the Monthly Meeting consists of the missionary superintendents of the Monthly Meeting and Bible School, the Chairman of the Missionary Committee of the Christian Endeavor and one appointed by the Missionary Society. These work harmoniously in all the Departments of the Church. The Meeting supports a Missionary on the field and gives over $200.00 in addition, annually, to missions.

The Bible School of the Indianola Friends Church recently purchased a Workers Library consisting of seventeen books at a cost of $10.00. Each book was selected for its own value, and the school counts the investment of large worth.

The Bible School Superintendent of Ackworth Quarterly Meeting is perfecting a plan for Decision Day on the same Sunday in all the Schools of the Quarter.

Ora W. Carrell, the Bible School Field Secretary, is on a profitable trip into Winneshiek and Minneapolis Quarterly Meetings.

First Friends Church, Des Moines

The Organized Adult Classes of the School are each taking charge of and conducting successfully, the midweek prayer meeting of the church once a month.

The Bible School co-operates with the Womens Foreign Missionary Society in providing a scholarship in the Boys' Training School in Jamaica.

The Teacher Training Class of young women entertained the John Bright Class at a Hallowe'en Social at the home of the teacher, Ruth Kirk.

AT BEAR CREEK

The Bear Creek Sunday School gave a temperance pageant on Sunday evening, November 5. The house was crowded with an appreciative audience. Great credit is due those taking part in the excellent program and also to Maria Cook, our Sunday School superintendent of temperance work, who planned the pageant.

COMMUNITY SUPPER

The community supper and rally social at the Eastern Avenue Friends' Meeting-house, Lynn, Mass., last night proved to be a big success, when upwards of 200 partook of a splendid repast provided by the Women's guild, with Mrs. Emma Fisher as chairman of the supper committee. After supper Miss Clara Delano rendered two piano solos and Mr. Becker, of the local Y. M. C. A., gave a series of readings.

George C. Herbert, the superintendent of the Bible school, spoke upon the work of that department and made an appeal for more workers to assist in this growing branch of the work. Mr. Herbert also spoke upon the pledge and envelope system, making the appeal for all to give a definite amount each week for home and outside expenses. Mrs. Jennie W. Crosman spoke upon the personal work needed and made an earnest appeal for greater effort on the part of the membership along this line of service. At this point the whole company joined and sang a number of the Billy Sunday songs, which were enjoyed by all.

George A. Crosman, the eldest member of the meeting, spoke upon the great need for spiritual strength and how we needed exercise to develop our whole being, body, mind and spirit, expressing his great desire that the church should care for this all-round development of the community.

After more songs by the audience, Tom A. Sykes spoke upon the work of the past year, pointing out that this had been the most active in the history of the church, and that the foundation was laid for a larger work in the coming days. The remodeling fund was coming in very satisfactorily, and the work upon the building was proceeding; also that through the kindness of George A. Crosman the plot of land at the side of the church had been purchased for the use of the church and making possible a new line of activities in the spring among the community.

In the absence of Charles Burk (through illness), Tom A. Sykes spoke upon the men's work, and made an appeal for more men to step into this circle of service and fellowship. In closing the report he paid a high tribute of appreciation to the work and faithfulness of the superintendent and officers and teachers of the Bible school, also to the splendid work of the leaders of the Campfire Boys, the Lend-a-Hand circle, the Women's guild and the various activities that have formed part of the program of the year's work. The hearty thanks of the meeting was extended to the workers who provided the supper and arranged the details, and a most pleasant and profitable gathering was closed with the benediction.—Lynn Paper.

LEBANON HOSPITAL OFFICE

Room 411, Forrest Building
119 S. Fourth Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

The following first-hand information has just been received from a member of the Beyrout Committee who left Syria in June last, arriving in New York in September.

The Executive Committee in Beyrout is able to control and direct the affairs of the Hospital, all the funds going through their hands. The Director, Dr. Watson Smith, is still in charge and the work is going on uninterruptedly.

There were 145 patients in residence, all of them the most necessitous cases, others having had to be refused on economical grounds. Many were suffering from bodily diseases as well as mental derangement making the work of the small nursing staff exceedingly heavy.

It is a great proof of the appreciation and value put upon the work of the Hospital that it has been left unmolested and allowed to continue without interruption. Some of the highest officials, and others, have shown much consideration and kindness, and have made it possible to obtain food and other necessities in times of great difficulty and scarcity.

Prices are enormously increased and patients' payments have fallen rapidly.

There is terrible distress throughout Syria, thousands are dying of starvation and disease, and Asfuriyeh is one of the few proofs of God's love and care left in that sorrowful land.

The ordinary subscriptions are not enough to supply the funds urgently needed, and the Committee makes an earnest appeal for support in these times of special difficulty.

Will you respond to this appeal to meet the increased needs of the Institution and enable it to continue its work of humanity and healing in obedience to the command and example of our Lord Jesus, of whom we read, "His fame went through all Syria"?

CHURCH AT WORK

Chester, Indiana—Home Coming Day was observed by Chester Friends on November 5. An historical letter was read, written by Albert H. Votaw, Lansdowne, Pa., giving the history of the meeting from its beginning. Another history sketch was also read, giving an account of the revival work here since 1865. Several letters were read from those who have been members at this place including persons from California, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Ohio and Indiana. The sermon was given in the morning by Prof. Philip Furnas of Earlham College, and a company of students from that institution furnished the music. The basket dinner was served at noon in connection with a social hour. On the afternoon of November 12, which was World's Temperance Sunday, a paper was read by the temperance committee on the forward movement of the temperance cause.

Fountain City, Indiana—A very helpful and far reaching union revival meeting closed here on November 6, after four weeks continuance. Edgar A. Woolman, who was the evangelist, is a forceful speaker and presented the full gospel clearly and in a convincing manner. He spoke boldly against sin of all kinds. Frank Reed of Salem, Ohio, conducted the music and proved to be very efficient in leading. The house was frequently filled to overflowing and a large number were turned away. Three special meetings were held for men in the Friends Church and simultaneous services for the women were held in the Methodist Church. It has been years since Fountain City has been so universally interested in a religious movement and spiritual unity prevailed. About 30 persons definitely confessed Christ, and we believe that all who attended the meetings who were open to the truth were uplifted and helped. It was a time of seed sowing from which we believe a future harvest will be gathered.

Jonesboro, Ind.—Under the direction of Chas. A. Axton, the church here has moved onward and upward. Our services are well attended and our Sunday School is prospering under the superintendency of Rachel Pierce and her co-workers. On the evening of November 5, the services were in charge of the young people. Special music was a prominent feature of the program. Our pastor concluded the service with a short sermon.

We are looking forward to a series of meetings to begin the first Sabbath in the year. This service will be in charge of the pastor, assisted by Franklin and Mary Moon Meredith, the latter residing in Jonesboro, and are a source of great strength to us. We feel grateful for God's hand placed upon us and wish to publicly acknowledge his goodness and loving kindness.

Everett, Washington—Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting was held here November 3 and 4. Mary Hornaday, a minister from Portland, Oregon, was acceptably in attendance and gave good service there, and on the following Sabbath at Lake Stevens. Jacob Replogle was granted a minute for service in the state of Indiana. A concern of Everett Friends on the subject of military drill in the High School was presented, and a committee was appointed to offer the united protest of Friends to the school board against the continuance of such drill. The committee presented this protest as did a delegation from the Ministerial Federation, bearing a united protest of

Practical Economy

Baking powders made from alum or phosphate may be bought for a trifle less than Royal Baking Powder, which is made from cream of tartar, derived from grapes.

Alum powders are not only cheap, but they differ greatly in leavening power.

If a cheap baking powder is used for a fine cake and the cake turns out a failure there is a waste of costly materials worth more than a whole can of the cheap baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder produces the finest food, and its use therefore, results in an actual saving.

that body, and also representatives of certain women's organizations. It is probable that the drill will be excluded. All the Quarterly Meeting sessions were characterized by much unity and a deeply devotional spirit.

Portland, Ore.—The First Friends' Church has been enjoying a series of special Sunday evening services devoted to the interests of the various organized classes in the Sunday School. The first of the series was when the George Fox Bible Class had charge and the pastor, H. L. Cox, gave an address on the "Investment of Talent." A week later the Penn Brotherhood had charge, when the pastor spoke on "God's Choice of a Man." A week later the Elizabeth Fry Class was in charge and to a group of seventy women the pastor spoke on "God's Call to Womanhood." A week later the Bible Class of old people had charge. These services seemed to be filled with inspiration and uplift.

Lurana M. Terrell, of Iowa, assisted by Neita Newton, is doing some evangelistic work in the limits of Oregon Yearly Meeting. She is at present engaged at Portland, Oregon, in what promises to be a helpful revival.

Chester A. Hadley, the new pastor at the Piedmont Friends' Church, Portland, is getting started nicely in his work and finds encouraging features in this difficult field. A new baby boy, Sherman J., has lately come to assist him in his work.

Hinkle Creek, Indiana—In the autumn it was decided that centennial day would be observed at this place. The meeting was historic, its organization dating back to 1836. A large choir, under the direction of Halcy Cammack, furnished the music. Scripture reading was given by Amos Carson and the invocation by Arthur Hendrickson. "The Beginning of Indiana" was a theme considered by Ward Applegate, while Earl Carson had a paper on "The Quaker Settlements of Indiana." Hon. T. E. Beals discussed "What the Quakers Have Contributed Toward Making Indiana." Asa Woodard brought a message from John 4:38. The benediction was pronounced by the pastor, David Commons.

All gathered in the grove at the noon hour with well-filled baskets and an elaborate dinner was served. At the evening service the history of the local meeting was considered by Amos Carson, Julia Woodard and Walter McConnell. Milton C. Beals had a paper on "Prominent Workers in Its

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent. Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

A religious press conference will be held in St. Louis on December 5, in connection with the meeting of the Federal Council of Churches.

Berea Meeting in Virginia recently held a very interesting and successful temperance cantata service under the leadership of Jesse Stanfield.

"University Life" is a new weekly paper published by the students of Friends University, Wichita, Kansas. It is an interesting eight-page, four-column paper. Its issue of October 31, was made a political issue of sixteen pages.

Charles and Lenna Lescault are conducting a series of meetings at Westfield, Indiana. They are having a large attendance and great interest is manifested. The business men have closed the stores for the evening meetings.

The first of the Monthly Meeting suppers for the year was given at the First Friends Church at Indianapolis, Indiana, on the evening of October 19, with the usual good interest. An address was given by Prof. J. F. Haines on "Literature and Its Relation to Life."

Robert E. Pretlow, pastor of the meeting at Seattle, Washington, was a member of the executive committee of the recent dry campaign, and at the recent election that city returned a majority of nearly 15,000 against the liquor proposition, being a reversal of approximately 30,000 majority over two years ago.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

The foreign department of the national board of the Y. W. C. A. have 45 secretaries in five countries. Seven more have been asked for to supplement the staff in Buenos Aires. Two sisters in Pennsylvania have gone at their own charge to join the association staff in Bombay.

Summer conferences are a vital part of the annual program in India, China, Japan, and meet the same need for supplying spiritual refreshment as in the United States, where 6454 persons attended the fifteen conferences of 1916.

BIBLE SCHOOL December 3.

Subject—Jesus Christ the First and the Last.

Lesson, Revelation 1.

Golden Text—Fear not; I am the first and the last, and the living one and I was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore. Rev. 1:17-18.

The series of lessons connected with the life and work of the Apostle Paul have been completed. We now have three lessons in the book of Revelation. The consistent Biblical student will do well to read the entire book as soon as possible. Also if he has at hand a good guide to the study of this writing he may find assistance in reading the opinions of another, especially in connection with the more obscure parts, but he must keep in mind that there are many interpreters of Revelation and that there are many widely divergent views of its authorship, purpose and meaning. Care must be taken to secure a reliable commentary if the student would avoid fantastic interpretations.

In the introduction, verses 1-3, it is plainly stated that this Revelation is that which God gave to Jesus Christ to be revealed to the Christians through a man by the name of John. Tradition says this John was the Apostle, one of the twelve. The order by which the revelation was made is given as; God, Jesus, the angel messenger and John. The events in question are shortly to come to pass. The information is now being given. Fortunate or blessed is he who heeds the warning and prepares himself for the coming events.

The salutation is found in verses 4-8. The message is for the churches located in Western Asia Minor, seven in number (possibly seven are selected to fit into the image scheme which is the literary basis of the book). The words which follow undertake to honor and describe the personages who convey the message about to be given. From them we learn John's conception of the majesty, dignity, and the relation of the divine personages. Also something of his conception of the atoning, work and character of the Christ. Confidence is expressed in another coming of Christ among men, this time in all his majesty and power.

Verses 9, 10 introduce the author and the circumstances under which he received the message. Tradition says he had been banished to this spot. The text itself indicates that the Christians were passing through a period of persecution.

Verses 12-20 attempt to describe the majesty of God and the wonders of the throne and its surroundings. The figures used exhaust the authors resources, and there are times when he seems to change his figures because they fail to convey all that he sees. For instance, in describing the hair of this wonderful personage he at first says it was white as white wool and then changes or at least adds, as white as snow. In other words he is at a loss to find any words or figures sufficiently descriptive to convey the glory of that which his eyes behold.

The Christians of that region were undergoing a very severe trial of their faith and we have here a message intended to inspire them to continue in their faithfulness. Jesus is pictured to them as a living savior, he is with God His Father in Heaven. He is actively interested in the welfare of his followers on earth. Events are being shaped to bring about the glory of the Lamb and His Church. Persecution is as the refiner's fire. Blessed is he who endures to the end.

THE STONELESS PLUM

In explaining the origin of the stone, Mr. Burbank advances the idea, for example, that the peach and the almond are not only closely related, but offshoots of the same identical plant. When trees, in their evolution, began to bear seeds, these were undoubtedly unsheathed. To protect their seeds and consequently their offspring from destruction by the birds, an armor was built up around them and finally, throughout the ages, this stony armor was covered with a flesh and a skin, for further protection, and as an inducement for birds or animals to carry the seed within away to a new environment.

So, while in wild environment, fruit and nut-bearing trees had a justification of self-protection for developing a stone around their seed, now, since man propagates these trees by cutting instead of by seed planting, the necessity for the stone has disappeared. It is Mr. Burbank's belief that almost all the fruits of the future will be stoneless, and he has produced many varieties of stoneless fruits, including some entirely seedless ones.

The Luther Burbank Society, which has for its aim and purpose a broad distribution of a knowledge of Mr. Burbank and his work, issues a number of booklets on the subject, and these may be had, free of charge by applying to Superintendent of Publication, Luther Burbank Society, Westminster Building, Chicago.

CORRESPONDENCE

Red Rock, Okla.,

Editor The American Friend:

Thinking some of our Friends who live elsewhere might be interested in our Indian brothers and sisters and what they are doing, we submit the following:

At Otoe Mission Chapel, on November 2, was held our first Indian baby show. There were nineteen beautiful babies, some of them pronounced almost perfect physically by the examining physicians. A Mothers' Club of the Otoe tribe was organized on that day. The officers of the club are all Otoes excepting one. The club is to hold its meetings at the chapel once each month.

This shows that the Indian women are as keenly alive to the present-day problems and interests as are her white sisters. The writer was one of the speakers at the baby show. Our subject was "The Duties of Indian Parents to Their Children."

CORNWALL QUARTERLY MEETING

Cornwall Quarterly Meeting was held at Clintondale, N. Y., November 18-19, with the four meetings of the quarter well represented.

The discussion before the meeting on Ministry and Oversight, "How can we increase the interest of young people in the business of the church," aroused much interest in behalf of the youth who must soon occupy places left vacant by the passing out of life of the older ones." The Missionary Conference was held on the evening of the eighteenth, the address being given by Albert G. Shepard, Yearly Meeting Field Secretary. He dwelt especially on the need of a well-balanced financial system for the accomplishment of best results along missionary lines, as in all departments of church work. Much interest was manifested, and we trust it was an evening that will prove fruitful in results. The meeting for worship Wednesday morning was a time of real spiritual uplift. Albert G. Shepard preached with force and impressiveness and ministers of the local meetings delivered helpful messages.

After the enforced quiet of the summer, due to the prevalence of sickness, the meetings are forming into line again for winter work.

Tillson gave a social recently for the Sunday School members and their parents.

At Clintondale union meetings will be held next week, conducted by Brother Piper, pastor of Friends, and Brother Hawley, pastor of the Methodists.

BORN.

Bowen—At Boulder Col. October 31, 1916, to Kirby V. and Alta Bowen, a daughter, Alta Vera.

DIED.

Coppock—Joel H. Coppock, of Jonesboro, Indiana, died suddenly at his home November 3d, 1916, aged seventy-nine years. He was a life long Friend and he was a faithful Sabbath School teacher and Church attendant. The funeral services were in charge of the pastor, Chas. R. Axton, assisted by Fred E. Carter of Fairmount.

Kinzer—Miriam Kinzer, daughter of Eli and Charlotte Phelps, was born April 6, 1836 and died at her home in Carmel, Indiana, October 13, 1916. She was a birthright Friend and became a Christian early in life and remained a faithful follower of Christ until death. She was always faithful to the church, attending its services whenever health and circumstances would permit. She leaves a son and daughter. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor Gertrude Reinier.

Mills—Benjamin A. Mills, son of Branson and Elizabeth Mills, was born at Lost Creek, Tenn., November 13, 1847 and died at the home of his son in Seattle, Washington, November 5, 1916. He married Rebecca Walker in 1868 and she, with one son and three daughters, survives him. In 1877 he was recorded a minister and exercised his gift as occasion offered during the remainder of his life.

Owen—Edwin Junius Owen, son of Samuel and Ruth Owen, was born October 18, 1857 and died at his home near Ackworth, Iowa, October 4, 1916, after an illness of several months. He lived on the Owen farm all his life except three years spent in Nebraska. Although his suffering was very great the last few weeks of his life, he was patient and courageous to the last, often praying for strength to endure his suffering. He leaves a wife, son, three daughters and four sisters. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor, George J. McClellan.

Rogers—Clarkson VanDusen Rogers, son of James C. and Agnes Rogers, was born near Toronto, Canada, and died at Burdick, Indiana, aged 23 years. He was a member of Friends Church at Fairmount, Ind., where he had moved from Brooklyn, N. Y. A short time before his death, he moved to Burdick where he kept a store. While generating a gasoline lamp it exploded, burning him so badly that he lived only a few hours. His father, James C. Rogers, was a grandson of Ibing Rogers a well known minister among Friends fifty years ago in Canada, New York and New England. He leaves a widow, father, mother and one brother. He left a clear testimony that he was a Christian.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

The President's Proclamation

By the President of the United States of America, a Proclamation:

"It has long been the custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. The year that has elapsed since we last observed our day of Thanksgiving has been rich in blessings to us as a people, but the whole face of the world has been darkened by war. In the midst of our peace and happiness our thoughts dwell with painful disquiet upon the struggles and sufferings of the nations at war and of the peoples upon whom war has brought disaster without choice or possibility of escape on their part. We cannot think of our own happiness without thinking also of their pitiful distress.

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do appoint Thursday, the 30th of November, as a day of National Thanksgiving and prayer, and urge and advise the people to resort to their several places of worship on that day to render thanks to Almighty God for the blessings of peace and unbroken prosperity which He has bestowed upon our beloved country in such unstinted measure. And I also urge and suggest our duty in this, our day of peace and abundance, to think in deep sympathy of the stricken peoples of the world upon whom the curse and terror of war has so pitilessly fallen, and to contribute out of our abundant means to the relief of their sufferings. Our people could in no better way show their real attitude toward the present struggle of the nations than by contributing out of their abundance to the relief of the sufferings which war has brought in its train.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the City of Washington this seventeenth day of November, in the year of Our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred and Sixteen, and of the Independence of the United States the One Hundred and Forty-first.

"WOODROW WILSON.

"By the President, Robert Lansing, Secretary of State."

IMPORTANT TO SUBSCRIBERS

Apparently all subscribers to The American Friend have not read the announcements in these columns during recent weeks, to the effect that on and after January 1, 1917, the subscription price will be advanced to $2.00. THIS ADVANCE APPLIES TO ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS WHICH EXPIRE ON JANUARY 1, 1917 AND AFTERWARDS. Sending in the money before January 1 does not avail to secure the paper at the present rate, IF THE EXPIRATION COMES ON JANUARY 1, OR LATER. We send notices of expiration each month, for the guidance of all subscribers. We cannot accept $1.50 in payment for a full year's subscription, whose expiration dates from January 1, and later. All subscriptions which expire before January 1, next, will be renewed at the old rate. Our readers will readily see that a certain time had to be fixed by which the new rate is to be governed. This advance in price is due wholly to the great advance in the cost of blank paper. Will all our subscribers please take note and pass the word on to others?

I'LL LIVE MY THANKS

A day for giving thanks, and though I come,
The year's good seems so great it leaves me dumb.
I con the by-gone days. In each I see
So much more joy than ill that came to me.

So many loving pressures to Thy heart,
And sudden dear reminders that Thou art
Not far from any one of us; such sweet
Surprises dropped from heaven at my feet.

Then, as a little child seeks out the place
Where mother sits, and smiles into her face
The loving thanks it has no words to say,
I come to Thee on this Thanksgiving day.

I gaze into Thine eyes and see them shine,
I meet the yearning love they speak to mine;
This only can I say: "In days to be,
O loving Christ, I'll live my thanks to Thee."

Bertha Gerneaux Woods.

A HYMN OF THANKSGIVING

We thank Thee, Father for the years
Thy love has shared our hopes and fears;
We bless Thee for Thy guiding hand
Which points us toward the promised land.

Thy cloud by day, Thy fire by night,
Have clearly shown the path that's right;
Our marching orders from Thy Word
Have made us sure, "Thus saith the Lord."

We bless Thee for a faith that knows
The reason for its heart's repose;
We praise Thee for a love that bears
The burden of our sins and cares.

Abide with us, O Christ of God,
Thou who hast travelled on our road;
Be with Thy church for years to come,
And daily cheer our journey home.

Charles M. Sheldon.

THANKSGIVING DAY PRAYER

God of our fathers, whose mercies have not failed us in any time of need, accept now the tribute of our hearts' thanksgiving for thy guardian care and love. For plenteous harvests gathered in our fields; for the increase of our flocks and the fruits of our orchards; for joy and comfort in our homes, and all kindly social relations; for blessings innumerable, which have crowned the year with good; for hopes of the future, and the teachings of thy Holy Spirit—blessed be thou, O Lord our God! Let the thoughts and affections of this day lead us, through childlike faith, to larger light and knowledge of thy will. Hear us, our Father, for Christ's sake; and, if it please thee, renew our blessings year by year. And unto thee be praise evermore. Amen—Closet and Altar.

BE THANKFUL

One of the most important incidents in Mr. Wesley's religious experience was a conversation with the porter of Oxford College. The man called at Mr. Wesley's room late one evening and said that he wished to talk with the young student. After they had conversed together for awhile, Mr. Wesley, in a spirit of pleasantry, told the porter to go home and get another coat. The man replied, "This is the only coat I have in the world, and I thank God for it." "Go home and get your supper," remarked Wesley. "I have had nothing today but a drink of water, and I thank God for that," was the reply. "It is late and you will be locked out, and then what will you have to thank God for?" said Wesley. "I will thank Him," replied the porter, "that I have the dry stones to lie upon."

"John," said Wesley, "you thank God when you have nothing to wear, nothing to eat, and no bed to lie upon. What else do you thank him for?" "I thank Him," returned the poor fellow, "that He has given me life and being, and a heart to love Him, and a desire to serve Him."

Wesley stated afterward that the interview made a lasting impression on his mind, and convinced him there was something in religion to which he was then a stranger.—Lesson Illustrator.

A Day of Thanksgiving

The President has done well in his annual Thanksgiving proclamation to call the attention of his fellow countrymen to the conditions of a suffering world. A thanksgiving at such a time would be the embodiment of selfishness and a travesty upon the name that shut out from its thought all sympathy for suffering humanity abroad. Indeed no heart can know the best meaning of gratitude and thanksgiving that has not fellowshiped with distress and suffering in their extremity. The American heart today is not worthy to give thanks if it finds no enlarging sympathy and no impulse to help in this dire calamity across the sea. For it is the spirit of love and good will and helpfulness and service from which an uplifting thanksgiving alone can spring.

Our national thanksgiving anniversary ought more and more to become a day of national invoice. Thanksgiving is a tragedy that is mechanical and springs only from a dead heart. The manner in which we respond year by year, personally and nationally, to the President's appeal, is a sure register of our life and character. To the extent that the blessings of wealth and possessions bulk large in our thought upon this anniversary day will the materialistic bent of our religious mind be emphasized. To the extent that our interest encompasses humanity as a brotherhood and that our rejoicing finds rootage in the prosperity of our neighbors, will the broadening and deepening of our spiritual experience be determined.

The spirit of genuine and heartfelt thanksgiving is infectious. The sordidness of life cannot thrive in an atmosphere of thankfulness. The spirit of dependence upon God enlarges the horizon of life, because it finds a way for the uplift of humanity everywhere. Selfishness alone is narrow and can find no place in that divine character which is the emblem of true discipleship. Gratitude is a helpful contagion that will drive the gloom from the family circle or the national hearthstone, a virtue to be practised as the common experience of every day life.

Today the national heart should be glad at the advances of prohibition almost everywhere. The American people are responding once again to the claims of conscience no less than of expediency, for at the end the liquor traffic will be destroyed because it is a crime against a really Christian civilization. We should rejoice because of the finer and deeper spirit of co-operation which prevades the religious life of our people. The walls of religious caste are crumbling and a democracy of Christian brotherhood is finding substitution for the controversialism of creeds. The churches are hearing anew the call of the great commission, and, both at home and abroad, are seeking an adjustment of divisions in harmony with the needs of the great harvest field of the world.

A day like this should call a halt upon the spirit of militarism, in our own land and in every land. Man cannot thank God for guns and forts and battleships, when he should be remembering that "God is our refuge and strength." It is a day when America should be advised to take Jesus Christ seriously and to accept his program as the only practical program for human life. The religion of preparedness is a religion of fear and can find no place in the mechanism of a people whose trust is in Jehovah. How can true discipleship stress the guardianship of a loving heavenly Father and at the same time be seeing specters and bogies and enemies upon every hand? The best defense for any person or any nation is to follow the precepts of Jesus, to go and be reconciled to those who have aught against us. There will then be no need of arsenals and forts.

The Society of Friends has much for which it indeed may be thankful. There are evidences upon every hand of the striving for a larger vision and a larger life. The awakening of youth is an occasion for the deepest gratitude. The larger appeal for missions is evidence of a larger faith and an expectation of a more liberal membership. The earnest seeking after our rightful place in the great harvest field of God betokens a quickening of spirit and a renewal of the divine life. The concern for greater efficiency in ministry and service evidences the stirrings of a spirit that is prophetic of a wider heritage in the days to come, and for all this we should pour out our hearts in thanksgiving to the Giver of all good.

Christianity in America is facing a day of unparalleled opportunity, not only in meeting its own tasks but the tasks of the world as well, for it is the American Church upon which rests the major responsibility for world evangelization in the coming decades. It is a time in which the church must gird itself with strength and this thanksgiving day should be a day of dedication to the task.

By WILLIAM C. ALLEN

(Note—This is one of a series of articles being sent to The Christian Work, duplicate of which is sent to The American Friend by the author.)

These articles would not be complete without reference to the steadfast position assumed by London Yearly Meeting during the present war. I not only allude to its annual assembly of 1916, but to the work of the Meeting for Sufferings and to the general individual attitude and testimony of its members as we observed them.

At the outbreak of the war a hundred or so young Friends enlisted under the volunteer system. They mostly represented the class which may be found in any Yearly Meeting, which is to a large degree associated with Friends through heredity, and to whom the Quaker emphasis on some fundamentals of the Christian religion does not appeal, or who would not claim for themselves any particular strength to the denominational organization. Such cases must be expected among Friends everywhere. There are also some older men, mostly somewhat of the same class, who believe in the war or seem to be influenced by social or financial interests. These neglect their obligations to defend the pacific teachings of the Gospel or to stand for civil and religious liberty. All the above, however, blinded by conditions and honest in their beliefs as to the war, are naturally a source of weakness to their brethren who still love them and as far as possible fellowship with them.

But a large majority of English Friends are standing close by our time-honored principles on these subjects. The greater the pressure brought to bear, the more cruel the derision launched at them, the more valuable friendships they lose, the sharper the assaults on their respectability and patriotism, the keener the persecution their young men endure, just in proportion do they with uplifted eyes and cheerful hearts meet and resist the tide of misunderstanding and international hatred that threatens and assails them. They constitute an example and encouragement to Friends everywhere, and especially to those in the United States who, unless the trend of events soon change, may themselves be compelled at no distant date to make in our beloved country the same stand for Jesus Christ and for the rights of conscience that our Friends abroad have taken.

Considered as a denomination, English Friends are peculiarly well equipped for standing for practical Christianity and for conducting an anti-military propaganda in that country. They have most profound religious convictions. They are not cowards. They are as a group trained to accuracy and definiteness in the handling of church and secular affairs. Their women, with feminine sympathy and intuition, have full scope in church councils. Their leaders and preachers are largely practical business or professional men whose gospel ministry is free and therefore can not easily be weakened or touched by financial temptations. They are not easily swerved from their purpose. Thus it happens that whilst Quaker protestants and sufferers on account of military rule constitute but a small portion of the "conscientious objectors" to military service, numerically considered, they at the same time make a rallying point for the many in other denominations who hold the same views with regard to the obligations of Divine and human love.

The title "Meeting for Sufferings" of London Yearly Meeting is in these days no misnomer. The meeting convenes once a month. It frequently lasts from 10:30 a. m. until past 5 in the afternoon. It always commenced with a period of silent devotion, sometimes broken with a word of exhortation or vocal prayer. Its activities include nearby relief work, and consideration and alleviation of human suffering to the very utmost parts of the earth. To these brethren and sisters is not simply committed executive work—they bear the burdens of many of the children of God as well as those of His wayward people upon their hearts. They are reversing the ordinary ecclesiastical attitude in the belligerent countries these days which attitude, whilst resolutely supporting the war, in effect says and preaches, "In the name of Christ and for him, if thine enemy hunger starve him, if he thirst cut off his water supplies." English Friends still uphold and preach the lovely and sorely needed Gospel doctrine, "If thine enemy hunger feed him, if he thirst give him drink." Which is the better way?

I will here speak of some individual and typical cases we came across in English households. The family in the first home I will tell about consisted of middle-aged parents who were for the time living alone. Their house is very attractive, surrounded with gardens and close-clipped sward. Beneath it flows a lovely river, whilst beyond extends a fair English landscape of soft hillsides, green hedges, trees and homes, all rendered perfect in the gentleness of distant haze.

The father and mother were in deep trouble and keenly appreciative of a visit from sympathetic Americans. They were glad to see our Oriental pictures and listen to and talk of foreign lands. One son, who was not a Friend, had entered the army, and the last they had heard of him he was broken in health in the deserts of Asia. His life had been miraculously spared very often since he joined the colors. Will he ever come back? And how will he come? Will he be able to assist his father in the business which it had been hoped he would soon be able to put his youthful energy into?

The other son had recently won a degree at Cambridge, with the highest honors, including a scholarship which few can possibly obtain. He is a splendid, big fellow—strong in body and mind and wields a great influence wherever he goes. He is a "conscientious objector." He recoils with horror at demands made to arm the young men to kill. He is one of the few who have been fairly treated by the Tribunal before which he appeared, yet instead of being put into teaching in the schools which are so sadly depleted of school masters, he has been ordered—no doubt as an intended punishment—to work on a farm. There he curries horses, milks cows and attends pigs. He was very happy. The local newspapers meanwhile have commented on his situation with more respect than is usually accorded conscientious objectors. The heart of the mother of these sons is torn with distress. But she hopes in God.

From this home we went a few miles to another Friend's house. Here also was a beautiful home. The parents did not seem to be as strong peace people as are many Friends. One of them seemed to feel that we can not expect peace until Christ comes to reign on earth. I tried to show that God has been pleased to work through human instrumentalities, and that it has only been through the faithfulness of the few who did not dare to wait upon the future that the Divine Will with respect to many reforms has ultimately been fulfilled. These dear Friends, so generous in hospitality, are no doubt sincere in their convictions. One of their sons is in the army. Whilst we were stopping at their home we received a letter from a Friend who incidentally remarked in it, "We are anxiously awaiting news of three of our nephews who seem likely to be landed in prison before long on account of their conscientious convictions."

When I first reached London and heard about the splendid work of the Friends' Ambulance Unit and of how its members drove motor cars filled with wounded men from the battle field to the rear or at times under hideous fire carried the victims of war out of its vortex I was filled with enthusiasm for its service and ideals. Here there seemed a work for conscientious objectors to military service to perform. Young men filled with a desire to serve their country, but who could not personally imbue their hands in the blood of their fellows could apparently find an outlet for the exercise of their physical and moral forces. They could not enter into the accursed work of the trenches, but they could help the suffering dupes of this abominable strife. As time progressed, and as I became better acquainted with the situation I learned that many Friends of London Yearly Meeting were concerned about the F. A. U., and apprehensive that it did not fully uphold the Christian testimony adverse to war. Almost always the Tribunals, if offering men exemption from active military service, would stipulate that they join the F. A. U. There is among our English Friends a wide range of opinion, yet they differentiate between being personally engaged in efforts to kill their fellow men and a support of the system of war. The F. A. U. was not started as a Yearly Meeting project or concern.

As near as I could learn the anxiety of these concerned brethren is largely founded on the following: Whilst members of the F. A. U. are not required to take the oath of allegiance, and whilst they are not compelled on the battle field, as are members of the Royal Army Medical Corps, to first remove the less dangerously wounded, leaving the more hopelessly injured to their fate, they are at the same time practically considered by a large part of the public and by the military as an adjunct of the Red Cross department of the British army. The fact that some of their activities are directed to relief work among non-combatants is lost sight of, and their work behind the trenches which makes possible the release of other men for combatant service is emphasized. They dress in khaki with the Red Cross on the arm. I am told they are expected to use military salutes, and that they are necessarily in much of their work subjected to military commands. Their members have recently been restricted from speaking on any reference to the subject of peace, except possibly in our own meeting-houses—this immediately limits freedom of conscience. The officers of the organization are compelled to be close to military conference and authority. I have heard no challenge of these statements.

Some young men connected with the organization have felt dissatisfied with it and have resigned, returned home and faced the Tribunal as conscientious objectors. Members of the Society of Friends would certainly seem to have limitless scope connected with the relief of millions of innocent non-combatants without entering into compromising labors associated with army work. I personally found in private conversation amongst casual acquaintances, who are not Friends, the distinct impression prevailing that the near-army work of the F. A. U. revealed that the Quakers had largely relinquished their disliked and generally considered non-patriotic position, and were to be commended for doing so. The whole question has been weightily discussed in Meetings of Friends and the feeling certainly grew whilst we were in England that as a testimony-bearing proposition the F. A. U. does not in the minds of many Friends meet the demands of the hour. The situation is one that will soon have to be faced by English Friends.

A much beloved and prominent Friend of London Yearly Meeting used language to the following effect one day in a quarterly meeting: "There is no question but that the conscientious objectors (Friends and non-Friends alike) who face the Tribunals and who will not give in, who protest against any sort of participation in war, who endure insult and imprisonment, are the men who are really making the fight for religious liberty in England today, and upholding the rights of conscience."

It must be remembered that many conscientious objectors are men of affairs holding excellent business, professional and social positions, whose Christian integrity and character are unimpeachable. Many of them are the best that Christianity can produce in the churches today. Others are Socialists with lofty ideals of brotherhood and love, who are influenced by Christianity and who at the same time may be positively derisive or hopeless as to the condition of the churches about them. As far as I can understand most of the denominations are pretty well represented among these protestants against war. Many of these conscientious objectors co-operate with Friends.

There is, however, antagonism discovered from the most unexpected sources. Common observation and statistics alike show that war or preparation for war dims the spiritual vision and benumbs the moral perceptions.

One of the most unhappy and disappointing exhibitions made in connection with the whole situation is that offered by most of the clergy in England. Friends, as far as I have observed, whilst not even among themselves commenting on it, and whilst full of love for their persecutors, have had to face this trying position. It indicates the sort of prejudice they are compelled to meet. These ministers made their places of worship the recruiting grounds for the original volunteer system, and have since, at the first intimation from governmental sources, vigorously preached conscription. They have elected to follow the behest of politicians and munition makers rather than the commands of Him whom they call their Lord. There are unqualified and unanswered statements to the effect that when the conscription acts were being framed and passed, leading clerics of England went to Westminster and secured exemption for the clergy from compulsory military service. It will be of no advantage to mention their names. Unfortunately their inconsistency did not stop here. Some of them—presumably the spiritual leaders of England—have been most abusive or contemptuous in references to the conscientious objectors. They have apparently forgotten the freedom of conscience inculcated in the teachings of the Gospel. Not only have they failed to obey the command to love their enemies, but they have publicly insulted and derided those who do love their enemies. Their high position and authority in the church has been employed in weakening the position of and scoffing at those who do obey the teachings of Jesus Christ. They seem to think that they have secured the approval of the masses. They are in error. They have been greedily listened to by those who make gain out of war, but if newspaper reports and labor periodical comments are correct they have secured much contempt from the working classes. Their action has been a terrific blow to the prestige of the church, if not to the cause of Jesus Christ.

A man refused exemption by the Tribunal immediately and automatically is considered a soldier and as such becomes subject to the terrible penalties of the British army on account of treason or insubordination. Some Friends, along with others, have been sentenced to be shot, but the sentences of all have been commuted to ten years penal servitude. Here are some of the punishments accorded soldiers for insubordination including refusal to drill, etc., in the British army which I have been told about and in which conscientious objectors have participated. Some have undergone the torture known as "crucifixion," which consists in tying their arms and legs to the wheels of big gun carriages and then starting the gun carriages so that the unfortunate victims have been spun around with the revolution of the wheels. Some have been stripped in detention or prison barrack yards and made to run around subject to the kicking and maltreatment of the onlookers until fainting from exhaustion. Some have undergone "scrubbing brush" torture. A coarse brush is rubbed all over the unhappy victim so as to make his skin horribly bleeding and sore.

I know of only one case, and I think it was in France, in which the "wire" punishment was accorded, which consists in holding the victim's arms out horizontally attached to a wire until he is completely exhausted. I know of a case where a conscientious objector was put through the "wheelbarrow" punishment—held up by the legs and compelled to walk on his hands until the blood gushed from his nostrils. This man, at the earnest solicitation of an on-looker who I am told was a minister, gave in, but afterwards confessed that he was so troubled in conscience because of having yielded and had suffered so much from subsequent persecution in the barracks that he wished he had maintained his original testimony against war.

Naturally the hearts of English Friends, who devotedly love their country, burn because of all these things. The eight quarterly meetings we attended—some of them lasting more than one day, and with numerous sessions—were largely devoted to conditions growing out of the war, the immoralities, the losses, the sufferings, the tears of those not of our communion who are oppressed and who have no Comforter. The ministry in meetings for worship was largely imbued with the same agony and thought. In private houses the conversation could not help but be full of reference to the sorrows of the world and to trials connected with faithful discipleship at home. When you pour out your money and strength without stint on behalf of millions of homeless refugees abroad, when your best loved boys in your own monthly meetings are being taken before Tribunals or to prisons; when you endure calumny for your Saviour's sake, then you are drawn together in the holy bonds of the brotherhood of Christ. You learn what it really is to sacrifice for Him. Were these conditions depressing to us as we day by day saw and heard what we did? They were. But at the same time we were deeply impressed with the possibilities of the sustaining power of our Lord. We saw young Friends smiling and happy a few days before they were taken from Devonshire meeting-house to go to jail; we saw a living faith in the older people which rose higher and higher in proportion to the depressing nature of the trials that assailed them; we saw cheerfulness in sorrow; we saw that there yet remain in this sin-tossed world men and women who really have a glimpse of the glory of the Lord and who are willing to endure the cross and despise the shame for His name's sake.

I ask Friends everywhere in America to get into closer comradeship with their English brethren and sisters in this hour of trial and remember them in their prayers.

As English Friends are thus faithfully and bravely contending in the spirit of love with spiritual blindness and military tyranny in high places, let us of America also set our spiritual houses in order that we too, with God's help, may courageously meet the same menacing conditions which are today knocking at our very gates.

THIRD MEETING OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

By E. B. SANFORD

Honorary Secretary of the Council.

On the morning of December 6th, the delegates to the Council officially representing a very large proportion of the Protestant church membership of the United States, will meet in the commodious and centrally located Second Baptist Church in St. Louis. It will be an assembly of bishops, moderators, ministers of national reputation and laymen of large influence. The Presbyterian delegation alone includes eight ex-moderators of the General Assembly.

These leaders of our American Church life will listen to reports of the Commissions of the Council of great interest. The historic Conference that met in New York in the fall of 1905, adopted resolutions regarding matters of common concern to all the churches. The Council of 1916 will report remarkable advance in all the lines of work suggested under these resolutions. Family Life and Sabbath Observance have been the subject of official messages that have gone into millions of homes. Burdens that were crushing the wretched native population of the Congo State have been relieved. The gambling evil has never received a more severe blow than in the victory that closed the race-track enclosures of New York, a battle inaugurated from the National Office of the Council. Religious Week-day Instruction, has become a vital question under the same leadership. A united Church has aided in the Temperance victories that have carried dismay into the ranks of the powers of darkness.

The Commission of Evangelism, quietly but effectively, has brought denominational committees into helpful relations, and influences have been set in motion that cannot fail to make this work an agency of increasing power in the life of the churches. The coordination in common work of the denominational committees on Social Service, under the leadership of the Council's Commission, has been fruitful.

Action taken at the first Council meeting at Philadelphia in 1908, on "International Relations", has in the past quadrennium, culminated in the founding of the "Church Peace Union", and its endowment by Mr. Carnegie with two millions of dollars.

The Men and Religion Movement, in accord with the plea of Bishop McDowell of the Methodist Church, and other leaders, is vigorously giving its life to the work of the "Commission on Federated Movements," a work that promises to bring the Y. M. C. A. and other interdenominational agencies into closer relation to the churches than ever before.

The advance, however, of highest significance is along the line of the supreme mission of the Church of Christ in its evangelistic and missionary work. United plans of service on the foreign field find their impulse in the spirit of co-operation that since the New York Conference of 1905 has revolutionized the methods and administration of Home Missionary activities. As late as the beginning of the twentieth century, who would have prophesied that a Council officially representing Churches with a membership of over seventeen million would come together in St. Louis in 1916 to listen to reports of Home Mission work, representing nearly all the denominational Societies, in which would be told the story of their secretaries traveling together and speaking from the same platform in every state west of the Mississippi, and making their united plea for wise action in overcoming the evils of overlapping and meeting the need of a multitude of destitute communities?

The great Council, as it assembles in St. Louis, has no legislative authority. It has a higher mission, as it manifests to the world the Oneness in Christ of the Churches in its fellowship. In behalf of the vast constituency it represents, it pledges a united front in the conflict against evil and unrighteousness. With linked hands, the standard of the Cross is lifted up. Policies of far reaching influence will be carefully considered. Support will be assured the Executive Committee and the National Office during the coming quadrennium of 1916-1920.

Surely this representative Council of the Churches of Christ in our country ought to have a large place in the thought and prayer of all the followers of our Divine Lord and Saviour.

A TRUE THANKSGIVING STORY

B. K. Howard was a prominent manufacturer in a large New England city. He employed hundreds of men, and his products were shipped to the ends of the world. No man in that region was considered more substantial than B. K. Howard. His name was a synonym for integrity and stability. As a director of a bank and several corporations he had fine business connections. In religious circles he had a very high place. He was trustee of his own church, and had once been a member of the highest ecclesiastical body of his denomination.

Judge of the amazement that was caused when the news came out that B. K. Howard had been arrested on the charge of forgery. Business and church circles were stirred to their very foundations. If B. K. Howard were not honest, who was honest? The case was taken in court. The judge on the bench was an old classmate, and on the jury were old friends of the defendant. The public prosecutor had known the prisoner long and intimately. They were members of the same club and had often dined together with other business and professional men.

As the case developed, the friends of Howard were relieved to discover that he was not really a criminal at heart. He had not actually forged a name to a check or a note, but his name was on notes that had been "raised" by his manager. Technically he was guilty. He was responsible in the eyes of the law. Howard had trusted his manager implicitly, and did not inquire very closely into his method of getting cash to meet his payroll. For his part the manager did not intend to do anything wrong, for he was sure he could take up the notes before anybody was the wiser. But affairs in the bank made an investigation necessary, which resulted in the discovery of the raised notes. Then came the humiliating publicity with all of its heart-bearing shame.

Howard's wife and daughter were loyal and cheered him in every possible way, but his son turned against him. Every method known to the legal profession was used to keep Howard out of prison but in vain.

With a choking voice the foreman of the jury announced that the jury had found him guilty. There was nothing else for them to do. The judge, with tears streaming out of his eyes, imposed the lowest sentence allowed by law, which was a term in the state prison.

And thus Howard became a convict.

His hair was clipped down close to his scalp, he wore clothes with stripes around them, and he worked like a common laborer. Meanwhile his son had gained control of the business. He drove his mother and sister away from his home because they were loyal to the man who was wearing stripes in the state prison for the wrong doing of another.

The manager went to a far western city, where he became involved in a drunken fight and was killed.

A year or two passed by and then the leading men of the city where Howard had lived began to talk about getting a pardon for him. The judge who had sentenced him, the foreman of the jury, and the public prosecutor wrote their names at the head of the petition to the governor. Hundreds signed it. Then a carload of these men went to the state capital and asked for the pardon in person. The governor heard their plea, and then promised the pardon for the following Thanksgiving.

A delegation of his old friends went to the prison to tell Howard of his good fortune. They found him busy preparing a Thanksgiving dinner for the rest of the convicts, who shouted when they learned he was pardoned. He laid aside his prison garb and returned to his old home town, but he had no home of his own. It had been taken to satisfy the notes. He found his wife and daughter living in two small rooms, supporting themselves by sewing. His son had left, and ere long word was received that he had killed himself. Howard's factory was still running, but another man owned it. He applied to the superintendent and was given a job as a mechanic in the very institution that he had once owned. Then he rented a small house for himself, wife and daughter.

But during it all he was wondering what his church would do. He had resolved to return and take his usual place. He did so, and after the service he was invited into the back room by the superintendent. There he found twenty men of the church. Howard fully expected they had called him in to ask him not to attend the church. But their faces soon told another story.

"Brother Howard," said the superintendent, his voice a little husky, "these men have organized themselves into a Bible class and they have unanimously elected you as teacher. Will you take the class?"

For reply he placed his handkerchief to his eyes and held out his hand.

"Yes, since they all want me, I'll teach them," he said.

They all shook hands with him, each giving him a word of brotherly greeting and cheer.

Howard passed his remaining days working in the old factory, and in teaching his Bible class. When he died he was buried from the church, and the crowd on that occasion was so large that it could not get into the building.—Albert Sidney Gregg.

To believe in Jesus Christ is to adjust life to the guidance of his holy will. Take him at his worth, rely upon his word, surrender to his will!—J. H. Jowett.

THANKSGIVING

For the hay and the corn and the wheat that is reaped,
For the labor well done and the barns that are heaped,
For the sun and the dew and the sweet honeycomb,
For the rose and the song and the harvest brought home—
Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

For the trade and the skill and the wealth in our land,
For the cunning and strength of the workingman's hand,
For the good that our artists and poets have taught,
For the friendships that hope and affection have brought—Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

For the homes that with purest affection are blest,
For the season of plenty and well-deserved rest,
For our country extending from sea unto sea,
The land that is really the "Land of the Free"— Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

—Ex.

THANKS FOR ALL

Give thanks to God for sun and rain,
And summer's fruit-crowned trees;
For springtime's bright unfolding buds,
And autumn's garnered sheaves.

Give thanks to God for darkened days,
When wintry winds blow high;
When leafless trees stand bleak and lone,
Beneath a sunless sky.

Give thanks for griefs that seem to march
Like marshaled host along;
Ofttimes in midst of blackest night,
Is born the sweetest song.

Give grateful thanks for all that comes;
Sun, cloud, joy, grief and pain;
For in our God's eternal plan,
Each one shall have its gain.

—Nannie J. Rea.

GIVE THANKS TO GOD

Let us give thanks to God on Thanksgiving Day. Nature is beautiful and fellow-men are dear, and duty is close beside us, and He is over and with us. What more do we want, except to be more thankful and more faithful, less complaining of our trials and our time, and more worthy of the tasks and privileges he has given us? We want to trust Him with a fuller trust, and so at last to come to that high life when we shall "be careful for nothing, but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let our requests be made known unto God," for that and that alone is peace.—Phillips Brooks.

WHEN THANKSGIVING BEGAN

Thanksgiving really began centuries and centuries ago. When people of Bible times were prospered during the harvest season they held a celebration to mark the close of the safe gathering in of the crops. This told of abundance of fruits and freedom from attacks by an enemy.

When the first-comers to America settled in New England they had very hard times. It was a new country, they were not used to its climate, they did not have conveniences with which to work, nor as yet had they time to get stores ahead. In addition to this, some of the Indian tribes looked upon them with jealousy, fearing they might sometime take their land from them. If it had not been for the kindness of the old Indian Chief Massasoit, the early colony would have starved to death.

In 1621 Governor Bradford appointed a day for rejoicing, praise and prayer. A couple of years later a severe drought struck the country, and again the old puritan forefathers prayed and fasted for the life-giving rain. It fell in torrents during their prayers, and the day was changed into one of thanksgiving.

It became the custom to appoint a day of thanksgiving by the different governors of the several colonies. During the terrible Civil War a national Thanksgiving Day was urged by Congress, and in 1864 President Lincoln appointed the last Thursday in November as this day.

When we partake of the good things of the table, let us not forget that they are tokens of the great generosity of a loving Father who cares for the spiritual as well as the physical nature and that the reunion with loved ones here is typical of the final reunion of the faithful.—Emma Gary Wallace, in Home and School.

THE LITTLE CLOVER SEED

It was only a tiny seed on what had once been a fragrant white clover blossom. But there had been cold winds and frost and snow, and the white blossom was withered and brown. Then one day came a fierce north wind, and away flew the clover seeds, some going this side of the road and some the other.

One little seed stopped at last on top of a huge pile of cinders beside the railroad track, and there it lay all through the long winter. When the warm sunshine of spring came, the little seed sent a white root down between the cinders where there was a tiny bit of earth, and it pushed up some little green leaves toward the sun.

There was nothing else fresh and green on the high cinder pile, but the hardy little clover grew and spread and made a dainty bit of beauty all by itself. Fast express trains and rumbling freight trains went thundering past day after day, but few of the many eyes looking out of the windows noticed the fresh bit of green on the black cinder pile.

One afternoon when a train stopped near the cinder pile, a tired woman looked out and saw the clover plant. The little plant seemed to say to her, "Never mind if you do have to live in a place that isn't just what you would like to have it. Do the best you can to make it beautiful and to cover up the ugly things."

"So I will," she said, and she carried in her heart the thought of the brave little clover plant that was doing its best to make the world beautiful and happy.—Selected.

THE AMERICAN COUNCIL OF THE WORLD ALLIANCE FOR PROMOTING INTERNATIONAL FRIENDSHIP THROUGH THE CHURCHES

There has recently been published by the American Council of the World Alliance, a directory, showing the organization of the World Alliance in the various nations of the world up to the present time, together with a brief statement in regard to the organization and development of the movement. It is of interest to Friends to know that the Chairman of the International Committee, which has in charge the organizing of this world movement for international brotherhood, in all of the nations in the world, is a Friend, a member of London Yearly Meeting, J. Allen Baker, and the Organizing Secretary for Europe is Prof. Benj. F. Battin, a member of the faculty of Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Penn. The following countries have now organized Councils according to the general plan agreed upon in Constance and London in August, 1914, namely: the United States of America, Great Britain, France, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Italy, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. The membership from Great Britain includes two Friends, members of London Yearly Meeting, J. Allen Baker and Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin.

Plan of Work of the American Council

The American Council which was organized at Garden City, N. Y., April 25, 1916, has announced a plan of organization which it believes to be necessary if the purpose of the Alliance, namely, the bringing about of "good and friendly relations between the nations," is to be realized. Briefly, the plan is this, to secure the appointment of a national peace committee, or "commission," as it is termed, by every communion of Christians in the United States, a similar committee by each State or City Federation of churches, and also a peace committee, known officially as a "Peacemakers' Committee" by each local congregation of every denomination.

It will be noted by Friends that this is essentially the plan of organization of the work for peace which has been followed by Friends for at least the past 50 years, or since the organization of the Peace Association of Friends in America, in 1867. The necessity of emphasizing the peace work by setting apart a certain number of the members of a congregation or of a Quarterly Meeting, or of a Yearly Meeting, who should feel a special responsibility for that particular branch of the work of the church, was early recognized by Friends, and no doubt the great work which the Friends have been able to accomplish for the cause, and the place of leadership which is universally accorded to them in the peace work has been in no small measure due to the fact that there has been this careful organization of the denomination for the specific task of promoting thoughtful consideration of the great fundamental doctrine of peace and good will among men.

National Committees Already Appointed

Although only a little more than seven months have elapsed since the organization of the American Council, eleven national Committees have been appointed, representing as many national organizations of different denominations; of these eleven, the Friends are one. It is in this connection of interest to Friends to note that of the eleven national Committees on the subject of peace appointed, Friends alone had already in existence and at work a national peace organization which could be designated as the body to co-operate in the work for which the American Council was organized. The question of the appointment of a national committee to represent Friends came to the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting in regular order from the officers of the World Alliance through the General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting; the Executive Committee considered the question and decided that since the Peace Association of Friends in America already fills precisely the place of the national peace committee as asked for by the World Alliance, it should be the body to co-operate in the peace work with the American Council. The American Council has therefore officially recognized the Peace Association of Friends in America as the representative of Friends in the great task upon which it is entering.

Since the part which Friends have taken in the past and are taking now in the peace work has thus been brought prominently to the attention of the religious world once more, there is placed upon Friends a responsibility so much the greater not only to maintain the standard of wise devotion to the cause which has characterized the denomination in the past, but to take still more advanced steps as the needs of the hour and the resources which are found to be at hand may point the way.

PLANS OF WORK UNDER CONSIDERATION BY THE MILITARISTS.

The American Union against Militarism has recently sent out information as to certain plans of the militarists, which are contained in a bulletin of the National Security League. The extract from this bulletin is printed below; comment upon the plans and suggestions therein contained, will be made on this page next week. The extract is as follows:

"Several important recommendations on physical and military training in the schools of the United States, recommendation of the adoption of a system of universal military training under federal control based upon a proper modification of the Swiss and Australian systems, and for a committee to arrange with Senator Chamberlain for hearing on his universal military training bill in the early part of the next session of Congress, have been prepared for the consideration of the executive committee of the National Security League. It is pointed out in these recommendations that as legislation for physical and military training in the schools is purely a state matter, legislation to this end can be secured only through state legislatures and therefore it is suggested that a committee be appointed to frame a bill for such training which should be introduced in each of the forty-one legislatures which meet next January. Senator Chamberlain has been asked to advise the League as to his program for the next session; whether he intends to press his measure, and what, in his opinion, are its chances for consideration. It is also recommended that a committee be appointed to consider the advisability of introducing in Congress at the next session a bill providing for a referendum vote on the subject of universal military training at the election which occurs two years hence for members of Congress; and also another committee to prepare a report on the defects in the National Defence Act, and that every effort be made to secure the amendment of this measure at the next session of Congress."

PLANS OF THE PEACE COMMITTEE IN WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

The peace work in Western Yearly Meeting is organized with that of the distribution of general literature, the name of the Committee being Committee on Literature and Peace. Owing to the death of Chas. O. Newlin, who had for years been Chairman of this Committee, a re-organization was necessary and the new officers now in charge are E. Howard Brown, Westfield, Indiana, Chairman; Minnie H. Anderson, Plainfield, Indiana, Secretary, and Evan Hadley, Plainfield, Indiana, Treasurer.

The Committee has taken up in earnest the work for peace and has ordered for distribution, 5,000 copies of a folder on the subject of Militarism in the Public Schools. This folder is of size to be placed in an ordinary envelop, so that it may be used for distribution in connection with correspondence wherever that method seems to be best. In material it is a compilation of the expressed opinions of a number of the leading workers for peace in the United States, both Friends and others. The following speakers and writers are quoted, in making up the compilation included in the folder, namely: Dr. J. J. Hall, Atlanta, Ga., Director of the Atlantic States Department of the American Peace Society; President David Starr Jordan, Leland Stanford University, California; L. Hollingsworth Wood, New York City; Wm. C. Allen, Philadelphia, Penn., and Ex-Secretary of State William J. Bryan. This folder is for sale by the Chairman of the Committee, at address given above, at the price of 30 cents per hundred copies.

The Committee proposes to carry on its educational work not only through the local meetings of Friends in Western Yearly Meeting, but through other organizations, such as the State organization of the Christian Endeavor Society, and the State Women's Christian Temperance Union. They are hoping to arrange for a number of addresses on different phases of the peace question within the coming year.

Although not the work of the Peace Committee of Western Yearly Meeting, it is of interest to note that a member of that Yearly Meeting, L. O. Brown, of Clinton, Ind., has recently published a song, entitled "Live in Peace;" the words and music are both by this Friend. The price is 5 cents per copy.

THE IOWA PAGE

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

No doubt Iowa Friends who are readers of The American Friend have noted the fact, so graphically presented in the Missionary Department, that the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions is making an heroic effort to raise the funds contributed to the work under the care of the Board from $42,000, the amount contributed last year, to $60,000 for the present year. Last year Iowa Friends contributed a little less than $1.00 per member. Shall we not, with renewed consecration to our Heavenly Father, and with increased desire to serve our fellow men, begotten of this new consecration, raise our standard (1916-17) to $1.50 per member? Other Yearly Meetings are undertaking greater things for God and fellow men by lifting the standard of their missionary giving; why should not we? Will not each Department of Iowa Yearly Meeting raising Missionary funds—Bible Schools, Y. P. S. C. E., W. F. M. S., Brotherhoods and Monthly Meeting Committees—pray, trust and work to realize an increase of one-half in the funds contributed to Foreign Missions by your organization? Monthly Meeting Missionary Committees

We have a special message for the Chairmen of our Monthly Meeting Missionary Committees. Your responsibilities are heavy. Have you made this year an every-member canvass for Missions either in connection with your Finance Committee or separately? That is one of your responsibilities. If the canvass has been made and the amount pledged to Missions is not one half more than the amount pledged last year, will you not make a second canvass presenting the greater need as set forth in the Missionary Department of The American Friend? It might be advisable, before beginning the canvass to seek to arouse interest by using some of the suggestions made in the "Missionary Department" of Eleventh Month, sixteenth. Are the individual members of your Committee enthusiastic missionary workers? If not, work and pray that you may be the channel through which God shall bring them renewed inspiration for his service. To this end constitute the Committee a Mission Study class and take up the study of some one of the many inspiring mission study books, for instance "Mexico Today," by George B. Winton; or "South American Neighbors," by Homer C. Stuntz; or "Rising Churches in Non-Christian Lands," by Arthur J. Brown; or "The Why and How of Foreign Missions," by the same author. These books each contain some seven or eight chapters. If you would prefer some shorter course, select "The Call of the World," by W. E. Doughty; or "The Individual and the Social Gospel," by Shailer Matthews; or "Efficiency Points," by W. E. Doughty. Each of these contains four chapters. Any one of these books if really studied must arouse interest on the part of each member of the class. If something lighter is desired try "Comrades in Service," by Margaret E. Burton; or "The Land of the Golden Man," by Anita B. Ferris; or "Foreign Mission Work of American Friends," compiled by the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions.

The W. F. M. Auxiliaries are studying Missions all over the Yearly Meeting, but, so far as we know, there is no single organization in Iowa Yearly Meeting in connection with which the men of the Yearly Meeting are studying Missions. If you know of such a Study Class, write us about it. Can the red-blooded, virile manhood of Iowa Yearly Meeting afford to be out of touch with the Christian heroism that is designed of God to be the salvation, not only of Foreign Lands, but of our own beloved land as well?

Reports

Please send us reports of your work for publication in the Iowa page. Are you praying, working, studying? If so let us know about it. The W. F. M. S. work should be reported to "The Missionary Advocate," but the activities of the Yearly Meeting's Board and of all Monthly Meeting Committees should report to the undersigned.

C. E. DEPARTMENT

As the winter months are approaching, it seems a fitting time to consider what line of activity will be ours for special emphasis. This season seems most suitable for study groups where the social feature is combined with study. There are two topics which should claim our attention; (1) Friends' History, and (2) Peace.

Why study Friends' History? How many of our members know anything except a few superficial facts about the founding and growth of the Society of Friends? Have they studied the conditions out of which the movement sprang? Can they intelligently explain, as some are called upon to do, to the outsiders why we believe as we do? Why we do not practice baptism, etc? In fact, are our young people Friends because they have studied the matters relating to the church, or merely because their parents have been Friends? The church of the future is to be made up pretty largely of our present endeavorers, so it seems well worth while to devote time to the study of Friends' History.

Again, such a course is interesting and inspires loyalty. No one can read of the faith, and suffering for that faith, of the early Quakers without being fired with more zeal for the church and for Christ. The testimony of the early Friends and even of their persecutors, their exemplary lives, their whole hearted devotion to Christ and his cause—these things will make us better and more zealous in the work that comes to us.

For study groups, perhaps the best book is Emmott's, "The Story of Quakerism." If you have not had a class of Friends' History, try it this winter, and you will be more than repaid for the time it takes.

The other subject that should be claiming our attention is Peace. This is a principle for which Friends have always stood. No time has been so suitable for an active peace program as the present. Various bodies and leagues are agitating the question. Friends must not fail to take their place in this movement. Will you not try to interest a group of young people, and older ones, in your society in such study? If you desire suggestions in regard to courses, consult with Ora W. Carrell, Beacon, Iowa, or Cora M. Mattison, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Again let us remind all societies that our treasury needs replenishing. The plan of monthly payments is strongly advised in order that we may meet our obligations as they come due. Cassa M. Conover, 712 N. Market street, Oskaloosa, Iowa, will be glad to receive your money.

At Des Moines

On October 22, at the regular C. E. Meeting, the following subject was debated, "Resolved, That Nehemiah was a Nobler Character Than Was Esther." On the affirmative were Oliver Elliott and S. S. Phillips, the negative were Mrs. Anna Edworthy and Mrs. R. R. Newby. After the subject was thoroughly debated by the two sides, the meeting was thrown open for discussion on this subject.

The C. E. Meeting of October 29, was an Honorary Members Meeting, with O. F. Comfort as leader. Several Honorary Members were present at this meeting.

On October 30, at the home of Pearl Edworthy, was held a Hallowe'en Social and Business Meeting. The majority present had on masquerade costumes.

Under the direction of the Missionary Committee of the C. E., a Mission Study class has started. It is being led by Mrs. O. F. Comfort. The book is "Mexico Today."

A class in "Expert Endeavor," with an enrollment of ten, is being taught by Walter Homan, President of the C. E. Society.

The Intermediate C. E. has started out in good shape this year. The enrollment is not as large as it might be, but good work is being done. The Intermediates of the city have a Union, and two members of the Executive Committee are members of the Friends Intermediate C. E. Adrian Stanley is Treasurer and Laura Betts is Chairman of the Publicity Committee.

NEWS ITEMS.

Des Moines—According to the day set apart by the President of the United States Armenian Day was observed in the Church, an offering of $40.00 was quickly and gladly given.

The Monthly Meeting's Missionary Committee is composed of six members representing the Meeting, Bible School, Y. P. S. C. E., Women's Foreign Mission Society, Women's Home Mission Society, and Brotherhood. At a recent Sunday morning meeting each member of the committee spoke briefly of Missions and of the Department which he represented on the Committee. The Pastor followed with a brief missionary sermon.

It is the custom in the Bible School for young and old to give for missions birthday money, a penny a year. Recently a touching discovery was made. Joshua Hadley, who had lain sick for months passed away, later his wife found among his personal effects 67 cents carefully put away for his next birthday offering and she brought them to the Bible School as his last gift.

Center—The C. E. Society of Center Friends Meeting is planning to give a special Missionary Program on Sunday Evening, November 26. There will be three speakers, a doctor, a lawyer and a school teacher.

The "Class in the Corner" has almost completed the study of the book entitled "Livingston the Pathfinder."

FIELD NOTES

Effie F. Gregory, wife of E. L. Gregory, pastor at Arnolds Park, Iowa, underwent two very serious operations during the past month at the Iowa Lutheran Hospital, Des Moines. It is expected that she will be able to return home the last of the month.

THE EXPERIENCE OF A TITHER.

Mr. H. Z. Duke, a well-known Baptist laymen of Dallas, Texas, is a firm believer in tithing, and gives his own experience as the ground of his belief:

"I went into a mercantile business, known as the 'five-and-ten-cent business', in Bowie, Texas, in 1894, and in January following my pastor, Brother F. M. McConnell, I agreed to tithe for one year. Before the year was out I said: 'This suits me, and I will tithe, not for one year only, but for life.' The business prospered from the start, although begun in a small way. Having only about $700 capital, doing strictly a cash business, both in buying and selling, of course our business was limited. Yet the first year our tenth was $110; the second year, $154; third, $360; fourth $388; fifth, $330; sixth, $662; seventh, $556; eighth, $150; ninth, $556; tenth, $1,040; eleventh, $650; twelfth, $1,233; thirteenth, $1,221; fourteenth, $1,143; fifteenth, $2,742. I have tried the Lord in this business way, and I would no more quit tithing than I would quit providing for my family." Missionary Review of the World.

A NEW YORK ECHO OF CEDAR LAKE

By VINCENT D. NICHOLSON

There is nothing unusual in the fact of a conference. From the time when men first learned the pleasure and profit of co-operative endeavor, conferences have been held and conferences probably always will be held. This article is no attempt to explain the philosophy of this tendency of man. The "why" of conferences is sometimes hard to discern. They simply seem to happen, and are gone, leaving results, limited or far reaching, as the case may be.

A healthy, growing plant in the course of time produces flowers short lived, excellent and inspiring, giving promise of fruit, perpetuating the life of the plant. Quakerism in southern New York in the course of time produced a conference, short-lived, excellent and inspiring, giving promise of an increase in the things that Friends hold dear. No one knows all the "how" of its happening, nor is it important. The incidents of its happening may be of interest to the readers of The American Friend.

Yorktown Heights, New York, was the place, November 11 and 12 was the time. The leaders were Rufus M. Jones, Henry J. Cadbury, Thomas E. Jones and L. Hollingsworth Wood. The last named was not present, but should have been and mention of his name relieves the predominance of Jones. He was on the program to lead a class into the interesting difficulties of the American-Japanese problem, but en route to the conference his conveyance upset and to the very deep regret of us all he and his wife were unable to attend. Those in attendance from points other than Yorktown Heights numbered about fifty. They came from four Quarterly Meetings (two of each branch of Friends) and from fifteen particular meetings of southeastern New York. Every meeting in this section, excepting one or two, was represented. Including those whose membership is in other sections the representation extended from Maine to Virginia and to Indiana.

The train bearing most of the visiting Friends arrived at 3:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon. From 3.30 until 4:30 Henry J. Cadbury made tremendously vivid the eventful life of Isaiah, political seer and religious genius. The basic problems of society seem to have not greatly changed between that time and the present. With sage advice as to the immediate political problems of his day, Isaiah's fundamental interest, however was in those spiritual forces which alone can bring cosmos out of the maddening maze of things. Today, amidst the babel of voices advising as to the reconstruction of the civilization that has broken down we need to give heed to the voice of sound political judgment, but the greater need is for the prophetic vision that sees beyond the troubled present to the future that can be.

This thought was carried deeper in the next hour when Rufus M. Jones (very kindly substituting for Hollingsworth Wood) gave a wonderful interpretation of the meaning of spiritual forces. The force greater than all others, irresistible in its power, is love. Practical in its operation, rational in its philosophy, transforming in its effect, this force is the only solution for all the perplexing problems that challenge our attention. In order that love may win its way we must take out of mere history the Christ in whom was incarnate the love of God, and re-incarnate Him in individual life.

After invigorating walks over the hills of that beautiful country, Friends gathered at the meeting house for a delightful supper hour together. William B. Oliver, editor of the Daily Bible and Secretary of the "World's Morning Watch," impressed us with the beauty and power of daily bible study and family worship and at the close we heard at the door the welcome and cheery voice of Carolena Wood, bringing news that the accident the Woods had suffered on the way resulted in but one slight injury.

At the opening of the evening meeting Howard L. Carey, late of the Friends Ambulance Unit in France, brought an extremely interesting first hand account of the troubled life of Europe that now seems so strange and far away. To say that Rufus Jones then spoke of the conscientious objector in England is to give no real indication at all of the tremendous meaning of that meeting to us all. He told the story of a persecution comparable only to the inquisition. In this twentieth century in the England of justice and liberty men of the highest ideals are being terribly tortured and even condemned to die (later commuted to 10 years penal servitude) because of their conscientious belief. As we heard read the personal letters from these young men, written from prison during the season of their persecution, we felt that we were lead through all the incrustations of Christianity to its throbbing living center. The torch of their conviction burned into our souls. The challenge of their living proof of Romans 8:35-39 left us hushed and sober, but encouraged and inspired.

At the Bible school on First day morning Henry J. Cadbury led us to a closer acquaintance and greater appreciation of the author of the book of Acts which is the present field of the International lessons. Henry Cadbury had lived with this author several hours a day for three years and was enthusiastic in introducing him to us as a "scholar and a Christian gentleman."

At the meeting for worship were Friends accustomed to greatly varied manners of meeting. However out of the fellowship of silence in which we grew closer to one another and to God there arose service in speech and song that blended wonderfully with the spirit of the meeting, resulting altogether in the most valuable time of the Conference.

Before the afternoon meeting Susan Mendenhall told a story to the children that delighted every one really entitled to that name, as well as the rest of us who stole in to listen.

The Sunday afternoon session was an open forum in which we attempted to discover together the channels of work, new or old, through which the inspiration and consecration produced by the Conference could find expression. Thomas E. Jones was of course the leader and he took us with a dash and challenge into the fields that his recent wide experience and study have discovered. A "conservation committee" was appointed to lead in taking possession of the fields that our joint search had revealed.

We are expecting definite and tangible results that we can put our several fingers upon. However the most valuable results of a conference often give no indication of their casual connection. The mere fact that so representative a group of Friends gathered together in a fellowship of such unity of thought and purpose is in itself a significant token. A healthy, growing Quakerism may exist without a conference; but no such conference could come from other than a healthy, growing church life. Whatever the conference may mean to our collective endeavor, its individual meaning is deep and lasting. To use the language of Rufus M. Jones' theme of First day morning, each of us re-dugged the wells of eternal truth that had been choked by the Philistine dust of modern busy life.

A final word mentioning the plans which made possible the conference seems fitting. It was one of the fruits of the Cedar Lake Conference, Henrietta Cawl of Brooklyn bringing the idea to New York from the national gathering. The idea was brought to accomplishment largely by the young Friends of the Brooklyn meeting under the efficient guidance of Walter G. Bowerman. Plans were begun six weeks in advance and an extensive advertising campaign was carried on, the most effective part of which was a series of visits by Brooklyn Friends to all the larger meetings. A registration fee of one dollar more than covered all expenses, making unnecessary the use of a fund that had been raised to finance the undertaking, a most gratifying phenomenon. Most deserving of mention is the open hearted hospitality of the Yorktown Heights Friends in entertaining us so royally and the active cooperation of their pastor, M. Davis Branon, and his co-workers in carrying forward the plans.

Three other sections of New York state are expected to hold similar conferences and the idea should spread. All those in attendance send the message to all other Friends communities in America, "Try it for yourselves".

New York City.

CONFERENCE AT PORTLAND

It is with a deep sense of thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for his kindness to us of Portland Quarterly Meeting that we want to tell all the readers of The American Friend what, under the leading of the Spirit, we consider as one of the good things to do in all our Quarterly Meetings.

Some time ago the superintendent felt that a conference with all the meetings of the Quarter would be of great benefit to each individual meeting, and he expressed his concern to his own monthly meeting of Pennville, with which it most heartily concurred, resulting in a call for the conference to convene at Portland, Ind., November 18, 1916, to which all the meetings but three responded with representatives.

Our dear friend and superintendent of Indiana Yearly Meeting, Truman C. Kenworthy, was present. The meeting was called to order and a time of devotion was engaged in, in which the presence of the Lord was very manifest.

Then the meeting took up and discussed the needs of each individual meeting as they were called.

Such subjects as: How do you proceed to finance your meeting? The best ways were discussed. The budget system seemed to lead with no objection to the envelope, the enumeration of our membership and the paying the yearly meeting stock.

The explanation of the report blanks by Brother Kenworthy helped all the statistical secretaries of the meetings to be able to give reports next year that will be correct.

The social side of the church work was talked over and the conclusion was that the end did not always justify the means, but we need to take our socials to our homes instead of the church building which was dedicated to the worship of God, and that the close of our social hour should always be such as would give opportunity for some one to get into the kingdom.

Evangelistic and pastoral work and what to do to keep new converts interested and advancing in the work, was most beautifully explained and plainly held up by Truman Kenworthy. His plan to keep converts was to keep them busy, not on committees, but doing actual work, getting down with a soul before God and helping them to find peace in believing in the Lord Jesus Christ.

In all, our conference was thought by all present to be a splendid success, so much so that we expect to have another in May or June.

Our plan then is to help to get the reports right, and to group meetings, and locate pastors, so that by Yearly Meeting time, each meeting will know who their pastor will be and there will be no meeting without regular pastoral care.

May the Lord bless all our work that will be for the uplift of humanity and the extension of His kingdom.

LUTHER E. ADDINGTON.

AT VERMILION GROVE, ILLINOIS

The Lord has visited Vermilion Grove with a gracious revival. Lindley A. Wells, evangelist, and Ralph Jackson, singer, came to us on October 12 and remained until November 5. Forty-five sessions were held, in all of which a full gospel was preached with great clearness and in the power of the Holy Spirit. About 40 persons reported definite blessing, either converted, reclaimed or sanctified, and a number both reclaimed and sanctified. But the real results of the meeting can never be counted by numbers. The church was greatly blessed and encouraged. We have never heard justification by faith, and sanctification through the baptism with the Holy Spirit, as a second definite work of grace, more clearly set forth than it was in these meetings, and the Lord certainly set His seal to the ministry. Brother Wells preaches the true "Quaker message," which should be heard in every church in the land. Brother Jackson rendered excellent service, both in song and in altar work.

Vermilion Quarterly Meeting was held at this place on November 10, 11 and 12, and was an unusually favored occasion. Walter Malone and Edgar Woolam, of Cleveland Ohio; Dr. Edwards, of Penn College, and Prof. Morrison, of Earlham College, were present at part of the sessions. Walter Malone brought the message on Friday at the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, which was graciously received and greatly appreciated. Friday night Edgar Woolam preached a strong sermon, resulting in the salvation of one person. Saturday morning Edgar Woolam again preached a powerful sermon, followed by Brothers Malone and Edwards in short, earnest exhortation. After an hour of intermission, in which a bountiful lunch was served, the business session convened. The usual business was transacted in much harmony.

During the report of the missionary committee, given by Aurelina Ellis, mention was made of the great need in the African field of a traction steam engine to market the lumber which is in good demand, if only they could get it to the market. A concern came upon the pastor to start a fund for the purchase of an engine for that field and when the concern was mentioned to the meeting, in just a few minutes $137.00 was subscribed. We believe there are many others over the various Yearly Meetings who would like to contribute to this fund if their attention were called to it.

On Saturday night and Sabbath morning, Dr. Edwards gave strong, forceful messages which were thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated.

To our Heavenly Father be all the praise.

Deeper than the need of men, deeper than the need of money, aye, deep down within this spiritless life of ours is the need of world-wide, prevailing prayer.—Robert E. Speer.

HOW AN EVERY-MEMBER CAN- VASS BROUGHT IN MORE THAN MONEY

On a certain Sunday afternoon early this autumn, a visitor might have seen five automobiles and three buggies driving away from the home of Mary C. Woody of the New Garden Meeting in North Carolina. At the same time, several Friends were seen leaving on foot. It was the afternoon of the every-member canvass. Three hours later, when all the canvassers had reported at this same home, it was found that $195 had been raised for foreign missions. Last year, this same meeting gave in all only $115.

The New Garden Meeting has 115 non-resident members and letters have been sent to each one enclosing a subscription blank and a request for missionary offering. These cards have not yet been returned but the total gifts are expected to amount to considerably over the $200.

The Christian Endeavor co-operated in this canvass—an Endeavorer and an older Friend going together in making the visits. Announcements were previously made at the meeting that the canvass was to take place on this particular afternoon and all Friends were requested to remain at their homes between the hours of two and six to receive the canvassers. Cards giving like instruction were sent to the members who did not hear the announcement.

But the canvass did not end with the call for money. It was continued a few days later as an evangelistic canvass, and when we last heard from the canvassers 87 persons had been definitely blessed. A number of the young people of the community, first asked to give of their money, have now given themselves in definite consecration to Christ and His Kingdom.

FOR A BETTER UNDERSTANDING OF MEXICO

(A Series of Articles and Pictures)

Most of us are in a strange state of mind with regard to Mexico. On the one hand, we can't forget it—something is always happening down there to remind us, sometimes very unpleasantly, of the existence of our near neighbor to the south. On the other hand, definite and reliable information about Mexico has been next to impossible to secure.

Realizing the difficulty of securing trustworthy information, the Board of Missions is preparing to meet the need. R. Solomon Tice, one of our missionaries who has been actually in Mexico most of the time since the revolution began, has written a series of articles bearing the title "Some Facts Friends Should Know About Mexico and Our Missions There." The articles were prepared in the midst of the conditions of which he writes. They will appear in The American Friend in January and February, 1917. We mention them now so all our readers may be looking for them. Perhaps some who now are not taking The American Friend will wish to subscribe when they know these articles on Mexico are coming.

In our judgment, the best single volume on Mexico is the small book, "Mexico Today," by George B. Winton. It sells for only sixty cents (forty cents in paper cover) but gives a clear and comprehensive picture of Mexico and her people, of causes which have led to the present chaos, and of religious and moral conditions, including missionary work. It is a splendid book for study classes and a number of Friends study classes are already using it. Help for leaders as well as copies of the book itself may be obtained from the Board of Missions, in Richmond, Indiana. This book and the articles mentioned above can be used together splendidly.

FREE TO READERS OF THE AMERICAN FRIEND

Our Illustrated Annual Report

READY ABOUT DECEMBER 15th

SEE OFFER BELOW

The report will be a 72-page booklet

Containing numerous pictures,

Maps of our Mission fields,

Newly-prepared charts,

A description and full statistics of work at each Mission station

Names and addresses of all Friends' missionaries,

And many other facts of interest to all Friends.

OUR OFFER

A copy of this illustrated report will be sent free to each person in Canada or the United States who will send us his name and address, before DECEMBER 10th.

On the card or letter, you need place only the two words "Annual Report" and your name and address and send it to

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS,

Second National Bank Building,

Richmond, Indiana.

NOTE:—Only one copy can, on this offer, be sent to each household. After December 10th, the report will sell for 10 cents.

Pictures often tell more than words. So, to supplement the book and the articles, the Board is preparing a packet of Mexico pictures showing conditions at our Mission stations and typical scenes round about them. These pictures will be neatly printed on enamel paper and a full description will accompany each one. The packet of pictures, selling for twenty-five cents, will be ready about January 1.

To superintendents and missionary committees, we would explain that the articles and the pictures referred to above are especially for use in this year's $60,000 campaign. The book "Mexico Today" is the one recommended for study classes in connection with this year's study theme, "The Two Americas."

ORDER DUPLEX ENVELOPES TO BEGIN WITH THE NEW YEAR

A limited number of these envelopes can be secured through the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions, Richmond, Indiana, at the following prices:

In quantities of 1 to 49 sets, 11c per set; in quantities of 50 to 99 sets, 10½c per set; in quantities of 100 sets, or more, 10c, per set.

The envelopes come in sets of fifty-three, one for each First Day during 1917. Each envelope is dated and numbered consecutively.

A considerable saving can be effected by ordering at this time. Several meetings have on former occasions been disappointed because their order arrived after the envelopes were all gone. We would, therefore, remind all who intend to order that these prices hold only while the limited supply lasts.

CHURCH AT WORK

Pasadena, Calif.—Pasadena Friends observed Armenian Relief Day on November 5. Dr. H. B. Yacombe, for many years a resident of the United States but a native of Armenia, a member of Pasadena Meeting, gave a clear and interesting account of the causes of Armenian persecution and appealed for aid for the victims of Turkish ferocity. The congregation contributed about $140.00 to the Relief Fund.

On October 28 Charles S. White prefaced his sermon by a tribute to the life and work of Benjamin Trueblood, a former teacher of Charles White and several members of the congregation.

On the evening of November 12 the Gospel team led the Pasadena Meeting and helped to lay the foundation for a revival in the church.

The intermediate C. E. Society is spending the month of November in Mission Study, and on November 12 they heard about a day in a missionary's home as experienced by the narrators, Virginia Hole Blackburn and daughter Doris, of Friends Africa Industrial Mission.

Haviland, Kansas—Edgar T. Hole is visiting the different meetings of Haviland Quarterly Meeting in the interest of missions.

L. Clarkson Hinshaw, pastor at Haviland, Kansas, began a series of meetings at Hopewell, Kansas, November 12. In his absence Nathan Brown filled the pulpit November 12 and Arthur Rush on November 19.

Oak Creek, Kansas—Walnut Creek Quarterly Meeting of Friends in Kansas, met November 10-12 at Oak Creek on account of the new meeting house at Walnut Creek not being completed. We were fortunate in having Edgar T. Hole with us Friday night with his interesting report of his missionary work in Africa. Saturday night was given to the subject of Peace. The rest of the time except the business session was given to evangelistic work and was very helpful and interesting, for, with the exception of C. A. Winslow, who is out holding revival meetings, we had with us all six of the pastors of the quarterly meeting including the new ones, Cyrus and Amy Hawkins at South Fairview; Asa and Emma Dillon, who have been at Pleasant Ridge, but who were here on their way to Independence, Kansas, as pastors, and Leonard L. Craven, formerly of this meeting, now located at Haviland.

During the quarterly meeting we raised $120 for home mission work within our meeting and decided to set up a monthly meeting at Oak Creek, where they have been holding monthly meeting in conjunction with Walnut Creek, and to reorganize the monthly meeting at Pleasant Ridge, where they have been holding regular meetings but no business sessions. Near Pleasant Ridge, at Inavale school house, they have organized a Bible School and have held regular preaching services the past summer.

We are planning for revival meetings at each of our meetings and trust the Lord will meet with us in great blessings.

Timbered Hills, Kansas—Spring River Quarterly Meeting was held at Timbered Hills, Kansas, November 10-12. Though the attendance was not as large as in former years, it was the best that has been held in Spring River for many years. Parker Moon was present and brought helpful messages. M. F. Swafford, General Superintendent, Ross Smith, pastor at Fairview, and A. I. Knights, Pastor at Alba, brought inspiring messages. The all-day Sabbath meetings with the noon lunch and social hour, under the management of Wm. Pribbenow, pastor at Timbered Hills, was a feature not soon to be forgotten by those who were present.

M. F. Swafford will leave next week for Friendswood, Texas, where he will spend three weeks in Evangelistic work.

Unadilla, N. Y.—Friends here have cause to rejoice on account of the gracious revival that has been in progress for the past month. Friends from our own Quarterly Meeting, including Alder Larzelere, Henry and Marie Ellsworth, from Smyrna, and Edwin Meader, from Vermont, began the meeting and continued several days. This resulted in interesting a number, and one young man was converted. A few days after they closed this meeting, Martha Harris, of West Branch, came for two weeks and we felt a gracious outpouring of God's spirit. Six professed conversion, five of whom were men in middle life and old age, one, a man of 76 years. The entire meeting was helped and strengthened and a number will come into membership with Friends, either by letter or profession of faith.

West Branch, N. Y.—God greatly blessed our meeting quite recently by giving us a good old-fashioned revival, conducted by Martha H. Harris, in which a number of souls were saved and the church strengthened. At the close of the meeting five adults, all representative people of the community, joined Friends. Surely we have cause to praise our Heavenly Father.

Bloomington, Ind.—Bloomington Quarterly Meeting was held Eleventh Month, 17 to 19, 1916, with a good degree of interest manifest in every department of work. Enos Harvey, General Superintendent of Evangelistic work, was present and gave helpful discourses in the meetings for worship. He also spoke at a Men's Meeting on the evening of the seventeenth, and gave an earnest appeal for missions in the Missionary Conference on Saturday morning. In the Bible School Conference, on Sabbath morning, Mary E. Chapman gave an instructive presentation of the Jewish Synagogue and its service, and Hubert Sanders discussed The Immigrant Problem. In the regular Sabbath morning service, the pastor gave an able and convincing sermon on "Strengthening the Church," stating that the church is the BEST institution in the world; that the character of its work makes the church great, and that the church is entitled to our loyal and liberal support, in sympathy, prayer, and finance.

The congregation at Bloomingdale held its every-member canvass on the twentieth and twenty-first.

A neat four-page edition, containing the directory of church officials and standing committees of Bloomingdale Monthly Meeting, has been issued recently by the pastors, George H. and Jane D. H. Moore.

BIBLE SCHOOL

December 10

Subject—Faithful Unto Death.

Lesson—Revelation 2:1-17.

Golden Text—Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life. Revelation 2:10.

In this lesson we are to study the message which the author of Revelation has for three of the seven churches of Asia. These are on or near the west coast of what we now call Asia Minor. Ephesus, the first one mentioned was for a long period, in the early history of the church, the official center of this religious district. Smyrna and Pergamum lie in order North of Ephesus. Since one of Paul's letters is credited to the Ephesians it would be well to read that epistle in connection with this study. Indeed it would not be out of place to read Colossians also since that church was within this district, and is as an epistle very similar to Ephesians.

It is interesting to note the descriptive terms used to designate the one from whom the messages to the different churches is coming. "He that holdeth the stars," and "walketh in the midst of the candlesticks," "who is the first and the last," and "who hath the sharp sword with two edges" etc. Highly figurative terms indicating majesty, glory, authority, privilege and power. Jesus is unquestionably accepted as the living head of the Church; a being with Divine powers and functions to be worshiped along with God the Father.

Turn now to the author's conception of that which constitutes a healthy state of the Church. Ephesus is commended for patient, unceasing labor and burden bearing; Also for hating that which is evil, false prophets, and the Nicholations, the latter probably a class of people who believed that true Christians were above ALL law, that it made little or no difference what they did with their bodies so long as their souls lived in the spiritual realm. But the Ephesians have a serious fault, they have 'left their first love.' This is a figure evidently intended to refer to the quality of love found in lovers and during the days of the "honey-moon." He urges the return to his early ecstatic love and sacrificing service.

Smyrna Christians have had a hard time. They have a few of this world's goods. They have had to deal with false brethren (Jews). They have suffered much in persecution and future troubles await them; but if they are faithful until death they shall have the crown of life. We may well recall here that the leaders of the early church never promised converts to Christianity that they would have a good comfortable time and should be blessed with plenty of this world's goods. Little wonder then when we read of persecution and suffering which they so frequently found as their portion of life that these early exhortations contain so many references to a future state of ease and comfort.

The Christians at Pergamum live in a stronghold of Satan and are commended for faithfulness in the face of such conditions, but there are among them those who have lapsed seriously. Balaamites who prostitute religion for material gain; those also who feel free to eat meats sacrificed to idols; scoffers at sex purity, and the detested Nicholations. This church is shot through and through with corruption. No wonder she is admonished to repent quickly before her candlestick is removed.

There must be moments of solitary communion, if there are to be hours of strenuous service and a life of continual consecration.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

OUR PROGRAM

Young Friends Day has passed. But the work as proposed has just begun. We are in real earnest about this matter. The time has come for Friends to move forward in a large way. Some skeptic will laugh at our proposals but live, red blooded young Friends will be challenged to begin. What do we want? It is this; THREE THOUSAND NEW CONVERTS among the young people. That is the first and most important thing. It calls for consecration, organization and immediate action. Two months of the year have already gone by. Let us begin at once to bring our personal friends and chums to Christ. Don't be afraid to talk the matter over with them. No doubt they are waiting for you to talk about things that really matter. Prepare for the Special Meetings. Work them up. If you have no evangelist send for a Gospel team from some church or college. Three thousand is the number. That is our slogan and we must realize it. "The Field is white unto the harvest." Let us go in. Where is a real hero among Young Friends? Where is an Endeavorer who has consecrated his life to the Master's service? We need you now!

Our next Slogan is THREE THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR. Now this means work. It means that every existing society should seek to double its membership and that every Meeting without a young peoples organization must get busy at once to start something. Start an Endeavor if you can but if that is impossible at first start a study class, a discussion class or something. THREE THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS that is TWO HUNDRED FIFTY each month. Can we do it? Why certainly. One yearly Meeting has nearly that many new members already. Let's work hard! Are you existing to live or to bring your whole community to Christ?

QUARTERLY MEETING SUPERINTENDENT, here is a chance for you. Have you organized your Quarterly Meeting? Do you have a definite plan for work? How many Societies do you expect to put in your Quarter between now and Christmas? See the pastor of the meeting, call on some interested young Friend, talk things over, arrange a conference, bring in some speakers, talk up the Endeavor and organize. Begin work at once. Have you said you did not know what to do? You cannot say that any longer. Here is a definite plan. Work it and see the result. The third point of our program to which I want to call your attention this week is TO GAIN TWO THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS FOR THE CHURCH. Have you ever asked your chum to join the church? This takes some courage, but the joy that comes from talking over such things is worth all that it costs. Persuade that fellow who sits by your side in the Sunday School class that the time has come for him to take a more aggressive place in the church. You can win him. Begin next Sunday to make yourself really felt in this manner. A steady growing church is more efficient than one that goes by fits and starts. Be a soul winner all the year around.

What about Mission Study?

How many meetings have Mission Study Classes for her young people? How can you afford to get along without one? The sustained enthusiasm gained through a Mission Study Class permeates the whole church. It clinches young people to the Church as nothing else, and turns them into ardent enthusiastic workers. Let the motto "THE ENTIRE CHURCH AT ITS ENTIRE TASK" be driven home in the minds of Young Friends. The whole world is to be His Kingdom and He is depending upon us to help Him take it to the uttermost parts. "Go ye," he says, and then in loving assurance He continues "Lo I am with you all the way."

ANNOUNCEMENT!

The Eighth Annual Summer Conference for Friends Young People will be held at Cedar Lake, Indiana, August 3-12, 1917.

It is not too early to make plans to attend. Registration and tuition will be the same as last year, or $2.50. Watch this page for further particulars.

We have a new booklet on our shelves, it is called the "Quaker of the Future." It contains an excellent presentation of our ideas and methods, 25c. Send at once.

Watch these pages for a report of the Young Friends conference at Yorktown Heights, New York. This can be repeated in any section of the country. Try it.

How are you going to celebrate the Christ's birthday? Would you like to be happy? Then plan to make others happy. Get in touch with the Indian Mission at Shawnee, Okla., either through us or the Supts., Clark and Elma T. Brown. We quote from a recent letter:

"You cannot tell by looking at names of meetings but what we are an 'up-to-date' Quaker Meeting, but we are not. This is a Mission, kept up by the Executive Committee on Indian Affairs. We are made up of children. If you will take some large Quaker church and take out 45 primary, 35 intermediate, 15 adults in the 'teen' age and a few grownup teachers you will have a fair sample of our make-up, but remember that we have Indians who never had the training in the home that the children in our churches have had. We are training them to give, but it is slow work. We keep up our Bible School expenses, and use the first Sabbath in each month as Missionary money. You must also remember that very few of them are Friends; they are only school children, and we train them in spiritual things while here.

What can you do to help us?

1. We are just now in need of some new song books and are raising money to buy 100 "Joy to the World," and have about half enough.

2. Any good books that would be helpful in any way (I have loaned books ever since coming—Ben Hur, Harold Bell Wrights, Porters and others), that could be placed on our loan shelf would be welcomed.

3. Anything that will be useful to give to our missionaries or Indians, such as towels, bed quilts, sheets, etc., but send nothing without writing and getting more of the particulars about it, telling just what you have to send.

4. Send some one, or ones, to visit the Indian field; it will both help us and do the Society good. Should you do so, don't send some one that will have to hurry."

Will Friends not answer this appeal?

To a soul filled with God the difference between earthly conditions (a sovereign and a peasant) is inappreciable, as if from a distant star you were to look down upon a palace and a hovel, and smile at the thought of calling one large and the other small.—F. W. Robertson.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

December 10

"Defy Evil!" 1 Kings 21:15-20.

Assign topics for discussion or short talks; such as:

"When Is it Right to Fight?"

"What Evils May We Defy?"

"What Is the Value of 'Resist' as a Motto?"

"Why Does Right Make Might in the End?"

"A Saloonless Nation by 1920."

"A writer tells of going with a party down into a coal mine. On the side of the gangway grew a plant which was perfectly white. The visitors were astonished, that there, where the coal dust was continually flying, this little plant should be so pure and white. A miner, who was with them, took a handful of coal-black dust and threw it upon the plant, but not a particle adhered. Every atom of the dust rolled off. The visitors themselves repeated the experiment, but the coal dust would not cling. There was a wonderful enamel on the folds of the white plant to which no finest speck could adhere.

This is a picture of what every young Christian life should be. This in an evil world. We go among the ungodly continually in our daily walk and work. Unholy influences breathe about us; but it is our mission to be pure amid all this vileness, undefiled, unspotted from the world. If God can make a little plant so that no dust can stain its whiteness, can he not by his grace so transform your heart and life that no sin can cling to you? If God can keep a little flower stainless, white as snow, amid clouds of black dust, can he not keep hearts in like purity in this world of sin?"

THE BIBLE THAT IS MOST LIKELY TO PLEASE EVERYBODY

The Bible-Giving Christmas Plan

This movement has been inaugurated among Christian People to make at least one of their gifts a Bible, in honor of Him for Whom the great festival has been named.

"INTERNATIONAL" CLEAR NUTYPE TEACHER'S BIBLE

SELF-PRONOUNCING

While the text of the Bible does not change, new methods of type-making have produced a type that is larger in size, more easily read, and more restful to the eyes, for use in a book which is also more convenient in size and lighter in weight. The type used in this new Bible was moulded especially for the purpose. It is the largest, clearest type to be found in any Bible of like size.

THE MOST MODERN IDEAS IN BIBLE-MAKING. In addition to the large clear type and convenient size, the full contents also commend this Bible. It contains the Authorized Version of the Old and New Testaments, with sixty thousand references in the center column; has the names of the books of the Bible printed on outer edge for quick reference; has all proper names accented and divided into syllables, making pronunciation easy; has the most accurate, most usable aids to Bible study; and has seventeen colored maps.

NEW TYPE OF TEACHERS' AIDS TO BIBLE STUDY

The logical arrangement of the helps is another improvement and a great convenience. All the aids (over 400 pages), including Complete Concordance, Subject Index, Dictionary, etc., etc., are under one Alphabetical Arrangement instead of separate headings as in the old type of Bible. Furthermore, these new helps are illustrated and are the only helps printed from black-face type, which makes them more readable and useful.

HANDSOMELY BOUND IN FLEXIBLE LEATHER

This Bible is printed on thin rag paper especially made for it. Jet black ink is used in the printing to make the type stand forth clearly. Handsome, Flexible Leather Binding, with overlapping covers (like cut), red-under-gold edges, head-band and purple ribbon marker, all combine to make it the finest, most practical of Bibles—the most pleasing of all gifts.

Exact Size, 5½ x 8 inches.

Each Bible packed in a Handsome Decorated Christmas Box.

IMPORTANT TO SUBSCRIBERS

Apparently all subscribers to The American Friend have not read the announcements in these columns during recent weeks, to the effect that on and after January 1, 1917, the subscription price will be advanced to $2.00. THIS ADVANCE APPLIES TO ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS WHICH EXPIRE ON JANUARY 1, 1917 AND AFTERWARDS. Sending in the money before January 1 does not avail to secure the paper at the present rate, IF THE EXPIRATION COMES ON JANUARY 1, OR LATER. We send notices of expiration each month, for the guidance of all subscribers. We cannot accept $1.50 in payment for a full year's subscription, whose expiration dates from January 1, and later. All subscriptions which expire before January 1, next, will be renewed at the old rate. Our readers will readily see that a certain time had to be fixed by which the new rate is to be governed. This advance in price is due wholly to the great advance in the cost of blank paper. Will all our subscribers please take note and pass the word on to others?

DEATH OF DOCTOR TRUEBLOOD

Benjamin F. Trueblood, secretary of the American Peace society, died the other day at Boston, Mass. More than any other American he or more than twenty-five years had labored for peace between nations. From 1879 until 1890 he was president of Penn College at Oskaloosa, and in the latter year was given the degree of LL. D. by the State University of Iowa. The following poem by Maj. S. H. M. Byers was read at Penn college memorial services yesterday:

BENJAMIN F. TRUEBLOOD

(He died for peace.)

BY S. H. M. BYERS

Where, where is the field of honor,
Since ever the world began,
Like that where the Christian soldier
Uplifteth his fellow man?
There, never the drums are beating,
There, never the trumpets sound,
Where the cowards seem retreating
And the bravest are falling 'round.
Such, such, was the field of honor
Where he of our bravest fell,
The dream of his life unfinished,
Or lost in his funeral knell.

"Peace, peace!" he had cried forever,
And he cited the holy word;
For a little while they saw him,
And it almost seemed they heard.

For his was the master's teaching,
And his was the master's way,
And all men seemed persuaded—
But only a little day.

For sudden the night of madness
On all of the nations fell,
And he who had prayed God's sweetness
Saw only the pits of hell.

And over his noble spirit
The shadow of sorrow came;
But the bells in heaven were ringing
The glory of Trueblood's name.

And, spite of the world's unheeding,
When the rage of the war shall cease,
There'll be tears in the eyes of the many
For him who had died for peace.

Rest, rest—for thy limbs were weary;
But never thy work was vain,
For the torch that thy hand uplifted
Shall lighten and shine again.

The Story of Coal

It was a very cold winter night, and as Jack sat before the blazing coal fire, he felt very comfortable indeed. The fire never seemed so pretty to him, and he sat and watched the glowing coals so long that his mother thought he had gone sound asleep, as grandfather had done in his big, easy chair.

"I'm not a bit asleep," Jack declared. "I've been wishing I could go down to a coal mine and see how coal is made."

"But it isn't made," his mother said; "it is in the ground all ready to be taken out for our use. Once upon a time this hard coal was a great, beautiful forest, ferns, leaves, moss and vines and large trees of every kind. Hundreds of years went by, the old trees rotting away and new ones coming on, until at last, instead of being the lovely green things, all was black and ugly. And then, one day, after so many years of darkness, men with lamps went down into the earth with long picks in their hands and began to loosen the black pieces of rock. A boy came along and tossed it into a cart, and along the narrow covered path which led to the earth and the beautiful sunshine, the coal came out of its hiding place. This coal family is a large one, with relatives all over the world. Their real name is Peat, but only in one country, in Ireland, are they known by that name. In every country coal is found—in sunny Italy, cold Russia, China, Japan and, indeed, everywhere.

"A coal miner has a hard life, and yet how brave he is, going down into the earth to bring us this comfort and brightness! Winter would be a cheerless time were it not for coal. It's one of the things we should be thankful for. How good God is to put such comforts away, deep, down in the earth! The story of coal is a very wonderful one, and some day you will learn how beautiful trees and growing things can make the hard, black rocks we burn."

"Perhaps I'll be a miner myself and wear a cap with a lamp on it," said Jack, "that is, if I ever am brave enough!"—The Child's Gem.

The Passing of a Great Man

Friends have never been hero worshipers, and it is in no spirit of mere laudation that we endeavor to pay tribute to the life and work of Benjamin F. Trueblood. His was a life that belongs to the ages. Being a student of the past, he gathered up the best from the agencies that have contributed to the making of a progressive civilization, and interpreted them broadly for the weal of the present. Concerned for his own generation, his active energies made large contribution along many lines to the betterment of the race. With prophetic soul he could look over into the future, and set in motion currents of thought and action that will find their best fulfillment in the uplift of succeeding generations.

First and foremost, Benjamin F. Trueblood was positively and constructively a Friend, not of the sectarian, provincial type that bounds its horizon with localized ideals, but of a type that considers humanity as a whole and craves the best for its uplift and encouragement. He chose to remain a Friend, not for reasons of tradition, but because he saw in Quakerism the opportunity to exhibit to the world that vitalizing Christian force that is the sum and substance of true humanitarian progress, and also to express in the best possible way his own conceptions of duty to his fellow man. His was a big soul that saw in the religion of Jesus that which could minister to all human need, and with matchless endeavor he sought to measure every great question by the teachings of his divine Master.

Amid the tremendous burdens of his life, burdens which only those could know who were closely associated with him, he found delight in proclaiming the simple gospel story, and multiplied thousands have found solace and a new light and a larger vision as they have sat under the spell of his ministry.

As an educational executive Doctor Trueblood took high rank, bringing into his leadership of youth the best ideals of his early manhood. The stamp of his virile, active life is upon Wilmington and Penn Colleges, both of which he served with efficiency in their years. His contact with young men and women during those years of official college life left its impress upon his whole career, for while the body grew older, his spirit remained youthful and buoyant, and many a group of young people now can testify to spiritual aid and uplift received from him in private counsel and to their delightful fellowship with him as he found occasional times for recreation and social relaxation.

It was in the field of pacifism, however, that the great soul of Benjamin F. Trueblood found its best and most marked expression. One could not but marvel at the depth of his knowledge and the breadth of his interest. He was in reality a world man. For more than two decades he thought in world terms and spoke a world language. He was a type of which international statesmen are made, and had he chosen to direct his talents into that field, he could easily have become a master diplomatist. From his wonderful storehouse of knowledge, and with his well balanced judgment, he was a man who could advise with Presidents and law makers, and his conclusions were heard with respectful attention.

The passion of his life, aside from his devotion to the cause of his Lord and Saviour, was the promotion of international peace, and to this cause, he, perhaps more than any other American within the last twenty-five years, gave shape and form and constructive workmanship. It is no discredit to his efforts that so much of the world is now being rent in bloody strife, for when the great war is over, the building of the peace propaganda will be renewed upon the very foundation which he in such a large degree helped to fashion and establish.

The instrument which gave voice to his great ideals upon the peace question was The Advocate of Peace, the organ of the American Peace Society, which he served so faithfully as Secretary for nearly twenty-five years. For that period of time the files of the Advocate will reveal in permanent form the history of a great world movement, whose guiding hand in so large a degree was that of Benjamin F. Trueblood.

As educator, preacher, author, publicist and Friend he did his work well. The Society of Friends will miss his counsel and the movement for international peace his directing hand. But having served his day and generation nobly, he has gone to enter upon a larger life, wherein a "crown of righteousness" has been vouchsafed to all who have been faithful even unto death.

Benjamin F. Trueblood---An Appreciation

By CHARLES M. WOODMAN

In the passing of Benjamin F. Trueblood the educational interests of the Society of Friends have lost one of their eminent founders, the Five Years Meeting one of its earnest advocates and warmest supporters, and the cause of International Peace one of its most devoted and enthusiastic workers. Within these three chosen fields lay his life work, and here his aggressive and dynamic personality found ample room for constructive and progressive expression. He not only made himself felt where he worked, but his constructive outlook, his indomitable optimism, his convincing argument and his untiring activity left whatever field he worked in richer and more fruitful because he had been there.

He was born November 25th, 1847, at Salem, Ind., the son of Joshua A. and Esther P. Trueblood. With Quaker parents, with a Quaker setting for his youth, and with a Quaker education secured in Blue River Monthly Meeting School, and Earlham College, where he received his A. B. in 1869, he became a Quaker in heart and character. This religious outlook colored and dominated his influence in every circle where he moved.

The initial steps in his career as an educator were taken during his college course when he taught school to earn his way to graduation. After leaving Earlham College he became principle of Raisin Valley Seminary in Michigan, and then after two years returned to his Alma Mater to act as governor and professor of English Literature. In 1873 he went for one year to Oskaloosa, Iowa, where he acted as professor of Greek and Latin, and had no small part in the establishment of the institution as Penn College. Wilmington College called him to its presidency in 1874. He served Wilmington College in this capacity until 1879, when he returned to Oskaloosa to become the president of Penn College. He was president of that institution for eleven years when he left the educational field to identify himself with what proved to be his real life work, the promotion of international peace and arbitration. Benjamin F. Trueblood became a factor in the educational problems of the Friends Church at a time when the schools of the middle west were feeling their way from academy limitations to the broader lines of the recognized college curriculum. In this work of laying foundations he was a positive constructionist. Wilmington and Penn Colleges are today doing work on foundations established by this man. He received the Master's Degree from Earlham College in 1875. He was honored with the Degree of L. L. D. by Iowa Wesleyan University in 1887, by Iowa State University in 1890, and by Baylor University at Waco, Texas in 1907.

It is impossible to set forth the career of this noble man of God without touching upon his work as a Christian minister and his constructive idealism in the development of the Society of Friends. He was recorded as a minister in Blue River Preparative Meeting in 1870, in his twenty-third year. In the ministry he developed a gift of very marked power. During all his years of work in the cause of Peace he never lost sight of, or ceased to use his talent as a preacher of the simple Gospel of Christ. Up to the last few years of his life he preached almost constantly. His messages were deeply spiritual, simple, clear and convincing. He was a "Mr. Great-heart" to many a young minister feeling his blundering way to a point of effectiveness in his Christian service. He never studied in the theological seminaries, but his library shelves were lined with theological books, and he was keenly alive to the problems of the present day, and abreast with the best constructive thought in the whole field of theology. He had a very broad grasp of the entire field of American Quakerism. He knew its main currents, and its back eddies. He was very active in the conferences which preceded the establishment of the Five Years Meeting, and was a positive force for large programs in the early meetings of that body. In church affairs he was a statesman with vision. He combined in his heart a very dear love for his own denomination with the most kindly catholicity of spirit toward all other followers of Christ who walked beneath different denominational insignia.

Benjamin F. Trueblood's early peace work was done under the auspices of the Christian Arbitration and Peace Society with headquarters in Philadelphia. He became their foreign secretary in 1890 and went to England and France where he gave some twenty addresses and studied French to further fit himself for this important international work. He became very proficient in the use of French. This together with his ability to speak German and read Italian made him eventually a most efficient member of the international peace congresses. During this period he was a frequent contributor to the "Independent" and "The Christian Work" on the peace lookout in Europe. After returning to America he took up peace work in Iowa under the auspices of that Yearly Meeting, and at the same time acted as minister of the Friends City Meeting in Oskaloosa.

It will be of interest to Friends to know that his name was proposed as Secretary of the American Peace Society by Augustine Jones who at that time (1892) was principle of Moses Brown School in Providence, R. I. A rival candidate for the place was presented to the directors and with his name an offer of $10,000 as a gift to the then struggling society, if he should be elected. Benjamin F. Trueblood's name was presented with no promise of money, but with the assurance that he was a man who was in the Peace Cause because he loved it; that he was seasoned all through with peace, with generations of peace born in him; that he had great knowledge and weight as a public advocate, and could lecture and write on peace in French. He won the election and entered on a most notable service of twenty-three years duration. He came to the society when it was weak and small; he left it the most effective peace organization in America; possessing as its official organ The Advocate of Peace, the best peace journal in the world. With persistent hard work he added to the force of the organization first an assistant secretary, then a field secretary, then a secretary for the Pacific Coast and one for the South Atlantic States. After this came departments with their separate directors, while branches multiplied rapidly in cities and states. When he resigned the Society had five great coordinated departments with offices, thirteen affiliating and co-operating societies, thirty-four branch societies, twenty-one sections, twenty-five new societies in the process of formation. Its members had risen in number from four hundred to nearly eight thousand, and the Advocate of Peace had increased its subscription list from fifteen hundred to more than eleven thousand. Associated with him in this work of organization were such men and women as Robert Treat Paine, who for years was president of the Society, Senator Theodore E. Burton who holds the office at the present time, Rev. George Dana Boardman, Dr. A. A. Minor, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Rev. Philip S. Moxom, John G. Whittier, Philips Brooks, Mary A. Livermore and David Dudley Field.

Dr. Trueblood's ideas found largest expression in the columns of the Advocate of Peace. His clear, penetrating grasp of world problems found here a straightforward fearless presentation. One thoroughly conversant with his work in this line has said of him: "His articles and editorials were not put together. They were living, growing, unfolding messages, unified, homogeneous, spontaneous. His editorial power grew and improved as the years slipped by, and he involved into one of the keenest students of current history. Seldom was it necessary for him to reverse his judgments. He became one of the wisest of the present day discerners of the world sky. Especially as a discriminating interpreter of the peace movement he had no equal in America, and probably none in the entire world."

He wrote but one book, "The Federation of the World," published in 1889. His pamphlets, however, were very numerous. Among them might be mentioned, "A Stated International Congress", "Washington's Anti-Militarism", "The Christ of the Andes", "International Arbitration at the Opening of the Twentieth Century," "The Historic Development of the Peace Idea," "History of the American Peace Society and its Work," "A Periodic Congress of the Nations."

As the personal representative of the American Peace Society he was its ever-present verbal advocate and indefatigable worker. He handled office work of immense proportions, and then was at the call of every organization that wished a representation of the cause to which he had devoted his life. It was here that his powers of brain and heart and physique, coupled with his remarkable personality came to their fullest expression. His clear logic, his masterful correlation and presentation of facts, his calm but forceful speech not only carried conviction, but gave to a cause which has often been sneeringly referred to as belonging to weaklings, the invincible argument of a strong, virile and aggressive personality. The peace propaganda was never in his mind a passive affair, or a negative protest. It was a battle royal for the cause of right. How indomitable he was in this field only those can understand who have heard him pour out his great messages with the hot passion of a burning soul.

During the years of his secretaryship he was a constant attendant upon the international peace congresses. In all the years from that in Berne in 1892 to the nineteenth in Geneva in 1912 he missed only two. At the Universal Peace Congress in London in 1908 he was a member of a deputation composed of the leading pacifists from the various countries of the world which waited upon Edward VII. At the international congress held in Chicago in 1893 he was chairman of the joint executive committee of the peace societies. He bore a very active part in the arrangements for the Congress held in Boston in 1904. The American peace conferences found in him an ardent supporter. We can mention only a few of the important parts he played in this relationship. He was chairman of the organizing committee of the American Friends Peace Conference in Philadelphia in 1901. He helped to organize the New York Peace Conference of 1907. In 1895 he aided Albert K. Smiley in setting up the Lake Mohonk Conferences, and when the conferences convened from time to time Dr. Trueblood's annual presentation of the facts concerning the progress of peace during the preceding year usually followed the president's speech of welcome. Mr. Edwin D. Mead tells us, "It was Dr. Trueblood who first proposed at Mohonk the discussion of the establishment of a great international court of arbitration, which should be to the nations what the United States Supreme Court is to the States of the Union."

In 1911 the American Peace Society under Dr. Trueblood's lead moved its headquarters from Boston, Mass. to Washington, D. C. that it might take its rightful place at the center of the nation's life. Here he entered more intimately than previously into national and international affairs. He came into close touch with leading jurists, educators, legislators and diplomats. He worthily won the title "publicist", and those with whom he associated came to respect his knowledge and rely upon his judgment. He was one who could think in international terms. The facility with which he grasped large world problems, and advised upon them, even in detail, revealed him to be a man capable of handling positions of very large responsibility.

Conservative estimates of his influence rate him as fundamentally the greatest apostle of peace in America in this century. The names of men with great money and prestige have been famed far and wide in this cause. In practically all their activity, however, the influence and practical wisdom of this faithful secretary of the Peace Association have been working behind the scenes. Through Benjamin F. Trueblood the Society of Friends has made a contribution to the cause of peace comparable only, with very few if any exceptions, to that made by William Penn in the first period of Quaker history. What Elizabeth Fry did for prison reform, what John Bright did for statesmanship and political life in England, what John Woolman and John G. Whittier did for human freedom, that same thing did Benjamin F. Trueblood accomplish for the cause of International Peace and Arbitration.

The physicians tell us his death was caused by arterio-sclerosis. That is doubtless true, but those who knew him in his labors appreciate the fact that the great spirit in the man undertook and pushed forward more than even his strong physique could long sustain. He resigned his position on May 7th, 1915, and was made honorary secretary.

He died young, we say. Yes, but he lived in deeds not years, and thus estimated his life will be viewed as a shock of corn fully ripe for the harvest. He died young, Yes, he never grew old; he had his eye fixed on the future. In his retirement after resignation he made plans for future activities, and followed the star of peace leading to a better day after the night of war should fade into the dawn.

On October 26th, 1916 he heard the great summons to the larger life of God, and his youthful, buoyant, joyous spirit left its broken tenement of clay at the call of its Master, which might well have come in His words of old. "Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will set thee over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." As a close to his simple tribute to a really great man let me quote the words of Rev. Charles E. Beal of Worcester, Mass., who for many years was associated with him in work, and knew him intimately.

"If true greatness means a desire and determination to uplift and bless humanity, if it means large and wise plans for the carrying out of such a benevolent purpose, if it means lifelong service unselfishly rendered, then does and shall Benjamin Franklin Trueblood rank high among the permanently great. He was a wholesome, many-sided, great-minded man, open to and in heartiest sympathy with every moral reform. He was not a one-stringed fiddler. Anything that would help forward civilization he was ready and glad to support and advocate. He was as sincere and simple as a child. Contrasted with his simple-minded, almost single handed, and sublimely courageous battle for a better humanity, for happier homes, for higher morals, for straight thinking, how cheap and superficial and vulgar and beastlike seems the tawdry, swashbuckling heroism of militarism, how barbarous and brutal and fiendish the man-butchers of soldierdom!"

THE TRAINING OF MINISTERS AND MISSIONARIES.

By W. P. PINKHAM

To those who love the appearing of the Lord Jesus, it is cheering to note the awakening of the church to the meaning and spirit of the great Commission, "Go and disciple the nations." The burden of Spirit-filled souls from the earliest ages to the present, seems to have become, more than ever before, the burden of the church.

As the commission is impressed upon the heart of the consecrated believer and he considers the grave responsibility of becoming an "ambassador for Christ," there comes a longing for the preparation which will secure greatest efficiency in this high and holy calling.

The world, ever ready to counsel the children of God, insists that civilization must precede evangelization, and demands for ministers and missionaries large stores of worldly knowledge, and the mental discipline to be gained in acquiring such knowledge.

The church, never yet fully freed from the spirit of the world, and lacking the faith and the courage to free herself, takes up the cry, and demands of candidates for the ministry or the mission field long years of study in college and university and theological seminary; and would fain refuse every candidate who has not a preparation of this quality and quantity.

I would by no means undervalue the learning or the discipline which a child of God, well saved and constantly kept, might obtain from such a course of preparation. But when it is proposed to make such a preparation a requisite for admission to ministerial or missionary service, or even to make it a ground for discrimination against those who lack just this preparation, I then venture to propound and to ask my fellow Christians to consider the question, Is it not the duty of the living members of Christ's body to dissent from the proposal, on the ground that it is contrary to the purpose and spirit of the Gospel, besides being at once unpractical and impracticable?

The Gospel is the tidings of a provision for salvation from the penalty and power of sin by the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. No one who has not experienced this salvation is Divinely authorized to proclaim the tidings. Everyone who has experienced it is thus authorized, subject only to the requirement of being "endued with power from on high." It is to be proclaimed to all nations, regardless of race, rank or culture. Its purpose is not civilization but individual salvation. Civil and social and, in a true sense, political elevation will surely follow; but the purpose is the salvation of the individual, and as nearly as possible of every individual.

To harness with this highest, holiest purpose any other purpose whatever, is to weaken or defeat the greater in the interest of the less. An associated aim is therefore, in this instance, a contrary aim, however plausible or even necessary the association may appear. Everywhere and always the Gospel has flourished best and witnessed the most benign and far-reaching results, when its heralds were true to its one purpose, the salvation of their fellow men by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

But the insistence upon a high educational standard as necessary for the minister or missionary, is also contrary to the spirit of the Gospel. That spirit it may be characterized as a heavenborn love for Christ and for souls. It is impossible to the unregenerate. It is known in its fulness to those only who are cleansed from all pride and selfishness by the baptism with the Holy Spirit, and who seek only God's glory and the realization of His will. But this dominating and all consuming love is never realized apart from perfect trust, which sees Jesus and Jesus only as its dependence for salvation and for service; and this love and this trust are alike exclusive. No other than Christ can be suffered to control our affection, or to divide its control with Him. Nor can our confidence be divided between Him and our own attainments, without hindrance to His cause in so far as its progress is entrusted to our care. A high educational standard cannot be made a requirement, without a dividing of confidence, both on the part of the employing Board, and on the part of the candidate.

Paul is frequently lauded as the most brainy and the most highly educated man of his time, though the correctness of such laudation is without adequate historic proof, and is highly improbable. Two things are unquestionable clear. First, That Paul himself persistently disclaimed any confidence in natural or acquired ability, and attributed his successes to grace alone. "I came not unto you with excellency of speech or of wisdom." "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." "My speech and my preaching were not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." If Paul's words do not reveal an utterly exclusive confidence in his Lord, it is because words cannot reveal it.

But we are face to face with another consideration. Comparing the messages and teachings of Paul with those of other holy men of old, they cannot justly be said to surpass in pungency, in perfectness of adaption or in power the utterances of Elijah, the rustic prophet of Gilead, or Amos, the uncultured herdsman of Tekoa. Rich and valuable as the Pauline epistles are, does any of them outrank in beauty or spiritual insight or masterly comprehensiveness the epistles of Peter, the "unlearned" fisherman? And, as to relative excellence in service, have we any proof that the work committed to Paul was performed more perfectly than that committed to the other apostles? Have we proof that his work though more fully and ably chronicled than theirs, was really a greater work? And, even if it were greater, are we sure that it was entrusted to him because of his superior scholarship? Was not the high quality of the work of all the apostles a mere fulfillment of the promise of their Master, "I will give you a mouth and wisdom which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist?"

If this be true, would not the requiring of a high educational qualification for ministers and missionaries be unpractical? To answer this question further, Quakers would do well to remember the illustrious founder of their Society; Baptists their immortal Bunyan; Methodists their Thomas Maxfield, "the first of the innumerable lay preachers, who have spread the Gospel throughout the world more successfully than any other class of the Christian community." And all Christendom will do well to remember Charles G. Finney and Dwight L. Moody, whose marvelous power in the Gospel cannot be traced to the learning or the training of College or Seminary.

If evidence were needed to show that a high educational requirement is also impracticable, it may be found in the fact that it is contrary to the genius of Quakerism and of Christianity itself. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, said the Lord." "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent." "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." It was the full recognition of these great principles that gave to prophets and apostles, and to the early Friends and the early Methodists, their singular power in the Gospel, and nothing short of this full recognition will avail now or in the future for the same great ends.

Let those "who have tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come," and who have been called as ambassadors for Christ, go forth, not with a divided confidence, depending upon Christ and His Spirit only. If they are learned, let them, like Paul, count all but refuse that they may win Christ and be found in Him, and then God can work in them and through them as He will. And if they are ignorant, yet clearly called, let them not plead ignorance as a ground for disobedience or hesitation, but in simple faith in the great Shepherd of their souls, let them prove to themselves and to mankind His unlimited sufficiency to those who perfectly trust Him. And let not the church forbid any, whether learned or ignorant, who give clear evidence of the Divine call and the enduement of power from on high. If the church of today ought to be sitting in sackcloth and ashes over her failure to win men to Christ, it is not because she has not a larger proportion of learned members, but because she has too few that are made perfect in the faith of Christ, and who with a single eye follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. Let her not, therefore, demand of the Lord's anointed children forms or degrees of qualification which His word has not enjoined.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING EVANGELISTIC BOARD.

(The following is the third article from Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Boards, solicited by The American Friend, this one being from Indiana Yearly Meeting.)

The Evangelistic Pastoral and Church Extension Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting presented the "Family Altar League" to all our families last year and 1000 families enrolled as members. The Yearly Meeting was so well pleased with the result that it instructed the committee to stress this the coming year. The every member financial canvass and budget system have come to stay, and an increasing number of the meetings are adopting these plans with good results. These will be vigorously pushed by the committee the coming year.

We are gratified at the religious community canvass that several country meetings have carried out last year. The Yearly Meeting endorsed the suggestion of the Committee that all the pastors attend the country church conferences to be held in all parts of the state during the winter. We mean to put forth our best efforts to make the country church movement a great spiritual blessing.

We regret that the statistics of the Yearly Meeting were not accurate enough to publish this year, simply because many meetings failed to get adjusted to the new blanks. The Yearly Meeting appointed the Yearly Meeting Superintendent as statistical secretary, giving him two assistants, and instructing him to spare no pains to bring accurate reports to the next Yearly Meeting. Already he is perfecting plans to insure better returns next year. As he goes about he is correcting the list of clerks, recorders, and statistical secretaries and personally instructing them as to their duties.

The number of conversions, renewals, additions to the church, etc., showed a splendid year so far as the reports have been received. Pastoral evangelism was one notable thing. Some pastors conducted their own revival meetings, some exchanged with other pastors, but most of the meetings had some evangelist to lead them in their special work. Four gospel teams and several individual students of Earlham were aided by the committee to find places for service. This work will receive our careful attention the coming year.

The Superintendent was chairman of the Committee on "Yearly Meeting Day" last year and is continued for the same service the coming year. Last year a bulletin of information was sent to each meeting and family, with information for carrying out the plan, so that November 19 was generally observed by meetings and families as a time of prayer and thought on all the work of the Yearly Meeting. This year a list of some twenty-five questions, based on the Yearly Meeting minutes, will be sent to each pastor with the request that he look up the answers in the Minutes and give the information to his meeting on December 17th; then a little later a list of some one hundred questions will be sent to each home for it as a family circle to find the answers in the Minutes. We hope by this plan to obtain a thorough examination of the Yearly Meeting Minutes, first by the pastor and later by each family.

Three new Meeting houses have been built last year. The largest one, West Richmond, is just nearing completion at a cost of $24,000. Nine have been remodeled, at least two of which, Traverse City and New Westville, cost near $3,000 each. Five parsonages have been provided during the year which now make twenty-five substantial ministers' homes in the Yearly Meeting. The Yearly Meeting enthusiastically endorsed the suggestion of the committee that all church property, needing it, be painted and put in good repair, also that the grounds be planted with trees, flowers, shrubs, etc., to make them neat and attractive, and that the names of each meeting be put in a conspicuous place, so that passers by if strangers, may see them and perchance stop for worship. These suggested improvements are already being carried out by several meetings.

The circuit plan continues to work well for the small and scattered meetings. The support of more than half of our ministers is inadequate, and this is increasingly so in the face of the advancing prices for most of the necessities of life. For three years we have had as a minimum salary $500.00 and a house, but meetings must now do better, or many pastors' families will not have the necessities. Pastors cannot do satisfactory work without a comfortable support.

Workers' conferences have been held in two quarterly meetings, so far this year, with splendid results. At these the vital questions claiming the attention of our workers were presented and discussed. The Superintendent thus has the opportunity to present personally the plans of the committee. It is hoped to hold in each Quarterly Meeting one or more of these conferences, during the year.

Indiana Yearly Meeting with its more than 20,000 members means not only to keep abreast of the times, but to lead out all that proves to bring the best spiritual results. We believe that the only permanent results will come as we preach repentance from sin and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, followed by the Baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire, thus removing the guilt as well as destroying the power of sin. To this task are definitely committed the one hundred pastors, together with a hundred and forty ministers, who are not pastors, as they work in the sixteen Quarterly Meetings, divided into sixty-eight Monthly Meetings, embracing the one hundred and thirty-eight individual meetings of Indiana Yearly Meeting.

A TRIBUTE OF APPRECIATION

(We reproduce here the following paragraphs from the address delivered by Chas. E. Beals at the funeral of Benjamin F. Trueblood on October 28, 1916.)

"As Secretary of the American Peace Society, he was the official public spokesman and representative of that historic peace organization, and, as such, was constantly being called upon for addresses and lectures on all sorts of subjects and all sorts of occasions. For example, we find that in one year he delivered no less than forty public lectures and speeches. Does the National Reform Association meet in convention? Then Dr. Trublood must remind the reformers of The Nation's Responsibility for Peace." Does a Southern Lecture Bureau wish to thunder forth a broadside from the heaviest peace artillery in the country? Then the genial peace secretary must turn suit-case dweller and campaign through Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia and South Carolina, firing off twenty-three lectures. Does a College, like Haverford, plan a Summer School of Religious History? Then must our peace interpreter prepare and deliver his now well-known "Historic Development of the Peace Idea."

Is an imposing statue of William Penn to be placed on the top of the tower of the Municipal Building in Philadelphia? Then William Penn's most illustrious living successor must tell about Wm. Penn's Holy Experiment in Civil Government." Is a tablet to be unveiled to John G. Whittier in the Hall of Fame? Then the Secretary of Peace must discourse on "Whittier, the Poet of Peace." Is a college looking for some really big man for its commencement orator? Then our Quaker giant must be impressed into service, as at Goshen College. Is a new church to be dedicated? Then Dr. Trueblood must preach the sermon, as at the Friend's Church at Worcester, Mass. Does a world-renowned lecturer fail a great audience on some important occasion, as in the Sunday evening meeting at the opening of the New England Peace Conference at Hartford, Conn? Then no one but the humble, humorous, broad-visioned Dr. Trueblood can make people forget their disappointment and indignation.

Is the Association of Cosmopolitan Clubs to hold a session at Cornell or Madison? It would be "Hamlet with Hamlet left out" without, "the venerable (how he disliked and laughed over the adjective!) Dr. Trueblood to give the key-note message. Does a Bible conference aspire to introduce to its patrons the most famous pacifist in the United States? That means that Dr. Trueblood, in mid-summer, must travel up from Washington, D. C., to Winona Lake, Indiana, to tell about "The Breaking down of National Boundaries." Does the Economic Club of Providence, R. I., wish to allure its members to a banquet with such a compelling appeal that they will respond five hundred strong? Then said club need only announce a debate on "The Fortification of the Panama Canal," the word duellists being the Judge Advocate General of the United States Army and the "Captain of the Lord's Hosts" of American pacifists. If a meeting is to be held on ship-board in mid-ocean? Who is so well qualified to preside as this tall, broad-shouldered, imposing kind-faced gentleman of choice language and obvious culture?

"It was always a joy to listen to Dr. Trueblood in public address. Some quaint phrase or humorous story would put the audience in responsive mood. Then in earnest, honest, pleasing tones, the argument would be unfolded with such sweet reasonableness and manifest sincerity as often to produce surprising results. There was not a particle of "spread-eagleism" in his delivery. He was simple, natural, transparent, true. But his command of facts was so comprehensive as to be irresistible.

"Out of his Advocate articles and his public addresses and lectures grew Dr. Trueblood's permanent books and pamphlets. Many of the addresses which we have mentioned were printed in the Advocate after their delivery and then re-published in pamphlet form. These pamphlets would run through edition after edition, until the circulation mounted into many thousands of copies." * * *

"Dr. Trueblood's work naturally brought him into close contact and even intimacy with leading publicists, jurists, educators, legislators, editors, reformers, etc. These men came to respect his knowledge and to rely upon his judgment. He repeatedly visited the State Department at Washington, and, year by year, his voice gained weight in the councils of the nation. The remonstrances against the increase of the navy which he annually formulated and submitted to Congress probably had more to do with the defeat of "Big Navy" programs than any other single influence. I have been told that it was Dr. Trueblood who suggested to Mr. Roosevelt, in a personal interview with the President, the tender of friendly offices which led to the ending of the Russo-Japanese war by the Peace of Portsmouth.

"Thus, from the time our beloved one succeeded Secretary Howard in 1892, until he was first stricken on June 7, 1913. Yes, until he laid down his active secretaryship on May 7, 1915, he was no unimportant factor in the stirring events of a stirring quarter century. During these years he not only witnessed and opposed and lamented the ominous expansion of the United States Navy, the war with Spain and with the Filipinos, the Boxer outbreak in China, the Boer war, the Russo-Japanese war, Imperialism, Rooseveltism, Preparedness and the present European welter; but also it was his privilege to behold, with gratitude and joy, as he stated in his letter of resignation, "the organization of nearly all the peace associations, more than six hundred in number; the holding of twenty international peace congresses; the development of the Interparliamentary Peace Union, with its annual conferences, the holding of two Hague peace conferences, and the establishment of the Hague Court; the increasing number of peace and arbitration treaties; the establishment of the Noble Peace Prize Foundation; the organization of the Association for International Conciliation; the inauguration by Mr. Albert K. Smiley of the Arbitration Conferences at Mohonk; the creation by Mr. Edwin Ginn of the World Peace Foundation; by Mr. Carnegie of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and, more recently, of the Church Peace Union; the establishment of the American School Peace League and many similar organizations.

"One is almost staggered at seeing at close range the amount of hard work accomplished by this man. Now we behold a quiet, plodding, conscientious administrator of multitudinous office details, patiently pouring over the problems of finance by the hour. Then he is in distant Texas, thrilling a state peace congress and organizing a new state branch of the American Peace Society. Next we catch a glimpse of him on an express train, writing an annual report and his annual reports were almost state papers. Again he is appealing for a permanent endowment realizing that victory is still distant and that dark days are sure to come when it will not be easy to raise money for so unspectacular and unpopular a cause as world peace. His next appeal may be to the churches for the observance of a Peace Sunday or to the schools to commemorate the holding of the first Hague Conference by special peace exercises on May 18."

THE CALL.

Use me, my God, in Thy great harvest field,
Which stretches far and wide like a wide sea;
The gatherers are so few, I fear the precious yield
Will suffer loss. Oh, find a place for me.
A place where best the strength I have will tell;
It may be one the other toilers shun;
Be it a wide or narrow place, 'tis well,
So that the work it holds be only done.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

SOME INTERESTING REPORTS OF RALLY DAY

Indiana Yearly Meeting

North Grove—"North Grove is a small country Meeting of 30 resident members. We are near Jonesboro, Back Creek and Bethel Meetings, so do not have much to draw from. There were 42 present at our Rally Day service. Edith Shugart gave us a splendid talk. The few young people we have had charge of the singing and took part in the prayer service. Our collection was 45 cents."

Fountain City—"The Christian Endeavor here is a Union one and the Friends cannot do successful denominational work in that organization; so the "Live Wires" young people's Sabbath School class gave the program. We were organized two years ago with six or eight, and now have 40 members enrolled. We have an average attendance of 30, from 18 to 35 years of age. We took full charge of the hour for worship. One member, a mute, rendered the Lord's Prayer in the sign language and sat with the speakers on the platform. We feel that it was a beautiful service and a profitable meeting. Our collection was $6.56—am sending $6.46. Our class holds regular business meetings and are now thinking of taking up some form of Gospel Team work. Three of the young men have gone to Williamsburg to help in a revival meeting. Two of the young women will be in a league at a Meeting nearby, and the others work in the services here."

Kennard—Young Friends Day was observed here at the morning meeting. The young people had charge of the singing, and took part in the prayer service. Lillian E. Hayes, of the Young Friends Board was the speaker. She spoke of the open doors of service that are before our young people today, and suggested ways in which that challenge can be met. Plans were made to organize a Quaker Study Class, and a Gospel Team. The collection was $3.05.

Offerings were received from the following, with no report:

Lewisville, $2.51; Knightstown, $3.75; West Richmond, $13.25; Western Yearly Meeting, West Newton, $3.00.

Darlington Quarterly Meeting—"Our young peoples' meeting was a success.

W. O. Mendenhall, of Earlham, brought us such a fine message and his sermon at the service Sunday morning was wonderful. Many were there from other churches, who were deeply impressed." The young people of this Quarter will make the Every Member Canvass for funds for the Young Friends Activities.

Syllabus Stating, "THAT FOR WHICH YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES STAND"

The Function of Young People's Societies is:

First—To lead young people to a definite commitment of themselves to Christ and His work:

A.—By creating a Christian organization of young people for young people, thus developing a normal atmosphere for such commitment.

B.—By enlisting young people in private prayer and Bible Study.

C.—By revealing God's will to the young people through the channels of the devotional meetings and study groups.

D.—By personal work.

E.—By surrounding the young people with normal, wholesome Christian sociability.

Second—To cultivate the spiritual life of the young people.

A.—Through Christian fellowship.

B.—Through reading the Bible.

C.—Through testimony.

D.—Through prayer.

Third—To lead young people to the discovery of themselves and the cultivation of their powers:

A.—Spiritually, through the devotional exercises; prayer, song, Bible interpretation, testimony, etc.

B.—Mentally, through reading, study, and the exercises of the meeting.

C.—Practically, through leadership tasks.

D.—Socially, through sociability and the recreational activities.

Fourth—To lead young people to realize and accept their responsibility:

A.—To their society; through accepting offices, taking part in meetings and giving to the support of the society.

B.—The Church; through attendance upon church services, through supporting the Church and assisting in her work.

C.—The Home; through a right interpretation of the relationship within the home.

D.—The Community; through enlisting in movements for civic righteousness, social uplift and Kingdom building.

E.—The World; through study of, the support of and personal work for World Evangelism.

Fifth—To interpret the Church and its work to young people.

By study classes in Bible, Church History, Doctrine, Missions, Citizenship, Temperance, Personal Work, etc.

THE YOUNG PEOPLES' PROGRAM

During the coming year we plan to gain 3000 new converts, 3000 new members of Christian Endeavor, 2000 new church members, 3000 new members of the Peace Union, 200 new Christian Endeavor Societies, 100 new Comrades of the Quiet Hour, 1000 new Life Work Recruits, 1000 New Tenth Leigoners, 100 New Mission Study Circles, 50 New Peace Study Circles, 100 New Quaker Study Classes, 2000 New Christian Endeavor Experts, 100 New Subscribers to the Christian Endeavor World, and 500 new Subscribers to the American Friend. These items are found under the third point of our program. They can be realized by serious consecrated effort. Will any Yearly Meeting fail to bring up her share? Yearly Meeting Executive Committees should be in close touch with Quarterly Meeting Superintendents. Each should know the program and be organized to work it. The first report to the Five Years Board will be due by the first of the year. How good a showing can you make at that time?

YOUNG FRIENDS IN BALTIMORE

At a most enthusiastic meeting of Young Friends in Baltimore recently a Yearly Meeting Program was discussed and an organization affected to reach the goals set. The country will look with interest upon the strides taken by Baltimore Young Friends during the coming year.

It is not in the truths, stupendous as they are, it is not in the facts, transcendent as they are, it is not in the tender and terrible solemnity and pathos of the cross of Christ, even; it is in the power of the Holy Ghost given unto us.—Richard S. Storrs.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

WORK ADVANCING IN A LAND OF DIFFICULTIES

(Note.—We print the following article with apologies to the writer, as she distinctly stated that parts of it were solely for the "eye of the secretary." The secretary, however, wants to share with Friends at large this thrilling account of some of the things that do not always find their way into the reports.—R. A. H.)

When I started out last night for the long drive to Cedar Hurst, I little anticipated the experience that was awaiting me. The road leads up across the mountains, along a precipice, and over a river. It is 12 miles, and on dark nights, when we have had a good meeting up there on the hill, the time passes rapidly enough, as I meditate on the needs and the inspiring endeavors of the poor Jamaicans who come to our meetings; but when the night has been rainy, as it was last evening, the roads muddy and the people few, then it seems interminable.

My stable-boy and I started out, as usual, about 3 o'clock. I had been writing my report earlier in the afternoon and was just about to finish when a centipede, seven inches long, came walking across the floor towards me, from I know not where. I stopped to kill it with a stick and continued writing, but, when I found myself in the cart with the 12-mile drive ahead of me, my mind kept reverting from time to time to the ugly thing. Why this incident should have affected me I do not know, for we are quite used to such things, but with the rain and the approaching darkness the ride seemed to me even longer than usual.

At last we reached the little church, however, and had a blessed little meeting, getting near to Christ and, I feel sure, helping materially the six or eight natives who gathered in. But the heavy rain had kept many away from the meeting and had prevented our reaching as many as we might otherwise have done. It is a land of difficulties.

When we started home, it was quite dark. We had to feel our way along in many places and only succeeded in doing so by the fact that the horse was accustomed to the road. Just as we were coming down towards the river and were skirting the precipice a shaft suddenly snapped. My boy jumped from the cart and ran to the horse's head. He seized the reins and dragged the animal's head back towards the roadway. A step more and the poor thing would have dragged us down and over the great drop to the river below. But with a jerk the animal righted himself and stood snorting and trembling with fear. We tied up the shaft with a rope and with nerves at a tension came on down the road and safely home. The angel of the Lord encampeth and delivereth.

But such difficulties as these are some of the least with which we have to deal. At Orange Bay, where several hundred Hindu coolies work, we have a continual fight against immorality. The third Sunday in September we made a special day for these East Indians and called it Indian Guest Day. One hundred and six of them were present. Mr. Sourl, the government interpreter, a Christian from South India, was present and spoke strongly on moral issues, urging his fellow-countrymen not to take up with the ways of the natives. This served as an opening wedge for a campaign against vice, and we followed it by several telling meetings. In August, we had a Mother's Day, when, with the help of Mr. and Mrs. Farr and Miss Andrews, we presented scores of mothers with flowers; but it seemed as a straw against an avalanche of sin.

Other difficulties we have to face are sickness, malaria, want of teachers, lack of funds, and lame horses. The teacher of our day school has just been sick with malaria and jaundice. Estella Lewis, who has bravely stepped into her place, is troubled with her heart and should perhaps not undertake the work; but her beautiful Christian life among the people made her the choice of the community. We often have difficulty in getting anyone to lead the service, since Mr. Phillips, a rare Christian man with Christian ideals, has left. These wants often force us to call upon Wesleyan and Baptist laymen to take charge of our services.

But the work is pressing and, in spite of these things, is moving forward. We can only hope for your prayers at home and for our own success here. H. ALMA SWIFT.

OPINIONS VS. KNOWLEDGE

Opinions about Mexico are as plentiful and worthless as knowledge of that country is rare and difficult to acquire.

The readers of The American Friend are, however, soon to have the opportunity of learning from an eye-witness about present conditions in the perplexing country lying south of the Rio Grande. It is an opportunity many of us have wanted, to enable us to exchange our opinions for knowledge.

While working at C. Victoria, Solomon Tice this year was collecting data which he has just put into a series of seven articles. Here are some of the things he discusses:

The Geography of Northeastern, Mexico.

Friends' Mission Field.

Roads and Travel.

Farming and the Implements and Products of Agriculture.

Effects of the Revolution.

Missionary Opportunities.

Our Evangelistic Work and Its Future.

Present and Future Educational Work.

Industrial Education.

Our Industrial School.

The entire series bears the title "Some Things Friends Should Know About Mexico and Our Missions There."

Beginning on First Month, fourth, these articles will appear in seven successive issues of The American Friend.

Missionary Societies and Auxiliaries, Mission Study classes, and Young People's Societies are invited by the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions to assign these articles for reading and study as a part of their regular program this winter. "The Two Americas" being the Mission Study theme suggested for this year, this series on Mexico can very appropriately be read and studied at this time.

"ESSENTIAL FACTS"

Every Friends' family within the borders of the Five Years Meeting is to be supplied with an eight-page folder prepared by the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions. The title of the folder is "Essential Facts." And this title well describes its contents. For it seeks to answer the following questions:

How is the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions made up and for what purpose does it exist? Where are its headquarters? What foreign fields are under its care? How many missionaries are on each mission field? What were some of the main lines of work carried on last year? What does the Board propose to do this year? How much money will be needed and how will it be spent? What could be done with one postage stamp each week?

Wherever Friends are ignorant of the answer to any of these questions, "Essential Facts" will wish to go.

A supply of these folders is being place in the hands of every Yearly Meeting Missionary Committee. And every particular Friends meeting may secure from the Yearly Meeting Committee copies for distribution.

JANE E. WHITE

Jane E. White was the daughter of Richard M. and Sarah H. Janney. She was born in Anne Arundel County, Md., 8th Mo. 31st, 1831, and died 10th Mo. 19th, 1916. Her mother, her sister Margaret H. Elliott and herself, were all women of marked mental and spiritual power. Brought up in the atmosphere of old time Quakerism, they bore in their characters, distinctive acknowledgement of the presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Jane E. White very early in her girlhood took a decided stand for a life of separation from the fashions of the world, and chose simplicity of living and close obedience to the will of her Lord.

She was a niece of Johns Hopkins, the founder of the great institutions which bear his name, and presided over his household for some years prior to her marriage to Francis White, by whom she had three sons and one daughter. Domestic in her tastes, she made home a happy abode for her family.

Her mind was trained under Baltimore's best teacher of his time, N. H. Morrison. This training prepared her for the continuous reading and widespread knowledge which she pursued throughout her long life. She was also a very extensive traveller, both in Europe and America, so that she became a woman of extraordinary information and ability, somewhat veiled by her naturally shy and retiring disposition, and by her Christian humility. Her beautiful life of unselfish service for others was an inspiration to all who had the privilege of her friendship and acquaintance.

A woman of deep and tender sympathy for the sufferings of the needy, she loved to minister to them as opportunity offered, both to physical necessities, and to persons in bereavement and in spiritual difficulties. In numerous instances, she was remarkably guided in her ministrations. A right education of the young people was much on her heart, and many have been prepared for lives of usefulness by her assistance.

She had an earnest concern for the spread of the Gospel both at home and throughout the world, and she loved to contribute liberally for this purpose.

For many years she was an esteemed Elder in Baltimore Monthly Meeting. The faith and love which enabled her to do much for her Lord, enabled her also to bear the sad bereavements that came from time to time. Perhaps the sharpest was the sudden death of her only daughter, just entering womanhood, yet no murmur seemed to be felt or expressed.

While not physically strong enough to enter upon public Christian work, she maintained a good degree of health and activity to the last, speaking in Meeting just one week before her death, and only a few days before her death, arranged matters in which she was interested, pertaining to the Y. W. C. A., saying that she felt the end was near and she wanted to go.

She was suddenly attacked with an acute disease that rendered her unconscious. She fell peacefully asleep in Jesus, in the eighty-sixth year of her age, surrounded by her beloved children.

AT POPLAR RIDGE, N. Y.

The Friends Church at Poplar Ridge, N. Y., is being favored under the excellent ministry of Lavinus Painter from Indiana, who came to us last May. He preaches a clear, plain gospel, and we feel that not only the church, but the community is being benefited by his services. In addition to his own church services on Sabbath morning and evening, he is preaching now also in a church three miles from here, in the afternoon, one formerly used by the Presbyterians, but who have for some time closed their services.

Early in October we were much favored by a visit from Edgar T. Hole, which was greatly enjoyed. He gave us some very interesting accounts of his missionary work in Africa. Since then, we had also a very acceptable visit from Thomas Jones. He preached a searching sermon, wherein he urged upon us, both as a church and as individuals, the necessity of a "thorough, down-right, uplifting, vi-talized Christianity," which we certainly need, both here and elsewhere, that we may have, and let shine, our Light before the world as we are commanded to do. In the evening the young people of the church were invited to meet with Thomas Jones at the parsonage, where a very enjoyable evening was spent.

On November 16, 17 and 18 Scipio Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Perry City, Schuylers County, N. Y. In addition to all of our local ministers we had the company of Albert G. Shepard, whose services were timely and very acceptable. He came to Poplar Ridge the following Third Day, met with the Pastoral Committee at the parsonage in the evening, and was with us at our prayer meeting on Fourth Day evening. His company and services were much enjoyed and appreciated. If we with all our many privileges, both as a church and as individuals, fail to grow, the fault certainly lies at our own door.

CORRESPONDENCE

Stafford, Kansas,

Nov. 12, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

I noticed in The American Friend of the eleventh month 2nd an article about the extension pastor of Denver Quarterly Meeting. I was present at the meeting when the appointment was made, and while it looked (from the common view of things) useless to appoint a man to that position without any means to support him, and having no means of his own, yet I believed it to be of the Lord.

Since I have been over a part of the country, I realize to a small degree what a great task he has. I think this one of the most needy fields with the prospect of the best results of any of our meetings. Thomas Jones of the Young People's Movement, who was present, would agree with me, I think. The pastor has no way of his own to travel and nothing on which to support his family while he is gone.

Most of the people are poor having gone into that new country to take claims; they cannot contribute any for traveling expenses of the above. If there are any who want to help in the Lord's vineyard, either with money or clothing, they will find this a very good place.

Yarnall asked Friends to send a delegation to study conditions in Mexico.

THE IOWA PAGE

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT

At Bear Creek

The temperance pageant "Columbia's Awakening," was presented to a full house Sunday evening, November 5th. It was prepared and managed by the temperance superintendent of the Sunday School. It proved to be something out of the ordinary and did credit to the manager and all those taking part which were more than fifty, many of them in costume, and all home folks. After a song by a chorus of forty voices, prayer by the pastor, greeting by Alma Curts, the program proper began, Mrs. D. M. Applegate taking the part of Columbia, seated in a chair draped with Old Glory asleep when the Guardian Angel, Miss Esther Nealey, enters, and speaks of our country's peril on account of the Drink Demon.

She discovers that Columbia is not only asleep, but that her ears are stopped with gold; two hundred million dollars a year revenue. Columbia now awakens and demands to know what means these cries and sounds of weeping. The angel assures her it is the sound of pain for men who have loosed the Dragon Drink for gain and he is causing all of this.

But says Columbia, "Is this really true?" The Angel then calls witnesses from Columbia's own subjects in proof.

A drunkard's wife is first called, who tells her story well. This part was taken by Mrs. Lottie Nolte. Then follow others giving testimony on crime, insanity, poverty, mortality. Little Velma Brock very tenderly gave the story of the drunkard's child. Then the consumer comes and asks: "What is there in it for me?" His answer in part was: "My thirst costs me more than my clothes and my food, that's what there is in it for me. The booze took my money, and did me no good, and that's what there is in it for me. The brewer is rich, he has gold by the peck. The barman gets good pay, he is always on deck. But whatever I get I get in the neck; and that's all there is in it for me."

As the scene grows more interesting, three young ladies enter and tell Columbia plainly what they want, all speaking in unison: "We Want National Prohibition." "We want a Saloonless Nation." "We Want a Stainless Flag," and then make an appeal to the people by singing "Just a Little Ballot."

A representative of the Anti-Saloon League now appears and makes his plea.

The W. C. T. U. comes next. Economy also presents a vital testimony.

At this point Mrs. D. A. Brock gives a very touching recital as to "How the Question Came Home" to a mother and how her heart's cry was that the liquor traffic be destroyed before her boy grew up. Immediately in the distance was heard a voice singing, "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" The Guardian Angel at once tells Columbia that is the cry of mothers all over the land. Columbia, now thoroughly aroused, arises and in a dramatic manner begs of the angel to stop, as she could bear no more, and asks is there nothing but misery and want.

The Angel then presents the other side and introduces Kansas to tell what Prohibition has done for her. She brings in the governor of the state who confirms her report and he in turn produces corroborating testimony by calling a judge of the United States court. The testimony continued by introducing one by one the nineteen dry states, speaking a word of commendation for each. For Iowa it was said: "Iowa is free from the saloon today, and it's our desire to keep it that way."

Columbia now calls a herald to send forth to the sister states with her proclamation to fight and win for liberty, right and justice against the drink demon, but, seeing liberty and justice approaching, call him to stay.

Each tell what they stand for and asks Columbia to chose whether they shall go or stay.

While awaiting her reply a voice from without sings, "Holy Bible, Book Divine." Immediately enters a young lady dressed in white bearing an open Bible, and addresses Columbia. "A Guide Book for Her Way."

Columbia now sends forth the herald in haste with the additional proclamation that this Holy Book shall be our guide, for this demon drink shall be slain when I, Columbia, speak.

Two little girls, Thelma Brock and Murrel Morse, are then seen approaching from opposite sides, one bearing the banner of the Cross, the other the United States flag.

After Bernice Cook addresses the flags, Columbia calls for the standards and proclaims, as she holds them one in either hand, that the two shall wave in the same breeze.

Then with the Guardian Angel, Liberty, Justice, Economy, little standard bearers, closely grouped about her and surrounded by all the various characters who had appeared, all joined in singing "'Tis Coming, 'Tis Coming, the Doom of the Saloon. See God's Handwriting on the Wall, It Must Die Soon."

Immediately the strains of "Home, Sweet Home" came from the organ and the Guardian Angel left the platform and moved slowly down the aisle, presently re-appearing, leading the way for a group of small children, she presented them to Columbia, and, standing with one hand on Columbia's shoulder, the other outstretched over the little children, she made a very impressive and touching scene. Thus ended one of the best programs, according to the verdict of those present, that was ever given at Bear Creek.

AT RICHLAND, IOWA

The Friends church here was filled on the night of October 29 when Alvin Hoskins gave his illustrated lecture on Foreign Missionary Work. The stereopticon slides used were made by Mr. Hoskins and were a success.

The Rural Life Conference will be held at the Woolson Friends Church December 7 and 8.

The Woolson Gospel team conducted the services at Hopewell on the night of December 3. At Hopewell recently W. I. Kent presented the subject of the sufferings of the Armenians and a collection of $15.00 was taken. On the following Sunday a collection of $10.00 for the same purpose was taken at Rubio.

Quarterly Meeting was held in the new church building at Richland November 18 and 19. The attendance was good. Prof. W. I. Kelsey of Oskaloosa and Charles Haworth of Pleasant Plain were present and all who attended enjoyed the excellent sermons. On Saturday the visiting members were requested not to bring dinners and lunch was served in the basement by the ladies of Richland Monthly Meeting. The ladies were highly commended for their work.

Mrs. Eli Jones has returned to her home at Boulder, Colorado, after a two months' visit with her father, Franklin Hadley of Richland.

AT DES MOINES, IOWA

Richard R. Newby, pastor of the First Friends Church here, went to Muncie, Indiana, to begin a series of meetings on November 27. He will be absent from his pastorate over two Sundays.

The religious census of Des Moines was taken by the church men of the city on November 26 between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock. A number of men, with Charles George as captain, went from the Friends Church to help in this movement.

Young Friends Day was observed by Des Moines Friends on November 26. At the morning meeting our pastor, R. R. Newby, gave an interesting address on the subject of what constitutes a Friend. The evening session was conducted by the Young Friends. The choir sang hymns composed by Whittier, and Mae Comfort read several selections from his poems. Walter Homan spoke on "Friends Contribution to the World" and Altie Jewel on "Young Friends Movements."

NEBRASKA PAGE

AT ELK VALLEY, NEBRASKA

An eighteen days' revival meeting closed here on the evening of November 26. Lindley A. Wells of Wichita, Kansas, and Ralph Jackson of Cherokee, Oklahoma, rendered us very acceptable service as evangelists. They are spirit-filled men who walk carefully and prayerfully before God. Thirty-one services were held. Brother Jackson gave us some very inspiring messages in song and his labor added much to the interest at every meeting. Many persons have spoken of their appreciation of Lindley Wells. In every message he was clear in doctrine and based his teaching upon the scripture. Regeneration was extended to all who had not found Christ as their Saviour. Sanctification was taught to be just as essential as forgiveness of sin.

God honored every effort made in permitting us to see five persons reclaimed, nine finding Christ as their Saviour and nine stepping out into the experience of complete sanctification. The church is stronger today than it has been before. All who were especially helped are residents of this community and with few exceptions are land owners, giving us this hope of a lasting support. The doors of the church were opened on the last evening. The husband of one of our members united with the church and his four-year-old son was taken in as an associate member, also three men and their wives were admitted who will add much strength to the church. So we thank God and take courage.

AT CENTRAL CITY, NEBRASKA

Platte Valley Quarterly Meeting was held at Central City, Nebraska, November 17-19, 1916. Several were present from the other monthly meetings, and the various sessions proved to be times of spiritual refreshing. Walter Wilson, who has lately taken up the pastoral work at Alda, was present and gave helpful messages. George Hicks of Cleveland, Ohio, Prof. Lewis, field secretary of Nebraska Central College, and Prof. Coppock of the College were also present and gave inspirational addresses. On Sunday, dinner was served at the church and in the afternoon reports were given by S. J. McCracken and Mrs. H. A. Foreman of the recent meetings of the Executive Board and the Board of Foreign Missions of the Five Years Meeting. These reports gave to the meeting a clearer understanding of the work and problems of the church as a whole.

The Christian Endeavorers have almost finished raising funds for a new piano for the church and hope to have it installed by Christmas time.

Young Friends Day was observed at Central City the evening of November 26 with a rally by the young people at the C. E. hour, and in the service following, a sermon was delivered by the pastor addressed to the young people. Especially interesting and impressive were the talks explaining the origin and purpose of the Young Friends Movement and the origin and significance of the name Friends. A paper was read showing what the local society and church had accomplished the past year, and the goal set to be reached the coming year also proved very interesting. Striking mottoes, hung about the room, emphasized the importance of the church to the young people and of the young people to the church.

Seventeen new members were welcomed into the church at a recent Sunday morning service. The increased enrollment at Nebraska Central College this year is cause for encouragement. The college department is the largest it has been since Friends opened the school. In athletics the school is gaining a place of recognition in the state, the football team having won six of the seven games played this season. The number of young men in school who are preparing for definite Christian work is another cause for encouragement to the church.

The Central City meeting had been running behind in its finances, until last spring the Monthly Meeting adopted a budget and the every member canvass and weekly envelope system. This proved very satisfactory for current expenses, but an indebtedness of $350 remained unsettled. November 5 was appointed as a time for meeting these obligations and at the close of an impressive service, the entire amount was subscribed in about 15 minutes.

OPPORTUNITY FOR FRIENDS

Our friend, Dr. Joshua L. Barton, of New York, calls our attention to the presence in this country of Prof. Albert Van Hecke of Louvain University, who is giving lectures by the use of moving pictures, which among other things show the work of Friends in the concentration camps of Europe. Dr. Barton suggests that these lectures will be of interest to Friends in this country. Prof. Van Hecke will be glad to get into communication with Friends. His address at present is in care of Marshall-Fields Co., Chicago, Ill. Friends in New York City are hoping to secure a lecture from him when he returns east in February.

CHURCH AT WORK

Berkeley, California — Berkeley Friends celebrated the opening of their new basement Sunday School rooms on Friday evening November 17. Following a dinner, prepared by the ladies of the meeting, the various organizations of the church reported their plans for the future, participated in by the Men's League, Christian Endeavor, Sunday School and Ladies' Aid Society.

Fountain City, Indiana—Young Friends Day was observed here on November 26 by "The Live Wire" Bible School class, which gave an interesting program. All hearts were tendered at the beginning by the motion prayer offered by a mute young man. All members of the class were seated in their place in the choir corner or before the desk. After good music one young woman gave "The Origin of Young Friends Movement," another "The Activities of the Movement," and a young man whom we feel has a call to the ministry spoke very nicely from the call of Samuel, bringing out some deep lessons on the importance of local work. The meeting was then opened to all the class. Thirty-two members of the class were present and many responded with some short but feeling remarks. We wonder if Friends generally might not take this gentle hint, and more often make a place for the exercise of the gifts of the young. The size of the congregation showed it was acceptable, for this is not the first time they have had charge of the services. While the regular church offering was taken in the envelopes, the loose change, amounting to $6.50 went to the Young People's Movement. All felt that the young people have a large place in the church.

Ludlow Falls, Ohio—On October 22, the members of the local meeting planned to spend a day at the home of their pastor, Elwood Hinshaw, of Lynn, Indiana. At 8:30 o'clock eighteen automobiles started for Lynn, carrying 119 of the members, with well filled baskets and with three banners with this inscription, "Ludlow Falls Friends Bible School." For fear some might be delayed, arrangements were made to hold the Bible School at the pastor's home after all had arrived. Eight autos reached the home just in time to see the pastor leave the house for church. It seemed opportune that Enos Pemberton was one of the first to arrive, as it gave him the privilege with a few others of attending the Friends meeting at Lynn, while the others proceeded with the Bible School at the house as planned. It was an ideal day, the dinner was fine and all received a hearty welcome. We felt that it was a red letter day for all who were present.

Richmond, Indiana, South Eighth St.—The work of the young people at this place has recently been reorganized. A Junior C. E. Society has been started with a growing attendance, twenty-two being in attendance at the last meeting. The Senior C. E. Society has been merged into a Fellowship Group, which meets every alternate Sunday evening at the homes of the members. At the last meeting forty were in attendance. The Group is studying Emmott's "Story of Quakerism." On Friday evening, November 24th the annual supper of the meeting was given at the church. E. Gurney Hill was toastmaster and the address of the evening was given by Charles M. Woodman, pastor of the West Richmond Meeting. Remarks were made by Benjamin Johnson, Edward Bellis, Dr. N. S. Cox, Prof. Allen D. Hole, Mary Doan Hole, Naomi Harrison Jay and others. It was a most interesting gathering with a splendid musical program. Nearly 200 persons were present. Francis C. Anscombe is the pastor.

Young People's Day was observed by our meeting on November 26. An address was delivered at the close of the Bible School by Donald Snyder, the prize orator of last year of Earlham College. At the meeting for worship four young men took part in

Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil

Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil —land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. Military service is not compulsory in Canada but there is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. the services, this being their first public speaking in a meeting for worship. They were Josiah P. Marvel, Ralph Nicholson, Charles Daniels and Donald Snyder. The services were very impressive and inspiring.

Oak Grove Seminary—A group of some twelve or fourteen young Friends here are taking up a regular reading course in Friend's works, and are showing a deep interest in those things which must make for future leadership in the problems of the Society of Friends. Of this group some are preparing definitely for the ministry and others for other lines of Christian work. A deep religious spirit prevails throughout the student body, and a reverence for those things which are truly Quaker.

Westbury, Long Island—On the afternoon of November 18th our Peace Board of the Children's Crusade for Peace held a most interesting meeting and party in the meeting house. About one hundred persons were present, including members, friends and parents. Mr. May of New York told us of the House of Friendship. It was decided that we would take into our House of Friendship children the world over, from our playmates here to the children of the countries at war. A splendid magician entertained us with many sleight of hand tricks and a Punch and Judy Show. Peace literature was given out and the members of the Board had a short program, followed by the serving of ice cream and cake. Mrs. J. Sergeant Cram, a worker for Peace, who gave us this party, presented each child with a fine game.

Danville, Ind.—The Temperance Committee had charge of the Sunday School on November 25th and secured twenty-eight new signatures to the temperance pledge. One hundred of our membership signed last year. At the evening service on November 12th the committee had arranged for an illustrated temperance sermon with forty-seven slides showing "The Voyage of Life", "Life of a Country Boy in a City", "The Drunkard's Career", "Drunkard's Reform" and "The Way of Salvation." Several songs were also illustrated. On the afternoon of November 19th, twenty-three of the C. E. members held an interesting service at the County Home.

On the evening of November 26th the C. E. Society had charge of the service with the following program, the Sunday School orchestra assisting with the music, the offering being given for the Young Friends Movement.

 Song—"White Are the Fields."
 Benediction.

The Union Thanksgiving services will be in the Friends Church Thursday evening. The special music will be a cello solo, "The Palms", by Anna Martha Osborn and a vocal solo "Jerusalem" by Kenneth Easley.

We are endeavoring to use our young people who have talent in the services as often as possible, feeling sure they will be more interested in the work of the Church if they are recognized in a musical way. We have more than a dozen new members in the C. E. Society. A class in the Study of Quakerism meets twice a month.

Indianapolis, Indiana, First Church—The members of the First Church have recently made an "every member visit" throughout our congregation. The effort was a success from every viewpoint. The weather was ideal and the spirit of enthusiasm in which the work was done was gratifying. The visitors used thirty-four autos and there were 103 callers who made 450 visits.

tions. These distributed about 4000 pieces of Friends literature, including the Yearly Meeting Minutes. The visitors solicited for "The American Friend," "Missionary Advocate", and presented literature and talked of the claims of the different Boards of the Five Years Meeting. At the same time they represented all departments of our own local work. Expressions are general that the visitors enjoyed the most pleasant afternoon in their history, while many have voiced their appreciation of the visits made. We are classifying the card reports handed in and are following up all cases that need particular attention, such as prospective new members for the Bible School, the Missionary Societies, Ladies Aid, Young People's Society, the Church, etc. The work here this fall is proceeding most excellently. W. O. Trueblood is pastor.

RURAL CONFERENCE WORK.

Ancil E. Ratcliff, of Fairmount, Indiana, is spending a month in Iowa Yearly Meeting, and with Charles O. Whitely, Superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension work, is speaking daily at various places according to an itinerary previously arranged. Speakers from Iowa State College and Penn College, are also assisting in the work, the theme being the uplift of communities in the country through the rural church. The people at one place were so well pleased, that by a vote they decided to send a telegram to the next place of appointment urging the people not to miss the good opportunity coming to them.

Be so rich in God that you can afford to do without everything else.—

Subject—"The Holy City."

Lesson—Revelations. 21:1-7; 22-27.

Golden Text—Behold the tabernacle of God is with men and he shall dwell with them, and they shall be his people. Rev. 21:3.

Revelation closes with a picture of the New Heaven and New Earth; a fitting climax of all that has gone before. The period of struggle is over. Sorrow and suffering are now to be things of the past. No more shall there be in existence any of those things which have produced distress. This is the end of the long lane which seemed to have no turn.

Few people have been satisfied with the world as it is. All seem to feel that it is decidedly imperfect. Many reasons have been given for these conditions; few have been satisfactory. Like blind men we grope in the dark for the ultimate cause. No reason adduced has changed the existing facts or mitigated its evils. Christians are not alone in their assertion that this world is full of evil. All religions seem to be based on that idea. Almost all seek a Happy Hunting Ground, a Nirvana, a New Heaven and a New Earth. There have been and are a few bold spirits professing a belief in the possibility of so changing the existing order that this old earth shall in very truth be a real paradise. The expectation of the Disciples that Jesus would return in a few days has been delayed and long centuries have come and gone—we are still looking for the consummation of "this age," and it will come, we know not when nor how, but we trust in God. He will bring to pass according to His own purposes, in His own way, at the proper time.

How must we interpret these lines? Shall we take them as a faithful presentation of the New Jerusalem as it actually is? Many will say yes; but shall we be literal here and not in some of the other presentations of Revelation? Take for instance the description of the Son of man in 1:13 following. We can hardly think of the living Jesus appearing in such guise. Are the streets of the New City gold or transparent glass, or a transparency of a golden hue? Would it not be better to say that the writer fails to find in all the imagery sufficient expression for the actual facts? Whatever may be our conclusion we are assured that when God brings His plans to perfection, the actual will be beyond the power of any present writer—even an inspired writer, to picture to ordinary human beings.

This new order is to come down from God to men. It is a gift of God just as the Saviour was. The dwelling place of God is to be among men and God Himself is to dwell among men. There are some changes to be made marking it from its prototype. There is to be no temple, no sun, no moon, instead there is a new order of transcendent worth and beauty. To this new city the rulers of the earth shall come with their gifts and offerings. It is a place for the clean and pure—

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 17.

Topic—"Big Jobs Awaiting Us." Exodus 3:1-14.

"There is a story of Washington that, being called upon unexpectedly to entertain a fellow officer, in order to make room for him, Washington repaired to the quarters of his negro servant to sleep, and, in waking up in the night, and finding his servant sitting up because there were not sufficient straw and blankets for both, insisted upon the negro lying down beside him under his blanket. Here was a man who was big enough for any job however small. For it takes a bigger man to be big enough for a small job, and to see it and seize it, and make of it a big job, than it does to take over a big job that some other man has passed on to him ready-made."

One of the biggest small jobs in the country is the job of the country church. Paul did not feel above it when, on his way to Rome, he stopped at the little country town of Puteoli, spending seven days there. No doubt some one suggested to him that he was too big for such a small job, and should not waste his time on those poor country folks when he was called to preach to the Gentiles. But Paul wasn't too big for the big small job.

In a country community in Minnesota, a church had fallen away in numbers and become discouraged. A college man who was ready for a big job, organized the community, bought the old church, made a park of the grounds, redecorated the church and turned it into a centre of community life of the district. There the socials and business meetings of the Farmers Clubs are held; a Sunday School with weekly Sabbath services are kept up. Baseball teams and bands have been organized, and there are concerts at regular intervals during the winter. This is one of quite a list of similar instances. There was a young man with a purpose. The job was big enough for him.

CALIFORNIA PASTORS' ASSOCIATION

The Pastors' Association met in Long Beach, November 14. Present, John S. Kimber, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Pastoral and Evangelistic work; A. Rosenberger, President of Whittier College; H. E. McGrew, W. Mahlon Perry, Emma F. Coffin, Miss Effie Howard, Sanford and Blanche Pickering, Wallace E. Gill, Clifford Jones, Harley M. Moore, Mr. Vernon, Andrew F. Mitchell, Chairman of the Conference, Tyler Cobourn, Secretary.

The Conference opened at 10 a. m., led in devotional exercises by John S. Kimber. The first subject for discussion was: "The Hope of the Church," opened by Emma F. Coffin with a paper outlined as follows: (1st) The Second Coming of Christ as the Hope of the Church. (2nd) The Unity in Its Spirit, the "Hope." (3rd) Reaching the People with the Gospel and Socially. (4th) Practice of the Stewardship of Life. (5th) World Evangelization following the Program of Jesus—"Beginning at Jerusalem," etc.

Wallace E. Gill followed in earnest, helpful discussion on the subject. The next topic, "The Failures of the Church," was ably presented by Harley M. Moore, followed with a well-written paper by Clifford Jones.

A bountiful dinner was furnished by the host and hostess, Andrew F. Mitchell and wife.

The afternoon session opened with President Rosenberger in the chair. The topic, "Hindrances to Prevailing Prayer," was handled by Blanche F. Pickering, in a carefully prepared paper, scriptural from every standpoint and practical withal.

H. E. McGrew gave a paper on "Sermon Preparation," written in the form of a letter, presumably in answer to one received from a young man first entering the ministry and who desired help in added knowledge in sermon study. All the subjects were followed by open discussion.

This Conference was blessed of the Lord and one of the best ever held, and all felt the uplift and fellowship which the day brought.

NEWS NOTE

Word has been received here of the safe arrival at Foochow, China, of Prof. Roderick Scott and Mrs. Scott, the latter being a daughter of President and Mrs. Kelly. They will enter upon missionary work there, Prof. Scott to be a member of the faculty of the Foochow Union University.

Other Earlham missionaries who have gone to foreign fields this summer are: George E. McCreary, 1907, and wife, who have returned to British Africa after a furlough in America, and Lester C. Haworth, 1910, and wife, of the Youngstown, Ohio, Y. M. C. A., and Harold G. Peterson, 1916, of Chicago, have now arrived at Calcutta, India.

BORN

Hoskins—At Indianapolis, Indiana, October 26, 1916, to Walter D. and Lillian Greist Hoskins a son, Joseph Elbert.

DIED.

Cook—Dolly Jane Cook, widow of George Cook, Sr., was born in Gates county, New York, October 16, 1832, and died at her home in Haviland, Kansas, October 31, 1916, aged 84 years and 16 days. She was a true Christian and a loyal member of the Friends Church. She rests from her labors, and her works do follow her.

Cunnington—Annabel Angell Cunningham died at Eitel hospital, Minneapolis, October 5, 1916. She was a birthright Friend, the daughter of William Penn Angell, a well-known minister among Friends. In 1906 she was married to Arthur Cunningham, of Muncie, Ind. After a few years they removed to Minnesota and later to Minneapolis, where she has been an active member of the Friends Meeting. Her life was a manifestation of Christian faith and love. She is survived by her husband and two children and by a sister and three brothers.

Pierson—Herbert J. Pierson, aged 23 years, 7 months, only son of John and Emma Pierson, died November 17, 1916, in a Chicago hospital from injuries received while at work in the Standard Oil plant at Whiting, Ind. The body was brought to the parents' home in Bloomington, Ind., where impressive funeral services were held on November 21 from the meeting house, the pastor George H. Moore having charge.

Trueblood—Benjamin Franklin Trueblood, son of Joshua A. and Esther Parker Trueblood, was born at Salem, Indiana, November 25, 1847, and died at Newton Highlands, Massachusetts, October 26, 1916, in his sixty-ninth year. He had been in failing health for about four years, due to arteriosclerosis. In May, 1915, the condition of his health caused him to resign his position as Secretary of the American Peace Society, which he had held for 23 years. On October 5, 1916, he was stricken with a cerebral hemorrhage and lived only three weeks. Funeral services were held at the Congregational Church in Newton Highlands, Mass., October 28, conducted by Wilbur K. Thomas, and participated in by Rev. Charles E. Beals, of Worcester, Mass.; Rev. Samuel C. Bushnell, of Arlington, Mass.; Elihu Grant, of Northampton, Mass., and others. The remains were then taken to Wilmington, Ohio, where funeral services were held on Monday, October 30, conducted by Rev. Ellison Purdy, and shared in by David M. Edwards, S. Edgar Nicholson, Charles M. Woodman and others. Interment was in Sugar Grove Cemetery, Wilmington, Ohio. Dr. Trueblood was a lifelong Friend; he was recorded a minister at Blue River, Ind., in 1870.

THE BIBLE THAT IS MOST LIKELY TO PLEASE EVERYBODY

The Bible-Giving Christmas Plan

This movement has been inaugurated among Christian People to make at least one of their gifts a Bible, in honor of Him for Whom the great festival has been named.

"INTERNATIONAL" CLEARNUTYPE TEACHER'S BIBLE

SELF-PRONOUNCING

While the text of the Bible does not change, new methods of type-making have produced a type that is larger in size, more easily read, and more restful to the eyes, for use in a book which is also more convenient in size and lighter in weight. The type used in this new Bible was moulded especially for the purpose. It is the largest, clearest type to be found in any Bible of like size.

THE MOST MODERN IDEAS IN BIBLE-MAKING. In addition to the large clear type and convenient size, the full contents also commend this Bible. It contains the Authorized Version of the Old and New Testaments, with sixty thousand references in the center column; has the names of the books of the Bible printed on outer edge for quick reference; has all proper names accented and divided into syllables, making pronunciation easy; has the most accurate, most usable aids to Bible study; and has seventeen colored maps.

NEW TYPE OF TEACHERS' AIDS TO BIBLE STUDY

The logical arrangement of the helps is another improvement and a great convenience. All the aids (over 400 pages), including Complete Concordance, Subject Index, Dictionary, etc., etc., are under one Alphabetical Arrangement instead of separate headings as in the old type of Bible. Furthermore, these new helps are illustrated and are the only helps printed from black-face type, which makes them more readable and useful.

HANDSOMELY BOUND IN FLEXIBLE LEATHER

This Bible is printed on thin rag paper especially made for it. Jet black ink is used in the printing to make the type stand forth clearly. Handsome, Flexible Leather Binding, with overlapping covers (like cut), red-under-gold edges, head-band and purple ribbon marker, all combine to make it the finest, most practical of Bibles—the most pleasing of all gifts.

Exact Size, 5½ x 8 inches.
Each Bible packed in a Handsome Decorated Christmas Box.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. Our school is much smaller than usual, though of better quality than the average in some years.

IMPORTANT TO SUBSCRIBERS

Apparently all subscribers to The American Friend have not read the announcements in these columns during recent weeks, to the effect that on and after January 1, 1917, the subscription price will be advanced to $2.00. THIS ADVANCE APPLIES TO ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS WHICH EXPIRE ON JANUARY 1, 1917 AND AFTERWARDS. Sending in the money before January 1 does not avail to secure the paper at the present rate, IF THE EXPIRATION COMES ON JANUARY 1, OR LATER. We send notices of expiration each month, for the guidance of all subscribers. We cannot accept $1.50 in payment for a full year's subscription, whose expiration dates from January 1, and later. All subscriptions which expire before January 1, next, will be renewed at the old rate. Our readers will readily see that a certain time had to be fixed by which the new rate is to be governed. This advance in price is due wholly to the great advance in the cost of blank paper. Will all our subscribers please take note and pass the word on to others?

FOR THE FASHION OF THE WORLD PASSETH AWAY

By LUKE WOODARD

This life's a changing drama, all things tend Upward or downward to the final scene,
Beginnings are but preludes to the end,
And all are varying interludes between.

Time has his scythe which with enormous sweep
Doth level empires and the thrones of earth;
Each moment has its sickle and doth reap
Affections, bloom and desolate the hearth.

This sin-cursed earth affords no life elysian,
A life in Christ is Paradise restored
Within the soul, and fits it for transition
From earth to be forever with the Lord.

Since we have no continuing city here,
Let us seek one to come where severed ties
Shall be united, and where every tear
By God's own hand shall be wiped from our eyes.

There far removed from every tongue of strife,
And where the wicked never more molest,
Beneath the shadow of the Tree of Life,
To weary pilgrims, Oh, how sweet the rest!
Fountain City, Ind.

CORRESPONDENCE

Quite a concern rests upon my mind which I wish to place before the ministers who are readers of The American Friend. It is with no spirit of criticism that I mention a very common defect in our ministers and public speakers, viz: The falling of the voice at the end of a sentence.

In every congregation, there are persons who are more or less hard of hearing, who are anxious to hear the speaker, but as is very often the case, the person addressing the meeting will speak in a voice which can be heard by all, and then lower it to a degree, that those whose hearing is defective, lose that part and its connection, thus being deprived of a greater part of the address.

If our ministers will make it a conscientious concern to speak in a voice which all can hear, they will confer a great favor and blessing upon many persons: "A word to the wise is sufficient."

THERE IS MORE THAN THAT

Two or three young men, who once were visiting Washington, went into the National Museum. On one of the cabinets was a label with these words: "The body of a man weighing one hundred and fifty-four pounds." "Where is the man?" asked one of the young men. No one answered him. In the cabinet were two jars of water; other jars in which were phosphate of lime, carbonate of lime, potassium, sodium, and other chemicals. Another section held a row of clear glass jars filled with gases—hydrogen, oxygen and nitrogen. The materials in those cabinets are given in exact proportion as combined in an ordinary man.

After looking at the assortment for some time in silence, one of the young men said: "And that is what I am made of—that is all that goes to make me?" "That is all," said a bystander, smiling, and walked on. But the young man did not smile. "If that is all—that is needed," said one, "so much lime, so much gas, so much water, we should be exactly alike. There is something more which they can not put into cabinets." "Yes," said another under his breath, "that added by God, who puts into these senseless elements that which makes a living soul."—Youth's Companion.

The Task of The Church

A writer in The Venturer for November asks the very pertinent question: "What part will the church take in the rebuilding operations which must follow the war?" and answers it somewhat hopefully by citing the extraordinary capacity for self-renewal, which the church has always manifested. The hope of the world has always been the maintenance of a religious spark, which ever and anon has blazed forth in passionate protest against wrong and in equally passionate appeal for individual and corporate righteousness. There has never been an age so despairing that has not found its star of hope, tardy though it has often been, in the flaming forth of some prophet of God or some consecrated group of saints who for the moment not only stand for the church but typify the divine will in human affairs. The pity of it all is that the fires at the altar of the church have to be renewed so frequently. What the world needs most is a constantly enlarging stream of spiritual warmth in the lives of men that will blast sin by its rebuke and quicken and lift up erring humanity everywhere.

Speaking constructively about the mission of the church, the writer, referred to above, has the following: "The business of the Church in the world is the manufacture of salt, the creation of moral personality. It is called to offer to men a grace and a power which will arrest and destroy the principle of self-regard and degeneration and will achieve in them that personal transformation which the New Testament calls 'the new nature'. To this end it is intrusted with a Gospel, the heart of which is the revelation and gift of God in the Cross of Christ. Into this, we may not at the moment enter in detail. It is sufficient that we say that the Cross is God's method of solving the moral problem of the world, the rendering in the idiom of history of the reaction of the divine nature to the sin of man. It involves two processes, first, a judgment, a revelation of moral reality, and of the standing of the soul in the light of a 'moral order which cannot be repealed'; and secondly, a grant of forgiveness, freely and royally given to the penitent and suppliant soul. Its aim is the willing and lowly return of the rebellious soul to God, the reconcillation of God and man. It is the act and gift of the Holy Love of God in judgment and mercy, and it is this terrific thing that the Church is commissioned to offer to, yea, to urge upon the world, 'to bring us to God.'

The author then proceeds to show that "the Church provides not only the creative energy of the new nature but its social setting as well," and remarks that "the solitary unattached Christian invariably tends to become a religious crank; and a wholesome, robust, all-around Christian life is only possible by active participation in the life of the Christian society." The church is a brotherhood, a fellowship, but it must be more than that. Too often it has encrusted itself within the shell of a religious club, and has failed to find its mission in a point of contact with a world of sin, which the Gospel alone can regenerate and transform into a world of righteousness.

While the world is making inquiry about the place which the church will occupy in the reconstruction of European civilization, it is pertinent to consider the place of the church in the reconstruction of any situation which has been marred and distorted by the blight of sin. Indeed it is quite pertinent to go further and inquire whether or not the time is at hand when this "moral personality," begotten by the church, should not be potent enough to prevent the machinations of evil, and thus in fact build a civilization along many lines that is positively Christian, unmarred by the touch of organized iniquity. Aside from the problem of sin in individual personality, the church should be in a position to prevent the development of organized evil in the social order, as well as to destroy it, when once it has gained a foothold.

It was to the discredit of the church that for so long a time it ignored the question of human slavery, and that even to the last there were found its apologists among the ministers of God. It has not been greatly to the credit of the church that it turned aside so long from the evil of the saloon, and that it waited until the reform was well under way before it cast in its lot actively for prohibition.

The sorrow of today is that the church has been so ready to follow the drum, and to be not only apologetic for militarism but in many instances to become clamorous for the bearing of arms.

The church can never advance and Christianity must take a back track, when personality, singly or in groups, that has been regenerated from sin, yields to the demands of evil, whether it be under the guise of patriotism or of so-called practical endeavor. The church must stand for the best ideals of spiritual truth and the best standards of moral worth, in individuals and in society, and it must stand for them continually or it will fail, and the coming of the kingdom of God will be tremendously delayed. Christianity is a ministry of transformation, of redemption, of change in the human order, the incarnation of the spirit of Christ in men and women, until even human society shall feel its regenerating touch and shall be fashioned after the precepts of our Lord.

OUR MINISTERIAL STANDARDS

In considering the recent action of the Executive Committee relative to ministerial standards, it is quite easy to fall into the error of concluding that the emphasis of the ministry has been misplaced. Certainly there is no one in the church who feels that any less importance should be attached to the call of God to preach the gospel than has always been recognized in the acknowledgement of the ministerial gift. And certainly no one feels in the slightest degree that educational equipment and practical pastoral training can ever be substitutes for that degree of spiritual attainment and equipment which is the very ground-work of effective ministry.

To the extent that a college education would tend toward a professional ministry, will it prove the unfitness for the task of anyone who is so influenced. On the other hand, it will hardly be denied that the preaching of the gospel deserves the best preparation and equipment which the church can provide. The church has suffered and the gospel propaganda has been handicapped all too long, because we have been raising our standards of efficiency in every other department of life except in the ministry.

Is it not more than probable that if Quarterly Meetings can be impressed with their responsibility in providing the necessary education for those who appear to be called to the ministry, they will even more carefully inquire into the evidences of the call and the character of spiritual equipment than has often been the case under the existing plans? If necessary, that injunction can be emphasized more strongly as a part of our system of recording ministers, for all persons will readily admit that this is fundamental to an effective gospel ministry.

The problem before us is to get the church to see, and to get everyone called to the ministry to see the value of the best social and mental equipment as an important supplement to the all important spiritual equipment that is the basis of the ministerial gift. In The American Friend last week, our friend cites the case of Paul, who may have been educated, and Peter who was not. But Paul had a world vision of the mission of the gospel, and Peter saw little beyond the scope of the Jerusalem Church, even after his wonderful vision, and it must be said that after all, one's outlook on life makes all the difference in the world in the effectiveness of his ministry.

Our concern now, however, is that we shall not make the mistake of concluding that the demand for a more efficient ministry is a demand for the substitution of that which is mechanical for that which is spiritual, for, in our judgment, that is not a vital element in the problem now confronting the church.

The Part of Friends in the Indiana Centennial Observance

By WALTER C. WOODWARD
(Director Indiana Centennial)

In round numbers, of every one hundred people in Indiana, but one is a Friend. Yet one-third of the Friends in America are residents of Indiana. In a word, this gives an idea of our numerical unimportance or insignificance in state and nation. In either state or nation, however, it is universally conceded that the Quaker influence has been far out of proportion to its numerical strength. The observance of anniversaries affords a good opportunity for stock taking. The year 1916 marks the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Indiana into the sisterhood of states, and has been made the occasion of a statewide observance, at once historical, educational and patriotic.

The part which Friends have taken in this observance has been commensurate with the contribution which they have made made to the century of the state's history just closed. The nature and significance of this contribution may be briefly indicated. In the first place, coming as did so many of the Friends from the Carolinas, their appearance in Indiana was a protest against an unholy institution and an assertion of a principle, the asserting of which was not unaccompanied by much sacrifice. The Friends were dominated by lofty convictions, by high purpose, that gave moral tone to the nascent state. Their ideals were woven into the very warp and woof of the new Commonwealth. They contributed largely, for instance, to the principle of human freedom, first by manumitting their own slaves in the South and then by assisting in preserving in their new home the principle declared in the Ordinance of 1787. They did more. Throughout the ante-bellum period they were the leaders in "rail roading" escaping slaves to Canada and in creating a public sentiment which would later uphold the Chief Executive in declaring their emancipation. And when the test came, although as a body they could not conscientiously take up arms, they upheld in a score of ways the cause of freedom and union, giving at critical times the support so sorely needed by Indiana's man of the hour, Governor Morton.

The Quakers have manifested a facility in civil affairs that enabled them to co-operate heartily and effectively in the early days of political organization and construction. The genius of Quakerism is in peculiar harmony with democratic institutions, giving place for individual initiative. It is not surprising therefore to find Friends taking active and prominent part in the organization of new units of government and in assuming in a positive way, civic duties and responsibilities.

It needs no detailed statement to suggest the leadership which Friends have maintained in the fields of peace, and temperance reform. In the first peace society organized in the State, as early as 1819, but three years after the admission of Indiana, of the fifty-seven members, we are told that thirty-nine of them were Friends. From that day to their energetic protest in the Centennial year against militarizing our free institutions, Friends have ever pointed the way toward the Christian ideal of peace. Similarly, have they been in the forefront of the struggle against the liquor menace, the high mark of anti-liquor legislation in Indiana bearing the name of a prominent Friend.

In the realm of Philanthropy, the Quaker contribution to Indiana's history has been marked. True to the traditions of their fathers, in recognition of the claims of brotherhood that knows no color, the Quakers have been most active, both within and beyond the confines of the State, in the cause of the Indian and the Negro. In the founding of institutions for the care and betterment of our own unfortunate, they have likewise been leaders. They were largely responsible for the establishing of the state reform school for boys, the woman's prison, the majority of whose superintendents have been Friends, and the promotion and organization of the State Board of Charities, under the leadership of Timothy Nicholson. To the credit of the Friends are such institutions as the Bertha Ballard home for young women, in the capital city, expressive of Quaker ideals of practical service.

But nowhere can the Quaker contribution be more definitely shown than in the field of education. Briefly, the Friends furnished the pattern for our modern public school system. As a protest against schools supported by fines and military exemptions, they set up the subscription or monthly meeting schools, primary schools in a word. In places of demand for more extended education, courses of study were extended and the Friends Academy or high school appeared. The first public high school in Indiana was established in 1850, before which the Friends had a dozen such schools in the State, some of which were attracting students from far and near. At one time, eleven states of the Union were represented in the students in attendance at one of these academies, that of Bloomington. These academies or high schools were largely attended irrespective of church affiliations, so well recognized were their standards and efficiency. In a large measure the teachers of the state were recruited from them, from which standpoint their influence upon the Commonwealth was incalculable. One of the men largely responsible for the organization of our school system was the Quaker educator, Barnabas C. Hobbs. It was he more than any other who founded the Indiana State Normal School. As State Superintendent of public instruction he contributed largely to those educational reforms which have long been taken for granted. In the field of collegiate education, it was Earlham College that, under the guidance of Joseph Moore, stood in the front rank of the higher institutions of learning, in the incorporation of the natural sciences in the curriculum. The museum of natural history which he established at Earlham is recognized as the finest in the State. It was a positive contribution also which Earlham made to the principle of co-education, being the first institution in the State to receive women on an equality with men.

Enough has been said to show in general the nature and import of the Quaker contribution to Indiana history and to justify the active part which Friends have taken in the observance of our centenary.

To begin with, the state-wide observance has been conducted under the auspices and direction of a State Commission headed by the Governor. The secretary of this Commission and the director of its general activities are both Friends.

As an impressive and sympathetic means of portraying the century's history, the new art of pageantry has been fully drawn upon. The stirring chapters of both state and local history have thus been reproduced in the open on nearly a half hundred hillsides and meadows in Indiana. One of the first among these was the Earlham pageant, "In Quest of Freedom," presented on the campus by the Senior Class, assisted by the student body, during the Commencement season. The pageant was written by an Earlham alumnus and portrayed the settlement and activities of the Quakers in the Whitewater Valley and the founding and development of Earlham College. The motif is given in the title and runs throughout the pageant, giving it a unity which made it distinctive.

In the final episode, in which Quaker history is linked with the State's Centennial, Earlham in addressing Freedom, breathes the spirit of the pageant: "Some pay their tribute in this Centennial Year in bronze and brick and stone. They do well. If such thou seekest, look about the scene. We rather come to bring remembrance wherein, in quest of thee, we have befriended men. If mine it is and has been to point my sons and daughters to paths that lead to service; to paths that lead toward peace; toward brotherhood of man, or white or black or red or brown; to all that leads to satisfy the human need however felt—to save from self and save for thee, then this our tribute be."

In their various communities over the State in which formal observance of the anniversary has been made, the Friends have taken an active and in some places the leading part. Important addresses at three county celebrations were made by Friends. The climax of the year's Centennial activities came in the fortnight's celebration at the State capital, in the first half of October. The one big feature of the celebration was the state pageant, given throughout the first week, presenting in dramatic form the history of Indiana. In recognition of the work of Friends in behalf of the slave, the Underground Railroad episode was given to the First Friend's Church of the city for presentation. Led by the pastor, members entered heartily into the spirit of the scene. They also contributed largely to the success of another episode. In the very early days of the Northwest Territory, when but very few settlers had found their way thereto, a rare soul, humanity loving and eccentric, wandered about over the unbroken wilds, scattering apple seeds in the open places, that the home-makers who should come in the later years might partake at once of the fruit of the land. "Johnny Applesseed," he was called and thus he is known to history. From this stray leaf of history, the pageant writer created a beautiful, semi-symbolic episode which he called most appropriately, "St. Francis of the Orchards," and which was put on largely by the Friends, who thus appeared before thousands of Indiana citizens in two of the most effective scenes of the pageant.

But there were many other interesting features of the State celebration, the different days of which were devoted to various developments. Of two of these days, Friends were chairmen and had charge of the arrangements—County, or the all-state day, and Historic Highway day, on which President Wilson was the honor guest and speaker. Furthermore, the man largely responsible for the success of the great historical parade of the religious organizations, the secretary of the Indianapolis Federation of Churches, is a Friend, former pastor of the First Friends Church. In connection with the celebration, the Ohio Valley Historical Association held its annual meeting in Indianapolis, and was presided over by a Friend, its president, and the Centennial address was delivered by Prof. F. L. Paxson of the University of Wisconsin, a Friend.

In the procession of the counties on County Day, a company of students from Earlham represented Wayne county, in the coming of the Quakers to Eastern Indiana. In the Centennial Cavalcade on that day, of ninety-two young women, representing on horseback the counties of the State, probably five at least were Friends. In the religious parade, Quaker ideals and contributions were effectively shown. First came a young woman in white, riding a beautiful white horse, and bearing a torch suggesting light. Behind rode Quaker-garbed pioneers on horses, representing the Quaker migration from the Carolinas to Indiana. Our contribution to the cause of Freedom was shown in a float representing the striking of the shackles from the bondsman; to philanthropy, by a decorated auto bearing Timothy Nicholson, the dean and leader for a half century in the field of charities and corrections in Indiana; to education in a float representing Earlham College. On Educational day, the part of Friends in the educational history of the state, taken through their academies and college, was similarly shown.

At their sessions of last year, Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings appointed committees to make preparation for appropriate participation in the Centennial observance. Acting together, they issued a circular recommending that Sunday, October 8, be made a day of observance in Friends meetings throughout the State. A tentative program was outlined, covering Quaker history in Indiana, state and neighborhood, arranged with the idea of a morning and an afternoon service, with dinner together and a social hour at noon.

The committee expressed the desire that all the material prepared relative to the history of local meetings be preserved, with a view to its being collected by the respective Yearly Meetings as an integral part of the history of Quakerism in Indiana. It is believed that Friends co-operated very generally and heartily, thus making a very fitting conclusion to their participation in the Centennial activities of the year.

Richmond, Indiana.

The old shepherd who offered prayer in a Welsh revival meeting put it exactly right when he lamented his backsliding in these words: "Lord, I got among the thorns and briars, and was scratched and torn and bleeding; but, Lord, it is only fair to say that it was not Thy ground; I had wandered out of Thy pasture." And there are many others whose scars were obtained in the devil's thickets outside the field where duty called them.—Selected.

IN MEETING WITH JOHN WOOLMAN

By CLARENCE IRVING PINKHAM

From accounts at hand, it appears that in 1758, in the Yearly Meeting at Philadelphia, one of the subjects discussed was concerning the policy which should be pursued by the meeting with regard to those members who purchased slaves.

John Woolman being present, and feeling a concern to cast in his mite, said in substance as follows:

"In the difficulties attending us in this life, nothing is more precious than the Mind of Truth inwardly manifested; and it is my earnest desire that in this weighty matter, we may be so truly humbled, as to be favored with a clear understanding of the mind of truth, and follow it; this would be of more advantage to the Society than any medium not in the clearness of Divine wisdom. The case is difficult to some who have slaves, but if such set aside all self-interest, and come to be weaned from the desire of getting estates, or even from holding them together, when Truth requires the contrary, I believe way will so open that they will know how to steer through those difficulties."

The above quotation is sufficient to introduce the underlying principle, the love of the truth, (as professed by Friends) as the true psychological basis of Friends' manner of worship.

To show that John Woolman was a devoted follower of Jesus Christ, we have only to quote from John 18:37, "To this end was I born and for this purpose came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth. Everyone that is of the truth, heareth my voice."

That the Apostle John, himself, recognized truth as the dominant principle in the life of Jesus Christ and applied it to his own life, we can clearly see by reading the Third Epistle of John. There we see that his great love of the truth was the underlying basis and the uppermost thought in the writing of said epistle.

In John Woolman's Journal, we find a copy of a general epistle, he being one of the signers of the original. In this epistle the emphasis is on truth. We read as follows:

"We are desirous that all who profess the truth may be inwardly acquainted with it, and thereby be qualified to conduct in all parts of our life as becomes our peaceable profession." Please note that the profession of the truth is referred to as a peaceable profession. Was there ever greater need than now of this same profession?

In this same epistle referred to we also find the following:

"For the Truth is but one and many are made partakers of its spirit, so the world is but one and many are made partakers of the spirit of it, and so many as do partake of it, so many will be straightened and perplexed with it, but they who are single to the Truth, waiting daily to feel the life and virtue of it in their hearts, these shall rejoice in the midst of adversity."

Having introduced this great principle of Truth (as professed by Friends) through incidents in the life of John Woolman, who was no doubt one of the best representative Friends of his or any other time, it now seems apropos to read into this paper some of the writings of George Fox concerning truth as follows:

"All Friends and brethren everywhere that are imprisoned for the Truth, give yourselves up in it, and it will make you free, and the power of the Lord will carry you over all the persecutors."

"Live the Life of Truth and let the Truth speak in all things and righteousness."

"So in all husbandry, speak truth, act truth, doing justly and uprightly in all your actions, in all your words, in all your dealings, buyings, sellings, changings and commerce with people, let Truth be the head, and practice it. This brings righteousness forth, and deceit to the judgment bar. In this ye answer the light of Christ in everyone."

Having in view all the above thoughts and expressions concerning truth (as professed by Friends) and recognizing the love of the truth as the real basis for spiritual worship, can we modern Friends in the light of modern knowledge bring forth a form of worship that will prepare our minds to realize truth according to our utmost capacity?

In teaching and learning, it is now generally recognized that much repetition is necessary. Brain substance must be taken into account, thoughts must find their regular channels and sequence before a highway of the mind can be prepared. Step by step procedure seems necessary, and always with some definite end in view.

Jesus Christ was a composite being. He declared three principal elements of his being, namely: The Way, the Truth and the Life. The Greek word "dromos," translated "way," means a highway really. His passion for the Truth made his mind a perfect highway for the mind of truth. This was also true of him with regard to the life principle. We might draw a parallel, in the three principal elements of a great river, namely: The channel, the water in the channel and the law of gravitation which makes the water to flow. It is only by a combination of these three elements that we have the highest type of being for these same elements.

It is quite possible that a form of worship might be both formal and spiritual. The necessary unity of form and spirit in worship has not been adequately recognized. A form of worship whose sole purpose is to make a highway through the mind for the manifestation of truth and to promote the love of truth could not enslave or bind the mind, because truth makes free.

The form could and should include both verbal preparation and silent surrender to the Spirit of Truth. We think the early Friends believed that truth was not realized through violence and struggle, but through humility, self-denial and waiting. The meeting was made a veritable highway for Truth, hence it's silent waiting and singleness of eye for the manifestation of truth inwardly.

To realize vision, we exercise the power of the eye to fix and focus light. So to realize the mind of truth we must fix our attention upon it and make it the central principle of our lives.

Experience in the knowledge of natural laws, goes to show that when we know the rules and play with these laws according to the rules of the game, they yield great power into our hands. By use of natural laws even thoughts as expressed in words, are now transmitted by mechanical means through great intervals of space almost instantly.

The knowledge of the laws of light, has been the means of revealing to us great knowledge of the material universe, and has given to us the wonders of photography, and, most likely that great revealer, The Spirit of Truth, is subject to law, which, if we learn it aright, will yield great power into the hands of man. This Spirit of Truth is the same spirit whose fruits are Love, Joy, Peace, etc. This is our preparedness and the evidence of our efficiency, to stand with our loins girt about with truth.

We suggest that our Five Years Meeting weightily consider whether or not any method can be introduced generally into Friends meetings for worship which will quicken our love for, and promote the general knowledge of truth, making us a united people, in the Unity of Spirit.

STORY OF THE CIVIL WAR

Fifty-one years ago, Ninth Month 5th, Eliza P. Gurney, a representative Quaker of Burlington, N. J., received a letter from Abraham Lincoln that today ranks among the finest productions of his pen.

Eliza P. Gurney was a minister of the Society of Friends, of national reputation.

On Eighth Month 8, 1863, she wrote the president a long letter on war, and in approval of the emancipation proclamation.

President Lincoln allowed thirteen months to elapse before he replied to her. Then he penned a letter that showed not only his depth of feeling as to the irrepressible character of the war, but also displayed the remarkable capacity of the man who, while conducting the greatest war of modern times, could write a letter on the subject of that war which would prove acceptable to a woman among the leaders of a sect which advocated peace and non-resistance on religious grounds.

Lincoln's letter was as follows:

"Executive Mansion, Washington, Sept. 4, 1864.

"My Esteemed Friend:—I have not forgotten—probably never shall forget—the very impressive occasion when yourself and friends visited me on a Sabbath forenoon two years ago. Nor has your kind letter, written nearly a year later, ever been forgotten. In all, it has been your purpose to strengthen my reliance on God. I am much indebted to the good Christian people of the country for their constant prayers and consolations, and to no one of them more than to yourself.

"The purposes of the Almighty are perfect, and must prevail, though we erring mortals may fail to accurately perceive them in advance. We hoped for a happy termination of this terrible war long before this; but God knows best, and has ruled otherwise. We shall yet acknowledge His wisdom, and our own error therein. Meanwhile we must work earnestly in the best lights He gives us, trusting that so working still conduces to the great ends He ordains. Surely He intends some great good to follow this mighty convulsion, which no mortal could make, and no mortal could stay.

"Your people, the Friends, have had and are having a very great trial. On principle and faith opposed to both war and oppression, they can only practically oppose oppression by war. In this hard dilemma some have chosen one horn, and some the other. For those appealing to me on conscientious grounds, I have done, and shall do, the best I could and can, in my own conscience, under my oath to the law. That you believe this I doubt not; and believing it, I shall still receive for our country and myself your earnest prayers to our Father in Heaven.

"Your sincere friend,

"A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln and the Quakers.

President Lincoln had an hereditary fondness for Quakers. He was himself of Quaker ancestry. His grandfather Abraham, who hailed from Berks County, Penna., was a Quaker. The President was always ready to receive a Quaker: "For I know," he once said, "that they are not seeking an office."

At the outbreak of war the Quakers stood between their desire to see slavery abolished and their abhorrence of warlike means to that end.

The President was showered with Quaker congratulations on the Emancipation Proclamation, as well as with deprecations of the method of securing their freedom by strife and bloodshed.

On First Month 5, 1862, Lincoln wrote the Iowa Quakers upon the necessity of war. On Third Month 19, 1862, he said to the Rhode Island Friends that it would be difficult for the world to understand how fully he appreciated the principles of peace which were inculcated in a letter they had sent him.

The letter of Eliza P. Gurney was an elaboration of that of the Rhode Island Quakers, and Lincoln's fullest expression of ideas in reply to the various communications on the war he received from the Friends.

BALITMORE YEARLY MEETING

Possibly the most striking feature of Baltimore Yearly Meeting this year was the frank way in which the present situation was faced, and what seemed to be the necessary steps authorized. This was most in evidence in connection with the report of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee, when it was pointed out that conditions had so changed that it was no longer possible to carry on the work of the committee efficiently by volunteer workers. When there were a number of such persons whose time was at their own disposal, successful work had been done, but now there were so few such workers in the field there was much less accomplished.

The problem the meeting faced was the familiar one of making democracy efficient, how to secure efficient leadership and develop the powers of the individuals who are led, how to have a leader and not a master. The meeting was just as determined as ever that the freedom of the Meeting for worship must be preserved, and while recognizing the tendency of the average congregation to allow the pastor to carry the heavy end of the load, especially the spiritual burden, it had the courage to set itself to secure spiritual leadership in local meetings which should develop and not stifle the gifts of the membership. Fortunately the Yearly Meeting has had a little experience in this line, which had been successful to a considerable degree, and it believed that the position so long occupied by Baltimore Friends would assist in preserving a proper balance. The Minute finally adopted is as follows:

"We authorize the Committee to endeavor to secure for those meetings which desire such help, workers who shall assist in developing the spiritual resources of the Meetings in co-operation with its existing officers and in harmony with our recognized principles."

This being the end of the three year period for which the Standing Committees are appointed, the precedent of the Foreign Mission Board was followed in their selection this year. Relatively small committees were chosen with an eye to efficiency and each Monthly Meeting was directed to name an Advisory Member of each. It is hoped that the sense of responsibility may be made stronger by reducing the number of those among whom it is to be divided.

The reports of the Committees did not bring out much that was striking, although they mostly indicated progress. Naturally the Peace Propaganda caused the most thought, but the triumphs of the Prohibition cause brought forth many expressions of thanksgiving, and incidentally the name of the committee was changed from "Total Abstinence and Suppression of the Liquor Traffic" to "Prohibition." This shortened the title considerably, but one Friend facetiously suggested that we go farther and call it the "Dry" committee.

S. Edgar Nicholson of The American Friend, President David M. Edwards of Penn College, Albert G. Shepard, Field Secretary of New York Yearly Meeting; Charles E. Peaslee of N. E., Fred E. Smith of Greensboro, N. C., Sarah Ecroyd of Ohio and Martha J. Woody, a worker for years past in Cuba, were helpfully present, and the spiritual life of the gathering was strong.

A pleasant feature of the week was a simple "banquet" on the twenty-first, when the visiting members and many of the local Meeting took supper together and had a little speaking afterward. President Edwards told of Penn College, its history and ideals; Albert Shepard gave his understanding of the position a Friends' Meeting should occupy in a rural community; and then the chairmen of the Standing Committees each in turn told what the plans were for the year.

The Delegates to the Five Year's Meeting who were chosen are Allen C. Thomas, Samuel R. Neave, Elbert Russell, John R. Cary, Margaret T. Carey and Sara H. Hoge. JOHN R. CARY.

CORRESPONDENCE

I was struck with a paragraph in the editorial of the American Friend of 10-19: "No congregation can afford to be without a definite, specific issue, around which the membership may be always rallying as the expression of their religious zeal and devotion," adding very discriminately; "For lack of it members are falling away with the consciousness that there is nothing particular to do, while multitudes fail ever to find a place in the ranks of busy discipleship."

Most of us, old Friends in particular, are aware that we have laid aside most of our peculiar denominational issues, but there is one of surpassing moment that we as a body have shown no disposition to lay aside. This is the question of war or peace, but we have failed to emphasize it as we should, to meet the unparalleled opportunity afforded by the unprecedented horrors of this great world's war.

These huge military exploits have hitherto been mostly confined to distant lands across the ocean, but by virtue of the marvelous progress of invention these lands are not so distant as they once were, as the recent appearance of submarines, and blockading squadrons on our coasts afford startling examples. Furthermore the enforced contemplation of all these things has aroused a spirit of militarism in our own land, that calls for all the opposition that we as Friends are able to bring against it. For nearly three centuries we have been the consistent followers of the Prince of Peace, but are now in greater danger of being tried for our devotion to principle than perhaps ever before, as our less conspicuous attitude on other points will tend to the belief that our opposition on peace will not amount to much and can easily be brushed aside, thus imposing upon us unusual effort to maintain our integrity.

On the other hand, there is an enlightened sentiment largely pervading the community that war is an unmitigated evil, hell! as some competent judges have declared it, and many are ready to concede that the Friends have always been right in their opposition to it.

Having divested ourselves largely of these non-essentials, considering them as "behind the times", or "in advance of the age," as some prefer, let us make this peace question one of our specific issues, that those who think as we do on this important subject, may become Friends by name, as we are friends of Christ, as those who keep His commandments.

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

ENTERTAINING AN AFRICAN CHIEF ON CHRISTMAS DAY AT KETOSH, AFRICA.

Murunga, the big chief of our district, was invited to the station for Xmas. He arrived about 10 a. m. attended by a retinue of 10 or 12 chiefs and headmen, all on bicycles. It is 10 miles from his village. Murunga himself wore an official robe trimmed with gold and silver lace, and others were dressed in suitable fashion. Mwanza, the big chief of the district south of us, brother of Murunga, who was visiting him, accompanied him. He wore simple European clothing. Later a squad of 10 native police, several of whom attend our school at Murungas, arrived. These seemed to enjoy the day very much. Still later, and not in time for the service, several of the chief's wives came.

After Murunga and his company had partaken of some simple refreshments, we all went to the chapel for the services. There were about 90 school boys present, and 15 or 16 school girls beside some visitors. Most of the boys were dressed in long white gowns, of the Swahili type, called Konsu. They made a pleasing appearance. Murunga seemed quite pleased that the girls also were beginning to attend school, and that they were dressed.

After I had spoken of the Birth of Jesus and what His coming means to us here today, and while the teacher was speaking, Murunga was asked if he would like to speak. He did so, and urged all the younger generation, both boys and girls, to attend school. He expressed a desire that all his people should get and wear clothes. Both he and Mwanza, who also spoke, warmly commended the work of the Mission, and told the people to hear and follow the Message of God. Both of these Chiefs referred to Jesus as the Son of God, and the Saviour. This is the more remarkable when it is remembered that, at least until very recently, they have been Mohammedans, and they still are strongly influenced by the teachings of the false prophet of Islam. Perhaps still if they were asked they would say they are Mohammedans.

One of the older school boys spoke briefly before the service closed. We felt that it was a very profitable time, and that a distinct advance was made in the work of our Lord in this district. When it is remembered that two years ago Murunga strongly opposed this work, his present favorable attitude is the more appreciated.

After the service, while Mrs. Ford entertained the "court ladies" there were sports for the boys. A football, which takes the place of the former native dance, is a favorite among them. Beside this there were sack and three legged races and a tug of war, in which the chiefs took keen interest.

About 2 p. m. Murunga expressed a desire to return home. Food was being prepared for his company, but as they went before it was ready a goat was sent as a present for them, according to the custom of the land.

THE BONDS SAIL ON DECEMBER FIFTEENTH

On the S. S. "City of Glasgow" sailing from New York on the fifteenth of this month will be a missionary family going out for the first time to our Africa Mission. Dr. Archibald A. Bond, Mira Cope Bond, and their little daughter, Dorothy, will begin their long journey, occupying probably seven or eight weeks in all. Both Dr. Bond and his wife are graduates of Earlham College, Westfield, Indiana, has recently been their home. They go to Africa believing that God has called them to that distant field and that competition with the African witch doctors will be more worth while than with qualified physicians here in Christian America.

The steamer on which they travel for the first stage of their journey should reach Durban, South Africa, about the middle of January. At Durban they transfer to a steamer going to Mombasa. From Mombasa the 580-mile journey to Kisumu is made on the Uganda Railway. And 25 miles from Kisumu on the open road will bring them to their journey's end, Kaimosi Station, where they should arrive shortly after February first.

All Friends, and especially those who are acquainted with the Bond's and those familiar with the Africa Mission, formerly known as the Friends Africa Industrial Mission, will await with eager interest a report of their safe arrival. The Board of Missions bespeaks for these Friends your earnest prayer that their journey may be safely completed, and their work on the field and especially the task of learning the language may be successfully undertaken, under the abiding consciousness of the presence of our Heavenly Father.

HOW THE MEETING AT LYNN, INDIANA, HAS INCREASED MISSIONARY GIVING AND PRAYER

Missionary Sunday was observed monthly in the Bible School, short talks being given or some interesting missionary article read. In some cases, a missionary recitation was given by one of the scholars.

At Easter time, the school followed out the program of "The Hope of the World." The picture of Christ surrounded by the children from the different countries of the world was presented to the Bible School by one of the members. It hangs now upon the church walls, and serves as a constant stimulus to the members of the meeting and Bible School.

The pastor at least once a quarter brought to the morning meeting a message on missions, trying to show our privilege and duty in sending the gospel to those who have never heard it.

One of the stereopticon lectures provided by the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions was given in the spring with good effect. The pictures gave a much better idea of the work being done by our missionaries.

When the canvass was finished, it was found that the missionary offering was more than double that of the year before—a total of $274.36 as compared with $132.24 in the previous year.

A new plan is being employed this year in having the Missionary Committee take charge of a mid-week prayer meeting at frequent intervals. The church is encouraged to pray for missions as well as to give.

The increase in missionary offerings has been accompanied by a remarkable increase in the financial work of the church along other lines.

Set yourself earnestly to see what you were made to do, and then set yourself earnestly to do it; and the loftier your purpose is, the more sure you will be to make the world richer.

RALLY DAY

As you have perhaps already learned, Rally Day was a splendid success. We will continue to publish all collections on that day in these columns. If you have not yet observed the Day, it is not too late. Material will be sent upon request. We are very grateful indeed to all those who have with untiring efforts made the Day such a success.

OUR PROGRAM

THREE THOUSAND CONVERTS: That is our slogan for the coming year. The Christmas Holidays present unique opportunity to push this work. Every Lookout Chairman, every Study Class Leader and every Fellowship Group director should organize his Band to work for this slogan. What Christmas joy will come to one who permits God to use him in bringing a close friend to Christ. The Master is waiting for youth courageous enough to spread his kingdom through personal work.

TWO THOUSAND NEW CHURCH MEMBERS is second in importance only to the above. Halleluiahs, "Sound Doctrine" or Play Grounds are not sufficient to keep young people in the church. These may repel but practical Christianity will always attract. Absolute honesty, patience, love and optimism must be built into life. The church should be the great school master. Follow these slogans with establishing a YOUNG PEOPLES SOCIETY IN EVERY MEETING IN THE COUNTRY.

CHRISTMAS RALLIES

How many young People's societies will hold special meetings during the holidays? Read Vincent Nicholson's article on the Yorktown Heights Conference. It appeared in a recent issue of The American Friend. Any Quarterly Meeting in the country can hold one of these gatherings. It is simple. Appoint a Program Committee, then work it up. Write for the best speakers you can find. Saturday afternoon and evening and Sunday morning, afternoon and evening, furnish ample time for a most efficient meeting.

OUR MOTTO

YOUNG FRIENDS EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH: Our motto is "The Entire Church at Its Entire Task." Are you helping realize this? California answers, yes. She has the highest percentage of Christian Endeavor Societies per Meeting in the whole country. Oregon is hustling. With her efficient organization and definite program she is showing marked results. Baltimore has started on a new plane of life, and we can expect big things. It is astonishing the way New York is coming to the front.

I am sure that Western Meetings will have to change their notion that the East is dead. All see reports of happenings in Iowa which thrill us with a challenge to do our best. Indiana says that since she is the largest in size she is going to show the greatest results in work. But what of Wilmington? It must have been a great sight to see all meetings represented by young Friend delegates at the last Yearly Meeting. North Carolina Endeavor is on the "Boom". She more than doubled her membership last year and expects to make a clean sweep of all the Meetings this year.

In religion as well as politics Kansas and Nebraska stand for progress. Show them a thing is right and they will do it regardless of precedent. Until within the last year they have been looking over the Young Friends Movement, but now they are carrying out its plans and ideals with great energy. No doubt they will soon lead us all. Western Yearly Meeting is continually surprising us with new things. The Young Friends Automobile Campaign is an example of this. We will discuss it in a later issue.

New England and Canada, although not large in numbers, are doing remarkable work for their young people. As we approach this Christmas time let us thank God that we are rapidly becoming a great united church of exceptionally high ideals and most modern methods for work. Our responsibility is to show to Every man, Everywhere, Everything that Christ is to us. Our Lord says, "Behold I have set before thee an open door, which no man can shut."

T. E. JONES.

PUSH!

On the doors of some public buildings we see the word, PUSH. If that advice is taken for that particular door, especially, if your hands are full of bundles, suit case, and umbrella, the way out is easy.

Rally Day has passed. We had a good time with the program. We learned what had been accomplished among the young people of our church. We listened to the program of work as outlined for our new year's work, the goal toward which we are driving. It is going to be a hard drive, and will take us a long time. But let's never give up until we reach it! Just now when your hands are full, when you are loaded down with plans, now, is the time to PUSH! The door may be hard to open so will need your entire weight, and the help of all your comrades. But we must go through, we must win, we must accomplish all that we have set out to do. Now, altogether,—PUSH!

L. E. H.

COLLEGE YOUNG FRIENDS

For sometime the Young Friends Board has been working on a plan to become more directly connected with Friends Young People in the Colleges and Boarding Schools. In this we are co-operating with the Educational Board of the Five Years Meeting and the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. We will also need the assistance of pastors and parents in our efforts to reach these young people. Our first attempt is to get the names and addresses of all young Friends in the Boarding Schools, Colleges and Universities of the country. This will no doubt include most of the thousand schools in the United States and Canada. We shall be greatly aided in our work to receive these names at once.

NOTE—It is hoped that this page may present in brief form a record of activities typical of the work Friends are doing for peace. News items, short, pointed arguments, suggested plans, all will be welcome, and will be used subject to the limitations of space and the proper distribution and arrangement of the matter received. All communications intended for this page should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, President, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.

STATE LEGISLATION VS. FEDERAL LEGISLATION

In a large proportion of the territory covered by the United States a double effort will no doubt be made to secure the enactment of laws providing for an increase in the requirements for military training. One line of effort is to be launched at Washington in the form of bills to be enacted into federal laws; the other will find expression in bills introduced into the state legislatures which convene this winter. The following is believed to be a correct list of the states in which legislatures meet this winter, viz:

Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Relative Importance.

It is difficult to say which line of effort is likely to produce most disastrous results; possibly there may be little difference in some states; in others there may be conditions which will make one line or the other of preponderating importance. So far as the National Security League is concerned, the following paragraph addressed especially to members of the American Union against Militarism is of interest as being the opinion of men who have been giving careful attention to practically all phases of the military training problem, viewing them, moreover, from the standpoint of those who are opposed to any considerable increase in the power of the military arm of the government. The comment referred to is as follows:

"While it is undoubtedly true that the schools can not be captured by the militarists except through state legislation and that therefore the National Security League hopes to influence state legislation to this end, the fact remains that this particular group is not fundamentally interested in state legislation. It has no real confidence in the ability of the states to provide military training with sufficient 'pep'! It believes in federal control of national defense and the bill in which it is primarily interested is the Chamberlain bill providing for compulsory military training, under officers of the Regular Army, of all youths between the ages of twelve and twenty-three. While our members must be vigilant in meeting, and emphatic in resisting proposed state legislation modeled on the Welch-Slater acts which have been saddled on New York, they must not lose sight of the proposed federal legislation designed to furnish compulsory military training free from the 'molly coddling' influence of school teachers."

WORK OF THE FRIENDS' EMERGENCY COMMITTEE IN ENGLAND

The work of Friends for the assistance of Germans, Hungarians and Austrians in distress is still being prosecuted with vigor and success as is shown by the Fourth Report which is now being distributed. This "labor of love" is in many respects needed more and more as the months of the great conflict pass into years. Financial help is still much needed. Any readers of this notice who can assist in this work are invited to send contributions to Allen D. Hole, 615 National Road, West, who has been authorized to receive and forward donations of any amount.

The various phases of relief work hitherto engaged in, are still claiming attention, though the relative importance of each may be constantly changing. One of the phases demanding a much larger expenditure of time, effort and money within recent months is that of providing employment for men held in Internment Camps. The following extract from the Report above referred to shows how the committee is attempting to meet the needs which exist, and may suggest to some who read ways in which help may be given by assisting in making a market for the articles manufactured. The extract follows:

Work for Men in Internment Camps.

The bulk of the articles hitherto produced have been fancy goods, ornamental wood, bone and metal work, but we are anxious to develop the making of goods of more general use and commercial value. Under the scheme prepared by the employment Department of the Board of Trade (with whom we are in cooperation) it should be possible to arrange for the manufacture in the camps of many necessities of which there is a shortage in the market.

As practically every trade is represented in the camps, it is possible to arrange for a supply to firms or private customers of almost any goods which can be made under camp conditions and without elaborate machinery; or the finishing of partly manufactured goods can be undertaken.

Under the auspices of the Friends' Emergency Committee work has already been started in the following departments:—

Cabinet Making and Polishing.

Turnery.

Toy Making.

Tinsmithing.

Beaten Metal Work.

Basket Making.

Bookbinding.

Hand Weaving.

Tailoring.

Boot Making.

Felt Slipper Making.

Hosiery Hand and Machine Knitted.

Help is asked for in making this work known, and in obtaining small or large orders.

Correspondence should be addressed to the office of the Committee, 177 St. Stephen's House, Westminster Bridge, S. W., London, England

NOTES

Ruthanna M. Simms, the Chairman of the Peace Committee of the Friends Church on Indiana Avenue in Chicago, Illinois, arranged for a Mass Meeting at the church on Sunday afternoon, December 3, "to protest against the increasing persecution in England of Conscientious Objectors to Military Service, and against the growing sentiment in the United States in favor of military training in the public schools."

The CHICAGO TRIBUNE for Sunday, December 3, had the following sentiment printed in prominent type at the head of its editorial columns:

"Our Country! In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong." STEPHEN DECATUR.

THE IOWA PAGE

EVANGELISTIC AND CHURCH EXTENSION

Walter F. Dexter, endowment secretary of Penn College, preached at LeGrande November 11 during the absence of the pastor, John R. Wright, who was conducting a revival meeting at Marshalltown.

Viola Smith attended Winneshiek Quarterly Meeting the latter part of October, held at Valton, Wisconsin, and has remained there since conducting some special meetings and doing valuable work in the community. Birdie V. Bachelor, of Hubbard, Iowa will move to Valton to become pastor January 1st.

Zenos L. Martin of Holguin, Cuba, spoke of the things that have been accomplished in Cuba at the 'night meeting of the College Ave. Friends Meeting in Oskaloosa, November 19.

Elgie McCarger held a very successful series of meetings at Stuart, following Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting on November 11.

Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting was held in New Sharon, November 4. In the meeting on Ministry and Oversight, a committee was appointed to arrange for the discussion of some suitable subject during the next meeting. Charles O. Whitely brought the message before the Quarterly Meeting in a very strong manner, that was helpful to all. He also spoke at both the morning and evening meetings on Sabbath.

Dorsey and Amy Dobson closed a three weeks' meeting at Linden on November 19. About twenty made profession of having received definite blessing during the meetings. Several are expected to unite with Friends. Willis K. Craven is pastor here.

The H. Street Friends Meeting House was rededicated November 12. Charles O. Whitely preached the dedicatory sermon, closing with a service of consecration of pastor, people and the house. Under the leadership of Morris Lemmon, the pastor, the work of remodelling the building has been progressing just as funds were at hand for the work, so that it was completed without any indebtedness and no collection was taken in the dedicatory service. The building has been repainted in and out, half of the building re-roofed, a furnace placed, three new class rooms finished at the rear, new carpet put in the aisles and electric lights added. The expenses amounted to more than six hundred dollars. The largest gift was $100, made by one lady formerly a worker in the Bible School, but now living in a distant state and not a member of Friends. This Meeting is in a large field, in a section of the city of Oskaloosa with a population of perhaps two thousand and no other Protestant church for white people in it.

Pleasant Plain Quarterly Meeting was held in the new meeting house in Richland November 11 and 12. Prof. W. I. Kelsey, of Penn College was the only visiting minister in attendance. He preached four times during the Quarterly Meeting.

Eli Reece held a series of meetings in West Branch during the early part of November.

The College Ave. Meeting of Oskaloosa held its annual church social on the night of November 14. On account of Penn College using the building for college purposes, it was impossible for the usual supper to be served. This year the main feature was the "Birthday" idea. Tables were arranged for each of the months of the year. Decorated in accordance with the prominent idea of the month. After a short program in the main auditorium of the Meeting House, the crowd was taken to the dining rooms where each one found his place at the table representing the month in which his birthday occurred. In the center of the table was a large birthday cake. Ice cream was also served. Following the general good time here, including the fun of seeing the pastor attempt to cut the tin pan iced as the April Fool birthday cake, a short program of music and talks was given.

Three of the Rural Conferences have been held up to this time. They have been even more successful than was anticipated. The speakers and leaders have been Ancil Ratcliff, Fairmount, Ind., Charles O. Whitely, Evangelistic Supt. of the Yearly Meeting, Mr. Hauser of Iowa State College of Ames, Clarence M. Case of Penn College and Edgar H. Stranahan, chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of the Yearly Meeting. The attendance has been good and the interest remarkable. One pastor said of one of the conferences, "It was evangelistic in spirit throughout. For myself it was the best revival within the church that I have ever attended." From the meetings touched directly or indirectly by the conferences, the following results have been noted:—One meeting that was about to be laid down is to be revived and the men of another meeting have undertaken to see that the task is cared for, a brotherhood organized and a survey of the community undertaken; a partly completed meeting house that had been somewhat neglected by the rush of farm work, is now to be hurried to completion. Men began work on it before the conference had finally closed, and one meeting that has been using a meeting house that is inadequate came face to face with the fact that they could not do the needed work in such a building, and over $2,000 was offered toward a $15,000 house. These are but some of the outward visible results. It is quite as evident that a large number in attendance caught visions of work and made vows to do their own tasks that will tell mightily in the days that are to come.

C. E. DEPARTMENT

If the observance of Young Friends Day proved as interesting and inspiring in all our meetings as it did in Oskaloosa, it was well worth while. At the morning meeting for worship, Mr. Stranahan preached a sermon which made a special appeal to the young people to invest their lives in service. He emphasized the special opportunities in the ministry in the Society of Friends.

In the evening, the Senior and Young People's C. E. Societies had charge of the service, and gave the following program:—

Processional—The two societies and choir.

Prayer—Ruth Stewart.

Scripture Reading—Mildred Haworth.

All Hail Immanuel—Both societies and choir.

The Origin and Purpose of the Young Friends Movement—Henry Bogue.

Vocal Solo with Saxophone Obligato—Mr. Guthrie and Claren Coffin.

What the Young Friends Accomplished Last Year—Alice Michener.

Reading, "Speak a Good Word for Jesus Christ"—Eva Wickersham.

Anthem—Choir.

The Cedar Lake Conference—Willard Reynolds.

The Coming Year's Program—Duane McCracken.

The talks were all short and to the point, giving a clear view of the work already accomplished, and appealing to our loyalty and most earnest effort to make the slogan of the Young Friends Movement a realization, "The Entire Church at its Entire Task."

Both Societies at Oskaloosa have taken up the efficiency work and the Young People's society has a class in Expert Endeavor.

What about those study classes in Peace and the History of Friends?

CHURCH AT WORK

Corinth, Va.—A series of meetings began here on November 23rd, and continued for six days. Fred E. Smith of Greensboro, N. C., was the evangelist, while L. Oscar Moon of Baltimore had charge of the singing. Charles Mesner, of Sedley, assisted the pastor in the work of visitation. The gospel messages were plain, practical and convincing. A great many came for a deeper experience and many were reclaimed. The old fashioned altar was made use of, and many knelt and asked God for his blessing. It was one of the greatest spiritual awakenings we have ever experienced. Ten persons have requested membership and five associate members have expressed a desire to become active. The community church idea is very rapidly becoming realized here.

A sunrise prayer service was held in the home of Alonzo E. Cloud on Thanksgiving Day. Thirty members of the C. E. Society were present and after a very helpful time of prayer and praise, the service was concluded out of doors with a consecration hymn, sung with the members facing the sunrise. It was indeed a blessed occasion in which the power of God was felt. The conclusion of the services was followed by the distribution of baskets, each containing a dinner for a needy family. The Thanksgiving services were held in the church at 3:00 o'clock and were conducted by Charles Mesner who gave an able address.

Berkeley, California—Our young people had charge of our meeting on the evening of November 26th, the older ones participating in the after part of the meeting. We had one of the most lively and interesting meetings we have had for a long while. Talent appeared that we had no idea of. We are glad that the young people's activities are amounting to so much. May the good work go on.

Arba, Indiana—The Friend's meeting here celebrated the evening of Thanksgiving day with appropriate exercises of music, recitations and a short sermon by John Hardwick, a visiting minister. We are expecting to begin revival services on the evening of December 31. John Hardwick and wife, of Morgan's Creek Chapel, will assist the pastor, Scott Duncan, in the services. We hope for good results.

Dublin, Indiana—The W. F. M. S.

of Dublin gave a missionary social at the church on the evening of November 10th, a very interesting program was rendered, consisting of music, songs, missionary talks and a missionary dialogue, after which a social hour and refreshments were served. It was a pleasant and profitable occasion.

On the evening of November 29th the Penn class of Dublin Sunday school entertained the Whittier class. After song and prayer the question was discussed: "Resolved, That Woman be Given the Privilege of the Ballot." Seasonable refreshments were served. Lines appropriate to the occasion and composed by T. O. Henby were recited by his wife, Emma Henby, and were given as a welcome.

Farmland, Indiana—The Friends Church has united with the other churches in the town and community in a tabernacle meeting. The tabernacle belongs to Jacob Frazier, of Winchester, Indiana, and he has a party of five. Henry Roller of Huntingburg, Indiana, is doing most of the preaching and is a strong evangelist. They are doing good work. Quite a number of people have been definitely blessed, and many are taking advanced grounds. The meeting will continue one week longer.

Gasport, New York—The Gasport Friends C. E. Society has quite a number of little wooden barrels, which the missionary committee gave out three weeks ago with the request that the members enclose their thank offering and return the barrels to the C. E. meeting on Thanksgiving day. By this method $21.00 was received and sent to the DeVols at Luho, China. In the same manner the Bible School sent their missionary offering of $10 to Margaret Holme at Luho, China. Both of these offerings were sent as Christmas gifts with the best wishes, love and prayers of the Gasport Friends.

Poughkeepsie, New York—November 26th was a red letter day in the meeting here. It was observed as "Young Friends Day" and the services from the beginning of the Sabbath school to the closing services in the evening were devoted to the interest of young Friends. At the morning meeting the pastor spoke upon the subject "The Challenge of the World to Youth" and a special appeal was made that Friends might be more attentive to the young members of the church. At the C. E. meeting the young people had as their guests the Society from a neighboring meeting and a most delightful time of spiritual uplift and fellowship was enjoyed. The crest was reached in the evening meeting when some fifty young people marched into the auditorium to greet Thomas E. Jones, who brought to them an impassioned address on the subject "The Quaker of the Future". A collection was taken for the support of the Young Friends Board, and a hearty response was made.

Westfield, Indiana—Charles and Lena Lescault of Los Angeles, California, began a series of meetings here on November 5th which closed on the evening of November 26th. In general there was a good attendance throughout these meetings, except when the weather was disagreeable. A deep interest was manifested and we feel that lasting impressions for a closer work with God were made on the hearts and minds of many. Brother Lescault is a minister of great power and we believe that his exposition of Gospel truth and his fervent appeals to sinners will long be remembered. His wife, who is also a recorded minister, was very helpful and rendered effective services in prayer, exhortation and teaching. E. Howard Brown and wife, who are pastors here, were very faithful and rendered valuable services in the work.

These evangelists have now gone to Russiaville, Indiana, where they began meetings on the evening of November 29th.

KANSAS NEWS

Hopewell, Kansas—We have just closed a very successful revival here. L. Clarkson Hinshaw, pastor at Haviland, was in charge and brought us plain spiritual and helpful messages. The church was greatly strengthened and a number of the people who were helped in the meeting are expecting to join. Thirty-five persons knelt at the altar and were definitely blessed, twenty-five were renewed, three were converted and seven sanctified.

Glen Elder, Kansas—Glen Elder Monthly Meeting was held here on November 24 as an evening service. Invitations had been sent to the neighborhood in general. The services began at 7:30 with an active song service and prayer by the pastor, A. E. Wooten. The pastor then gave a talk on "Our Heritage." He spoke of the subject first with reference to men and second with reference to principles. More than sixty persons were present and partook of the refreshments which had been provided by the ladies. A Mission Study Class of about twenty members has been formed for the study of South America. Preparation has already begun for Christmas time.

Kansas City, Missouri—The Sunday School had charge of the morning church services on November 12. The program proved profitable to the entire congregation. Plans are well under way for the appropriate observance of Christmas in the Sunday School. A cantata has been selected, "The Uninvited Christmas Guests," and it will be rendered on the evening of December 23. Thanksgiving Day was observed appropriately at 10:30 in the morning. The last of the Sunday evening addresses to young people was given by the pastor on December 3, using the subject, "Characteristics of Youth."

Spring Grove, Kansas—A. Y. Harris, our Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, visited our meeting here from the 18th to the 22nd of November. His services were very helpful. The secretary, W. L. Rohenkamp, gave us a good talk on C. E. work on November 25. We certainly appreciated the coming of these young people among us. Jacob Perry and wife, who have been pastors here during the last four years, have accepted a call to Pleasant Ridge, Kansas, and will move there soon. Their address will be R. F. D. No. 1, Republican City, Nebraska.

NEWS NOTES

The word comes from Portland, Oregon, that our Friend John Frederick Hanson is still critically ill.

The Y. M. C. A. of Haverford College has arranged for the coming of a number of strong speakers during the winter.

Luke Woodard and wife have returned to their home at Fountain City, Indiana, after a visit of some weeks with their daughter at Rochester, N. Y.

Joseph Elkinton and Vincent D. Nicholson attended the meeting at Westtown School, Pennsylvania, on Thanksgiving day and brought appropriate messages.

G. M. Jackson has moved to Pennville, Indiana, and is now pastor of the meetings at Walnut Corner and at Glenwood. He began a revival meeting at Olive Branch on the evening of December 4th.

Mary Sibbitt of Wichita, Kansas, spent seven months in reform work in the state of Iowa last year. She expects to spend this year in her home state of Kansas. She attended the National W. C. T. U. at Indianapolis in November, and spoke twice on Sunday.

Edward Wistar of Philadelphia, chairman of the Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs, spent some days recently at the Indian mission stations in Oklahoma. He stopped at Richmond on his way home, and was a welcome visitor at the office of The American Friend.

The Pacific College Bulletin for November is before us and is a valuable number. It contains interesting accounts of the observance of the 25th anniversary of the opening of the college. The largest Freshman class in the history of the college is enrolled. The need of $100,000 additional to the endowment fund is expressed.

Subscribers should not overlook the announcement on page 2, about the increase in price of The American Friend, due to the great advance in the price of blank paper. All renewals dating from January 1, 1917, will be taken at $2.00 per year. Ministers 50 cents less. Foreign subscriptions, including postage will be $2.50. New subscriptions will be taken at the old rate until December 31, and all re-

The meeting at West Richmond, Indiana, will dedicate its new church building, the Allen Jay Memorial, on next Sunday, December 17, with appropriate exercises. Charles M. Woodman, the pastor, will bring the message in the morning, while brief remarks will be given by Naomi Harrison Jay. Professor Alexander C. Purdy of Earlham College will bring the message in the afternoon at 3:00, and greetings will be brought from the college, from the Ministerial Association and church federation of the city, the Y. M. C. A. and others.

Other people may need watching, and we may have some responsibility for them, but our first business is to watch ourselves. This is a responsibility no one can lift off us. We should take heed to our own hearts and be sure that they are kept with all diligence. We should take heed to our personal habits. We should take heed to our companionships. Watchfulness has abundant rewards.

CENTENNIAL OBSERVANCE

Central Village celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of its Meeting on November 25th and 26th. On Saturday evening the Community assembled to honor the memory of those rugged souls who maintained a Friends Meeting uninterruptedly and in the face of odds for two whole centuries. The following program was carried out:

Address Wilbur K. Thomas, of Boston

The "Typical Business Meeting of 1777" consisted of actual minutes and business that was carried on in that early period. One item of business was the appointment of a committee in 1777 to relieve Friends who were unable to attend Rhode Island Monthly Meeting, on account of the British warships that blockaded Narraganset Bay.

The "Star" of the evening was the four year old Elizabeth S. Macomber who read "A Little Quaker Sinner" remarkably well. With her little Quaker bonnet, cape, gown and clear enunciation she won the admiration of the audience. All those who participated in the silent and business meetings appeared in Quaker costume. The best part of the celebration was the reception of four new members.

On Sunday evening the house was filled. Music was furnished by some pieces of the New Bedford High School Orchestra, and Wilbur K. Thomas, a former pastor, gave a fitting address on "What of the future?" It was a strong appeal to the Community to help shoulder the burdens of the meeting in trying to serve it.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SILSBEE STREET MEETING HOUSE, LYNN, MASS.

One of the best preserved old meeting houses in the country is the Silsbee Street Meeting house in Lynn, Mass., the one hundredth anniversary of which was celebrated in Tenth Month with appropriate exercises. Mary Miars Harold of Danville, Indiana, who was for eleven years pastor of the Lynn Meeting, preached the anniversary sermon on Sunday morning which was enjoyed by a very large congregation.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the special anniversary service was enjoyed by another large audience. An interesting historical sketch of the old house was read by George C. Herbert, responses were given by pastors of the other Churches in the City and an address on "The Function of the Modern Church" was given by Walter Healy of St. Paul's M. E. Church.

On Monday evening a congregational supper was served by a local caterer, followed by a program of short speeches by members and visitors on the work of the Meeting for the coming year; it was a "boosters meeting." Pictures of some of the prominent members of the Meeting of the past hundred years were thrown on the screen and something was told of their contribution to the life of their times. Among them was the picture of Peter Neal, the War-Mayor of Lynn, John Ellwood Paige, for many years Clerk of New England Yearly Meeting, and Nathan Breed, who left a legacy of $50,000 for the founding of the Childrens' Home. This has just become available and some of the members of the Meeting are engaged in the carrying out of the provisions of the will.

The Meeting house has been undergoing some extensive repairs and it presented a beautiful appearance in its new white interior, indirect lighting system, two new rooms, new flooring of steam-ship linoleum, new steam heating plant and minor improvements. The Meeting is in a good condition and has a vigorous program of work for the Winter. Earle J. Harold began his second year of pastoral work September 1."

Visitation Day in Silsbee Street Meeting
Lynn, Mass.

Sunday afternoon November 9th was "Visitation Day" in Silsbee Street Meeting, in Lynn, Mass. Twenty six persons made forty three calls on other members and attenders of the Meeting and a verbal report of the experiences and results was given at the evening meeting. Every one spoke of the benefit to both those who did the calling and those upon whom calls were made. The callers went out by twos, and the calls were made upon the shut-ins, the non-attending members, the near interested non-members, parents of children in the Sunday school and others who could not themselves get out to do calling. Another such day will be observed later on in the winter.

PRESIDENT SHARPLESS RESIGNS

After nearly thirty years of active service as President of Haverford College, Dr. Isaac Sharpless has felt it expedient to hand in a final and insistent resignation, which has been very reluctantly accepted by the Board of Managers. The resignation will take effect at the end of the present year. As yet no successor has been appointed and the managers are at a loss to know how to fill the position.

Isaac Sharpless has been President of Haverford since 1887, and a member of the faculty since 1875—more than forty years. He will be sixty-eight years old next month. He came to Haverford as instructor in mathematics and was made professor of mathematics and astronomy in 1879. He was appointed dean of the College in 1884, a position which he held for three years until his appointment to the presidency.

He was born in Chester County, Pa., December 16, 1848, and was graduated from the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard University in 1873. He holds a number of academic degrees: Sc.D., University of Pennsylvania, 1883; LL. D., Swarthmore, 1889; L.H.D., Hobart, 1903. One of his latest honors was the conferring by Harvard of an honorary LL. D. in 1915.

He is the author of a number of text-books on physics, mathematics, and astronomy, and has long been interested in local and Quaker History, some of his books on these subjects being: "A Quaker Experiment in Government"; "Two Centuries of Pennsylvania History"; "Quakerism and Politics." Along educational lines, his recent book "The American College," shows a deep interest and sympathetic study of the function of the small college in this country. In scholastic matters he has long been a devoted champion of the cause of liberal education, and the advantage of broadening, general studies over a mere vocational training. A few years ago he was chairman of the Pennsylvania Association of College Presidents, of which he is still an active member. He is a member of the Westtown School Board, The Penn Charter School Board, and President ex-officio of the Board of Haverford School.

He is much interested in local politics from the standpoint of clean citizenship, and is a former president of the Main Line Citizen's Association.

In recent months he has been very active in the Peace Movement, and in opposition to the growing spirit of militarism in America. He is one of the vice-presidents of the League to Enforce Peace.—Haverford News.

a want in the case of Belgian woman and children either arriving from or returning to Belgian towns. The former are generally wishful to join their husbands who are at work in France; the latter are returning to obtain definite news of relatives, or trying to get some relative out of Belgium. Our most interesting inmate is a lady who made her escape from Antwerp on foot, being unable to get a passport to join her former mistress, a French officer's wife, now in Tours. She and two lads, brother and cousin, braved all dangers; and after hairbreadth escapes got through the morasses which border the frontier. They hid in sand-hills from sentries, being helped by peasants, and arrived in Flushing the fourth day after leaving Antwerp.

BOOK NOTICE

"The Inner Life," by Rufus M. Jones. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York City. 194 pages, price $1.00.

The book contains an introduction of five pages and the work is grouped in six chapters under the following heads: "The Inner Way"; "The Kingdom Within the Soul"; "Some Prophets of the Inner way"; "The Way of Experience"; "A Fundamental Spiritual Outlook"; "What Does Religious Experience Tell Us About God?" The book is written in the author's well known vigorous and interesting style. The purpose of it may be set forth in the closing paragraph of the introduction as follows:

"This little book on the 'Inner Life' does not assume to deal with the whole of the religious life. It recognizes that the outer in the long run is just as essential as the inner. This one inner aspect is selected for emphasis without any intention of slighting the importance of the other side of the shining shield. Men of today are so over-whelmingly occupied with objective tasks; they are so busy with the field of outer action, that it is a peculiarly opportune time to speak of the interior world, where the issues of life are settled and the tissues of destiny are woven. There will certainly be some readers who will be glad to turn from accounts of trenches lost or won, to spend a little time with the less noisy but no less mysterious battle-line inside the soul, and from problems of foreign diplomacy to the drama of the inner life."

BIBLE SCHOOL

December 24

Subject—"Unto Us a Son Is Given."
Lesson—Isaiah 9:1-7.

Golden Text—For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace. Isaiah 9:6.

The prophet had met Ahaz at the conduit of the upper pool, hoping to dissuade him from his purpose to ally himself with Assyria. He had failed. That weak king had even refused to consider a sign from Jehovah. Isaiah saw the great need for a man of real worth on the Hebrew throne. Here was a weakling but in the vision which was before him the seer realized that the time would soon come when the perfect man would be ushered into the world. In the crisis men have always longed for a strong man, a man able to lead them safely through to the safe side. Men did not look for a Messiah until they were face to face with ruin, unless one came. When the hour of darkness came they found the light shining across the way. It was a great light as the prophet declares.

As a result of the coming of this great successor of Ahaz the prophet in his vision saw the salvation of those parts of the Hebrew territory which had already been lost to the house of David—and also to the house of Israel—the regions West and North of the sea of Galilee and the territory East of the Jordan. In other words, Israel was in this coming time to be restored.

When that day shall have arrived the hand of the former oppressor will be helpless, all his accouterments will be fuel for the fire, because a wonderful victory will have been accomplished. Peace will be at hand, a permanent peace, with Israel and Israel's king the world leaders. So Isaiah, seeing on the one hand weakness, coming ruin, the blackness of despair and utter desolation, if Ahaz had his way, turned to the situation as it was to be when God should send Israel's Redeemer.

The quality and character of this leader to come is indicated in the names that are to be given him. Wonderful counsellor. His wisdom to excel that of ordinary mortals to such an extent that it is to be wonderful, appearing all the greater when contrasted with the utter lack of quality shown in the weak judgment of Ahaz. Mighty God, a term which the people of that time could not understand as we understand it, but would to them mean that he was to be as one of the Gods of the first rank—a mighty God. This was an idea within the comprehension of the people of that and more recent times. Even as late as the days of Paul it was so popular that that apostle had hard work to keep the people of Lystra from offering worship to him as a God.

Early Christians were martyred for not offering incense to the emperors as Gods. An Everlasting Father, a father to his people in the truest sense, not only for a time but for time unnamable. Prince of peace. The period of conflict was then to be over. He would bring—had brought peace, ever lasting peace. Elsewhere the prophet speaks of turning the implements of warfare into agricultural tools.

Whatever the common Hebrew of the time may have thought of this great personage, we who have the fuller light across the way know that this prophecy has never been realized in a material sense. No king, no deliverer completed the vision. Jesus the Christ alone was complete enough to fulfil its requirements.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 24.

Topic—Helping to Accomplish the Purpose of Christ's Coming. John 10:1-16. (Christmas Meeting.)

How can we help "Christ's other Sheep?"

How can we help forward good will and peace?

How can we fulfill His will in us?

Publish the Message.

In the words of Isaiah, comes this admonition: "O, thou that tellest good tidings to Zion, get thee up on a high mountain; O, thou that tellest good tidings to Jerusalem, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid, say unto the cities of Judah, behold your God! Behold the Lord Jehovah will come as a mighty one, and his arm will rule for him. Behold his reward is with him. He will feed his flock like a shepherd, he will gather the Lambs in his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and will gently lead those that have their young."

Praying for men.

In James, we read, "Confess therefore your sins one to another, that ye may be healed. The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working. He who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins." Let us then be soul winners, fishers of men, Matt. 4: 18-20.

Examples for men.

In Paul's letter to Titus he says: "Put them in mind to be in subjection to rulers, to authorities, to be obedient, to be ready unto every good work, to speak evil of no man, not to be contentious, to be gentle, showing all meekness toward all men."

Lovers of men.

John says, "We know that we have passed out of death into life because we love the brethren. He that loveth not abideth in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer. Hereby know we love, because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath the world's goods and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither with the tongue, but in deed and truth."

Victory!

Revelation 5: 6-14.

Binford—At Richmond, Indiana, November 5, 1916, to Prof. Raymond and Mrs. Binford, a son, Richard Titsworth.

DIED

Bailey—Albert I. Bailey, son of Josiah and Mary Jenkins Bailey, was born on a farm at Dover, Ohio in June, 1846. He died suddenly of heart failure while in his store at Wilmington, Ohio, November 23, 1916. Death came quickly without warning, although he had been affected with a weak heart for a number of years. During his active life he worked hard and in later years was a farmer, a banker, a manufacturer, and a landlord. Practically everybody in Wilmington knew him and respected him. He was a student for a time at Earlham College. In 1872 he married Mary Hussey who survives him. The funeral services were conducted at the Friend's church in Wilmington by the pastor, E. R. Purdy. A fuller account will be given later.

Barrett—Enos Y. Barrett died at his home near New Martinsburg, Ohio, November 14th, 1916, having been stricken with organic heart trouble last June. During his illness of four months he manifested a brave, patient and sweet disposition, arranging his earthly affairs and at last falling quietly asleep. Funeral services were conducted at the home by Fremont B. Milner, assisted by the pastors of the Friends and M. E. churches.

Johnson—Rebecca C. Johnson was born near Bellville, Indiana, July 31st, 1831, and died at Alba, Mo., November 20, 1916. She married Robert Johnson in 1854. She was converted in early life, at which time she joined Friends, and remained a true and faithful follower of her Lord and Saviour. She is survived by five children and six grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Parker Moon.

Hinshaw—Emily J. Hinshaw daughter of Franklin and Mezzannah Haisley, was born at New Garden, Indiana, January 23rd, 1849, and died at the home of her daughter at Garden City, Kansas, November 30, 1916. She married Philander E. Hinshaw in 1869. She was a birthright Friend and held places of honor and trust in the church at different times. The life she enjoyed to the fullest, however, was in her home, where her patience and devotion won for her the thanks and praise of all. She went to Kansas with her husband in 1872, and experienced many of the hardships and privations common to the early settlers. She is survived by the husband, four sons, five daughters, two sisters and a brother. Funeral services were conducted at Haviland, Kansas by Carl D. Byrd, assisted by L. C. Hinshaw.

THE BIBLE THAT IS MOST LIKELY TO PLEASE EVERYBODY

The Bible-Giving Christmas Plan

This movement has been inaugurated among Christian People to make at least one of their gifts a Bible, in honor of Him for Whom the great festival has been named.

"INTERNATIONAL" CLEARNUTYPE TEACHER'S BIBLE

SELF-PRONOUNCING

While the text of the Bible does not change, new methods of type-making have produced a type that is larger in size, more easily read, and more restful to the eyes, for use in a book which is also more convenient in size and lighter in weight. The type used in this new Bible was moulded especially for the purpose. It is the largest, clearest type to be found in any Bible of like size.

THE MOST MODERN IDEAS IN BIBLE-MAKING. In addition to the large clear type and convenient size, the full contents also commend this Bible. It contains the Authorized Version of the Old and New Testaments, with sixty thousand references in the center column; has the names of the books of the Bible printed on outer edge for quick reference; has all proper names accented and divided into syllables, making pronunciation easy; has the most accurate, most usable aids to Bible study; and has seventeen colored maps.

NEW TYPE OF TEACHER'S AIDS TO BIBLE STUDY

The logical arrangement of the helps is another improvement and a great convenience. All the aids (over 400 pages), including Complete Concordance, Subject Index, Dictionary, etc., etc., are under one Alphabetical Arrangement instead of separate headings as in the old type of Bible. Furthermore, these new helps are illustrated and are the only helps printed from black-face type, which makes them more readable and useful.

HANDSOMELY BOUND IN FLEXIBLE LEATHER

This Bible is printed on thin rag paper especially made for it. Jet black ink is used in the printing to make the type stand forth clearly. Handsome, Flexible Leather Binding, with overlapping covers (like cut), red-under-gold edges, head-band and purple ribbon marker, all combine to make it the finest, most practical of Bibles—the most pleasing of all gifts.

Exact Size, 5½ x 8 inches.

Each Bible packed in a Handsome Decorated Christmas Box.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. Our school is much smaller than usual, though of better quality than the average in some years.

“Christ the Lord”

And there were shepherds in the same country abiding in the field, and keeping watch by night over their flock.

And an angel of the Lord stood by them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

And the angel said unto them, Be not afraid; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people:

For there is born to you this day in the city of David, a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord.

And this is the sign unto you: Ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, and lying in a manger.

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

Glory to God in the highest,

And on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased.

And it came to pass, when the angels went away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing that is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

And they came with haste, and found both Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in the manger.

And when they saw it, they made known concerning the saying which was spoken to them about this child.

And all that heard it wondered at the things which were spoken unto them by the shepherds.

But Mary kept all these sayings, pondering them in her heart.

And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, even as it was spoken unto them.—Luke 2: 8-20.

IMPORTANT TO SUBSCRIBERS

Apparently all subscribers to The American Friend have not read the announcements in these columns during recent weeks, to the effect that on and after January 1, 1917, the subscription price will be advanced to $2.00. THIS ADVANCE APPLIES TO ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS WHICH EXPIRE ON JANUARY 1, 1917 AND AFTERWARDS. Sending in the money before January 1 does not avail to secure the paper at the present rate, IF THE EXPIRATION COMES ON JANUARY 1, OR LATER. We send notices of expiration each month, for the guidance of all subscribers. We cannot accept $1.50 in payment for a full year's subscription, whose expiration dates from January 1, and later. All subscriptions which expire before January 1, next, will be renewed at the old rate. Our readers will readily see that a certain time had to be fixed by which the new rate is to be governed. This advance in price is due wholly to the great advance in the cost of blank paper. Will all our subscribers please take note and pass the word on to others?

THE CHRISTMAS LIFE

T. MAXWELL MORRISON
Christmas brings us loving cheer;
Yes, it brightens all the year;
For it tells of God's great love
Sent to earth from heaven above.
To the world through every age,
To the young, the rich, the sage,
To the poor, the weak, the sad,
Christmas comes to make me glad
Listen to its loving lay!
Follow where it points the way!
Lift to God your heart in praise!
Live the Christmas life always!

CHRIST OR SANTA CLAUS

"The usual difficulties present themselves. Every year we send to various publishing houses, chiefly those of our respective denominations, for sample Christmas cantatas, hoping to find something in which the thought of Christ predominates. We are as often disappointed. About all that comes to our hand are 'Santa Claus cantatas.' We must have something, so we select the best among them, and the 'Santa Claus program' is given to the delight of the public, with its itching ears always ready to be tickled by a pretense of the real thing. Many people never enter the church except at Christmas or to attend a funeral. The Church loses with such an opportunity. Those who might have been impressed with the Gospel message given in an attractive way have only heard of an imaginative character and his traditional doings. Children whose minds should be filled with the real meaning and importance of Christmas are led to think of it only as the day to get a treat and exalt Santa. Is there not enough talent in Christendom to provide us with really Christian cantatas and programs? Cannot some one furnish us with a program representing some of the incidents surrounding the birth of Christ of as high a standard and as entertaining as some of these fairy scenes? Then let us have them. Let us relegate Santa Claus to the nursery among the rest of his legendary associates, at least during this season of the year, and let Christ have the field. Let us have less of Santa Claus and more of Christ."—C. E. in Christian Work.

A BEAUTIFUL CHRISTMAS CUSTOM AMERICANIZED

Out in Milwaukee is a Norwegian pastor—though he serves an entirely English congregation and would hardly be recognized as a Norwegian—who has naturalized a beautiful Christmas custom of the home country. He has trained a choir of boys to go from house to house early on Christmas morning (particularly where the sick are deprived of the Christmas service in the house of God), and to sing the beautiful old carols. This has proved so touchingly effective as to make it a distinctive feature every Christmas in that city! It has made so strong an impression that one of the city papers, in a strong plea for a Christmas celebration that means something, has been moved to say: "Thanks to the Christmas tree, which the Germans brought to this country, the American home Christmas has gained an atmospheric charm. But beyond the celebration of the churches, the public manifestation of the Christmas spirit leaves much to be desired. The beautiful customs of the old world have not taken root. Among these, the singing of carols in the open air is one of the most beautiful, beautiful of itself, beautiful in its emphasis of the spirit and associations of the day. We have frequently praised the Rev. Gustav Sterns for his local pioneer work in this field. The tears of gladness that have been brought to the bed-ridden by those boy voices in the still, cold night have amply repaid the sacrifice of the young choristers."—Exchange.

The Mission of Christ to Earth

The manner of our observance of the Christmas anniversary is likely to be the measure of our conception of Christ's mission in the world. It is not alone the story of the manger that has thrilled centuries of human history, but the story of a matchless life which had its birth in that lowly place. The interpretation of Christmas therefore is the interpretation of Jesus Christ to the age in which its anniversary occurs. As the central figure, both of earth and of heaven, if we are to accept the vision of the seer of Patmos, Jesus is a personage around which all life, now and hereafter, must center and to whom the world in every age owes its highest allegiance. Thus it is that Christmas becomes a day, not of feasting and revelling, but of spiritual quickening and uplift, of broadening conceptions of the meaning of life, of fuller consecration to the tasks imposed by allegiance to our Lord.

Jesus Christ will be to any of us what our best conceptions are of Him, conceptions not of the imagination, but conceptions based upon our study of Him and the reality of our contact with Him. The Jew's conception of the Messiah was materialistic, and he looked for a king with a throne and a crown and armies and a scepter of power. Yet that very conception was made the beginning of the clearer vision which came to the disciples, the apostles and the early church, as gradually they grasped the meaning and scope of this power which was never to end. The revelation of Him who walks in the midst of the churches will be a progressive and constant revelation to all who have open souls to receive the truth, for Christianity is a life, and life means growth, and we are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord.

The biggest problem which any individual can consider, the biggest problem which the world is facing today, whether conscious of it or not, is the problem of finding out what the mind of Christ is for humanity now. There is no problem great or small, personal or social, that should not be considered and solved from the standpoint of the will of God, and the precepts of Jesus Christ. Any other course must spell disaster in the final reckoning of things. Internationalism, Americanism, questions of diplomacy, commerce, industrialism, sociology, humanitarianism, no less than questions of personal life, are primal to the extent that they are subjected to the tests of the divine will. Considered upon any other basis they become secondary in importance, for the conclusions reached are the judgment of minds that are finite and lack the quickening of the spirit of God. It may be admitted that the task of measuring every problem by divine standards is not an easy one, but the great quest of life is to find the answer through prayer, through searching the Scriptures, through study of divine operations in the lives of men, through the revelations of God, through the contact of the indwelling Christ, through the quickening of the Holy Spirit, through all means by which God speaks to the consciousness of man.

We are living in an age in which there is a marked tendency to tone down the requirements of the program of Jesus, in personality and in the social order. Under the impelling demands of so-called nationalism professed followers of the Prince of Peace have turned civilization into a slaughter house, and a large part of the Church applauds under the banner of so-called patriotism. Even yet the church in part condones the saloon and refuses to be interested in the movements for social reform. Society in part cloaks itself with respectability as a shield for the sinfulness of its deportment, while certain classes of business become robbers of the weak upon the highway of life, and sit with sanctimonious face in the pews at the house of worship upon the Lord's day. Yes, more than all this, even the church in considerable degree seems to assent to the doctrine that religion is a matter of profession, quite apart from the daily procedure of human life.

If the world needs to learn one lesson more than another, it is that life itself and every act of life are answerable to religion, and that to be spiritual is to follow Jesus Christ, not alone in creeds and in testimony and in church membership, but in every act of life, whether it be social, commercial, industrial or political, and where can this lesson be learned if not at the hearthstone of Christian communion in association with the living Christ and under his leadership?

The Christmas season of 1916 ought to find the whole world deeply thoughtful of the claims of Jesus Christ upon the whole of humanity. The church and not materialism ought to be the controlling element in the reconstruction of the world's civilization, for Christianity at its best means the regeneration of life at every point. The coming of Jesus to earth has meant that from the beginning, but there must be willing followers on earth for its highest consummation.

The Meaning of Christmas

By A. C. PURDY

"Ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger." Luke 2:12.

At times Jesus sought to conceal Himself. Wearied and worn, He guided His disciples across the Sea of Galilee to "rest awhile." Confronted with a great crisis he withdrew "into the borders of Tyre and Sidon." But He could not be hid, for the eastern side of the lake swarmed with its multitude "and He had compassion on them as sheep not having a shepherd," and even Gentile Phoenicia knew Him and cried out for the "children's crumbs." He could not be hid.

His enemies were eager to send Him into oblivion. They wanted to hide Him. They fitted shaft after shaft to the bow of their enmity. Reason and ridicule, prejudice, treachery, malice and murder itself were their weapons but they could not force humanity to forget Him.

In the centuries which have followed there have been times when He seemed forgotten. Even when His name was upon many lips and empires waxed and waned under the sway of a church which confessed Him, and crusades set out to rescue from heathen defilement the soil He had trod, and theologians speculated and anathematized in relation to the problem of His person, even then at times the real Jesus seemed forgotten. But He could not be hid even by those who professed themselves His friends. There were ever devout souls who knew and loved Him and had fellowship in His spirit and served in His name and walked in His steps, and in them the living and eternal Christ came forth again to claim the imagination, the will, the soul of humanity.

It seems that in our own day the world has almost forgotten Him. Who hears His quiet voice above the clash of arms, the boom of big guns? Who hears His voice in the drudgery of life, in the ceaseless detail of life, in the dust and noise of life? Is He silenced at last? Has the desire of the scribes and Pharisees been fulfilled? Is He forgotten?

The answer is Christmas. But the cynic and the sceptic and the pessimist will chorus in the words of Scrooge, "Bah! Humbug!" What does Christmas mean to the world! To your historian, a date. To your theologian, a doctrine. To your business man, trade. To your student, a closed book. To your society devotee, the social whirl. But Christmas means more than that to some. To myriads of hearts, to all whom He calls "friends," it will mean remembering Jesus Christ. The angel of Christmas is announcing again to those who see "the glory of the Lord shining round about, Ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger."

Shall we not all go at this Christmas time to the Bethlehem manger? We cannot think of that baby without remembering all the rest of the story. We would not forget if we could the struggle, toil, suffering, service, love, death, the new life beyond the death. And yet shall we not take our places beside the shepherds and feel only the wonder and the promise and the hope of that child life.

What would it mean to the world to find that Christ child if only for a day? I think I know part of the answer. It came to me in so unromantic a place as an elevated train in a great city. It was late afternoon, the rush hour, and every car was filled to its capacity. The car into which I made my way held the typical throng. There were tired shoppers and weary clerks; business men buried in newspapers, the glory of their morning smartness dimmed by the toil of the day; by the door a laboring man with his dinner pail; next him a messenger boy; a Jew peddler with long black beard and little derby hat; a student with his bag of books and his big-rimmed glasses, just the common "American" crowd. They touched elbows and jostled one another as the train swung around the curves, but their inner selves were continents apart. Who has not known the loneliness of the crowd? And their faces were hard and loveless, many of them, and one almost despaired of humanity as he studied them.

Into that crowded car there came a little family group. One could see at a glance the relationship, father and mother and small son just beginning to talk. Now the little boy did not know the etiquette of elevated trains. He felt perfectly at ease for father and mother were there. And so he began to prattle in his childish way. At first they tried to quiet him but he could not understand and they wisely let him talk on. The human atmosphere in that elevated car began to change. Men looked up scowling from their newspapers but when they saw the wee boy the scowls faded. It did not need a psychologist to know that things were happening in that car. Unconsciously that little child was leading them. Faces I had thought so hard began to show tender lines. The little boy was dressed all in white, I remember, but one of his mittens had become soiled and presently he discovered it. Instead of trying to conceal it as you or I would have done he held it up where all might see and sought an explanation from his mother. The child's perplexity and quaint comments on the situation were more than the crowd could stand. The women smiled first and then the men. And more than that they caught each other smiling and smiled at each other. Jew exchanged smiles with Gentile. The messenger boy forgot for the moment the "nickel thriller" he had been reading, the clerks glanced up from the sporting page, business men stopped making mental calculations about their last deal or the next one. And then the train slowed down and the doors slid and it was all over. But that little child had been the Christ child of the elevated train. He had been saying with an eloquence none could resist, Be of good cheer, God is not dead; There is neither Jew nor Gentile but all are one in Christ; Blessed are the pure in heart.

Let us stand with the shepherds before the manger until God's love possess us, until all the "middle walls" be broken down, until every cheap purpose, every superficial and selfish ambition, every unclean and unworthy thought be purged away at this Christmastide.

Richmond, Ind.

CHRISTMAS IN HEAVEN

By MARY C. WOODY

However far away heaven may seem, the angels broke through at the advent of Jesus and sang the first Christmas anthem. The audience was the humble people of earth, but none could receive it with more implicit faith. The shepherds went to find the babe in the manger and repeated the heavenly music—"Glory to God in the Highest." The writer to the Hebrews says, "Which things the angels desired to look into and were not able." Or in earthly language he represents them standing on tiptoe and craning their necks; but they could not see into the depths of sin and loss to which their Prince had come on his mission.

But prophecy had taught and we believe.

"We have heard of him whom the heavens adore;

Before whom hosts of them fall.

How he left the choires and anthems above,

For earth in its wailings and woes,

To suffer the shame and pain of the cross,

And die for the life of his foes.

O, Prince of the noble, oh sufferer divine,

What sorrow and sacrifice equal to thine!"

When his thirty three years were finished of sorrow and shame, His prayer to the Father has a touch of a homesick child as he pleads "Glorify thou me with the glory I had with Thee before the world was." The advent so humble, in the country subject to a foe, has left its stamp on time, and the whole civilized world writes Anno Domini; and Christmas is the happy home-coming day for the household everywhere. Truly is it a joyful day if Jesus is the welcome guest. "Oh, make my heart thy dwelling place" instead of the manger.

The Missing Ones

The light of Christmas 1916 will fall on many a vacancy. The center of gladness is now invisible. These have passed through the veil to the glory which our vision cannot reach. In tens of thousands of homes no Christmas joy of earth will enter; but above shines the star in the East, the bright and morning star.

"And we can but know He loves us so,

There could be no mistake."

In many homes last year it was baby's first Christmas, but epidemics have swept city and country and the little ones have fallen asleep. The Good Shepherd has carried them to eternal Christmas joy and gently leads the parents on. How quiet this Christmas Day without their happy voices: but the joy in which they mingle where "their angels do always behold the face of the Father" is beyond any joy on earth. "There'll be no sorrow there."

Whatever may have come to our homes every household can join in the chorus sung by the heavenly choir on the first Christmas morning—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."

In the analysis of grief it seems cruel to say its bitterest pang is self-interest and regret. We thank our Father for the dear ones he has given, but consecration must follow. "Our gifts are ours to make them thine." "Of thine own have we given back to Thee."

A noted minister who had lost his little son said; "I planned to be absent on Christmas Day because I could not bear to miss my boy from our accustomed festivities, but this seemed cowardly and I took courage to share Christmas in grief with my family. The morning came, around the breakfast table all were quiet, when my daughter said, 'Oh, this is Harry's first Christmas in Heaven.' And then the little one spoke and with such a look of surprise exclaimed, 'Why, sister, it is Christmas every day in heaven.'"

GLADYS MOORE'S DREAM

By RUWONE.

Gladys Moore was a merry, kind-hearted little girl, with a host of friends. She had very little money to spend, but usually she didn't seem to care for that. She didn't even care that she most always had to wear her sister's dresses made over for herself. "We can have better material," she would laughingly say, "and nobody notices little me much, anyway."

But when Christmas was coming it was a different matter. She dearly loved to give presents. And there were so many, many, many lovely things to buy, if only she had the money.

"But I haven't got it, I just haven't, so that's settled. But—I know—there's a whole year after this Christmas before the next and I'll see if there isn't something I do have that I can use. My fingers shall be ten little fairies, and I'll be as kind and obliging as possible, and we'll see that money isn't the whole thing."

In January, she persuaded her father to buy three yards of linen at a linen sale for a few cents. And out of this she made three towels for her mother. She had taken sewing lessons at school and had learned to make the daintiest stitches. So she carefully hemmed the towels, embroidering some simple design in the ends. And when they were done she neatly pressed, folded, wrapped and laid them away in her own private drawer.

Her friends gave her pieces of silks, satin, velvet and embroidery silk, left over from work they had done. And it is amazing into what beautiful and useful things her fairies shaped these.

Her school and home work took almost all her time. But she did make a little money doing errands and little odd jobs between times. So that by the 23rd of December every single thing was finished.

Her presents for her uncles, aunts and cousins living at a distance had been sent a week ago. And the others were lying in her drawer in neat little packages, all ready to give.

She drew her father's large chair before the fire and snuggled into it with a sigh of relief. The chair was soft and the room was warm and cozy and her head gradually slid down until it rested on the arm of the chair.

Then suddenly the house was full of people. It was her birthday and all her uncles, aunts and cousins had come.

Everyone brought boxes and packages. And they contained beautiful things. After awhile she found they were exchanging these gifts with one another. No one gave her anything and they seemed not to want her about.

Was she mistaken, she would find her mother and ask, "Mamma, whose birthday is this?" "Yours, Gladys, of course." But her mamma left her and joined the others. Her mamma, who always sympathised with her in every joy and grief, left her alone on her own birthday, and went to have a good time with the others.

Gladys could bear no more, "Here they are," she exclaimed, "pretending to celebrate my birthday. And they don't even want me about, and they haven't given me a thing. It's just as mean as it can be!" And she burst out crying like her heart would break.

"Why, whatever is the matter, Gladys dear?" And she opened her eyes to find her mother standing beside her.

"Is this my birthday, mamma?" she asked bewildered.

"Why, no, dear, your birthday comes in June."

"Aren't there a lot of people here?" "Just you and I and baby is all," answered her mother. "You must have been dreaming."

Then Gladys told her dream. "And it did hurt me so to have you all act in that way. Isn't it a birthday at all?"

"What is Christmas, dear?"

"Why, mamma, it is Jesus' birthday! and I haven't made one thing for him."

"I never thought of a present for him. And no one seems to be remembering him. Why, mamma, we're treating him just as I dreamed you all were treating me. Pretending to celebrate his birthday, we forgot all about him. It's a shame, an awful shame! And don't you think it hurts him, mamma?"

"Next Christmas I'll get his gifts ready first of all. But, mamma, how can I give to him?"

"Whatever we do to spread His gospel or to give pleasure or comfort to others, if we do it in his name, we do it unto him."

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name shall not lose his reward.

THE CHURCHES OF AMERICA ON THE KING'S HIGHWAY

There is more than fanciful suggestion in the fact that the quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, held in St. Louis, December 6-11, occurred in a church located on the King's Highway. Here were thirty of the evangelical denominations of America, brought together through their representatives by one supreme, unifying purpose, made to travel together on the same road, toward the common goal. Not so long ago, these Protestant organizations, in search of the latter, were threading their separate and tortuous paths over hill and vale and through wilderness country, their paths often crossing and tangling in bewildering maze, so bewildering that the world could hardly judge of the general direction of travel, if the churches themselves were even conscious of it.

In the great achievement of the Federal Council, the identity of the constituent denominations has in no wise been affected. Any tendency in this direction was distinctly disavowed by President Shailer Mathews in his address, as improbable and indeed undesirable. The old program was common action through unity of belief, and it failed. The new program is co-operative union through common action, and the Christian Church challenges the world as never before. It is thus that the churches of Christ have at last, on the very eve of the quadri-centennial of the Protestant Reformation, found the great common road. It was with much appropriateness, therefore, that on the day of assembling, the delegates broke out in song, "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord." In truth, the churches of Christ were marching together on the King's Highway, that leads to the Kingdom of God on earth.

In a word the Federal Council expresses the fellowship and unity of the Christian Church, brings it into devotional fellowship and united service, and secures a larger combined influence for the churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of life. Through its various commissions covering every phase of religious activity, it acts first as a vast agency of gathering information, and then as a clearing house for diffusing it, and, second, through these commissions, with facts in hand, it offers a program or programs of common procedure. It is thus an efficient directing agency.

Probably the most striking and impressive function of the Council is that of expressing cogently and effectively, in times of crisis, the voice of the Christian Churches of America. An almost sensational example of this was given the members when it was divulged that the recent expression of the German Chancellor before the Reichstag in favor of a world peace league, was the direct reply of Bethmann-Hollweg to the wireless appeal made to him by Dr. Chas. S. McFarland, in the name of the Federal Council, as its general secretary. In a similar way, Dean Shailer Mathews, president of the Council, accompanied by Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, made a visit to Japan as the official representative of the Council to express to that country the fellowship and good will of the Christian churches of America. The Federal Council is thus able to do for its constituent bodies what the Five Years Meeting has come to accomplish for Friends in America. It can speak with an authority and conviction that carry weight, and bring results otherwise unattainable.

But more immediately as to the spirit and work of the St. Louis meeting: Two great passions dominated the Council from beginning to end, but so closely did they run together that they were expressed in almost interchangeable terms. Neither was considered without the other. They were—evangelism and the application of Christianity to every human need. A clearer statement would probably be that the one gripping passion of the Council was that of evangelism—individual first and then social evangelism. To those who have feared that the social message might dim the individual one in our modern zeal, the spirit of the Council should be a comfort and a reassurance. No note was more clarion than that of the primal need of personal regeneration, both as the great objective and as the cornerstone of all religious activity. But always coupled therewith was the insistent plea that the religion of Jesus Christ, to be convincing, must be shown to be big enough and powerful enough to reach men in their relations to the every day, work-a-day world.

To meet the first demand, the Commission on Evangelism has planned a great evangelistic campaign to cover the whole country, as the expression of the desire of the Federal Council for an aggressive evangelism. This does not mean necessarily the tabernacle type of campaign by the professional evangelist. The method of the simultaneous evangelistic campaign, conducted by resident pastors which is meeting with such permanent results and favor in many cities, was brought forcibly to the attention of the Council. The means and method are optional—but evangelistic a church must be, or it must cease to be evangelical, it was urged.

The same men who plead for personal evangelism, as earnestly urged upon the church that it must grapple understandingly and sympathetically with the social problems which are pressing for solution. Conditions which mar human life, retarding the coming of Christ's Kingdom, demand Christian attention. "Let my people go, that they may serve me," must be the ultimatum of God, expressed through His Church, to the forces of materialism and greed. In this connection, Professor Edward A. Steiner stood before the Council with the holy zeal of a prophet of God, his tongue touched with a live coal from the altar, when he declared the United States to be God's last great experiment, in the realization of a real and vital Christian brotherhood.

The application of this dominant spirit of the Council may be inferred from a brief reference to its various departments of activity. The expression of human brotherhood and sympathy was by no means confined to America. In fact the mind of the Council seemed continually turning to the old world struggle, either in sympathy and love for those involved or with grave concern for its effects upon us as a people. As to the first, the Council has done much toward furnishing relief for European and Eastern sufferers, and is still active in this direction. Some time ago, General Secretary McFarland visited the belligerent nations, representing American Christianity in behalf of peace. The Council took action looking toward the calling of a general conference of churches at the time and place of the meeting of the peace congress of the warring powers, as an aid toward bringing about real Christian fellowship.

In the second place, and even more important, loomed large the question of the results of the Great War upon America. Secretary McFarland expressed his conviction from personal observation that the moral effects of the war will be more serious in this country than in Europe. At the time of the report of the Commission on International Justice and Good Will, Wm. J. Bryan, who was a delegate to the Council, was introduced and made in behalf of peace, one of the most eloquent and convincing speeches of the week. "Oh, ye of little faith," was his text, in showing that the Church has so little faith in applying Christ's principle of love. "There are just two philosophies in the world—that of Pilate and that of Christ; the philosophy of force and that of love." Mr. Bryan declared that the reply of the boon companion to his friend in the gutter, must not be our nation's message to Europe—"I can't help you up, but I'll lie down with you." He expressed regret that our Government had not seen fit to offer its services in bringing a close to the war and urged that the churches of America should so act. "The Government," he said, "represents but the average ideals and purposes—the Church represents those of Christ." No clearer expression and more thoroughgoing of Friends' principles on this historic question could possibly have been given—in fact, the speaker went beyond the position taken by many Friends. The writer later told Mr. Bryan that it was the feeling of our delegation that he be elected to honorary membership with us, which overture he laughingly acknowledged, with a word of appreciation of the stand Friends have always taken on the question.

Mr. Bryan spoke with equal decision when the question of temperance was under consideration. With eloquent vehemence he attacked the liquor business and outlined his offensive campaign against it, which he is undertaking in his own party, encouraging all others to do the same in any way that offers. The Commission on Temperance, after summing up the progress that has been made, issued a call for the final drive against the liquor cohorts. All agencies of education and agitation were welcomed and urged. It suggests that the causes of patriotism and temperance be linked together in our national observance on July 4th.

The vital questions before the Council can be merely mentioned in a general article of this nature. In close harmony with the concern for peace and good will was the great challenge of foreign missions, made doubly essential by the immediate necessity of creating a new world unity. No less important was the field of home missions, having to do with work among the Negroes, the Indians, Spanish-speaking peoples, our immigrants, and including evangelization of cities and rural regions.

A masterful report of the whole field of Christian Education reviewed the great progress made in synthesizing our educational agencies and processes, looking toward the realization of Christian democracy. The Commission on Social Service presented the practical problems of unemployment, housing, recreation, commercialized vice, status of women and industrial questions generally, with a specific program of social welfare.

Gifford Pinchot presented an interesting and important report from the Commission on Church and Country Life, based on intensive investigation. Closely connected with this was the report on federated movements in town and state, dealing particularly with the desirability of combination of church forces in towns. Other subjects considered were those of Family Life and Sunday observance.

Thus are the Churches of Christ in America linked together in close co-operation, working out the great problems of Christian civilization, under the leadership of our best Christian statesmanship.

Approximately 330 delegates were in attendance, the Methodist Episcopal church leading with 44, other denominations following in order: Presbyterian Church U. S. A. 34, National Baptist Convention 28, Northern Baptist Convention 21, Disciples of Christ 21, M. E. South 21, Congregational 20, African M. E. 14, United Brethren 12, Protestant Episcopal 10, Reformed Church in the U. S. A. 9, German Evangelical Synod 9, Colored M. E. 8, Methodist Protestant 8, Reformed Church in America 7, Presbyterian in the U. S. 7, A. M. E. Zion 7, Friends 6, Evangelical Association 6, United Presbyterian 6, Christian 5, Mennonite of North America 5, United Evangelical 4, Seventh Day Baptist 4, Free Baptist 4, Lutheran General Synod 3, Welsh Presbyterian 3, Moravian 2, Reformed Episcopal 2, Reformed Presbyterian 1. It will be noted that 21 or more than two-thirds of the denominations had 10 or less representatives in the Council. There were 29 negroes in the body, fine representatives of their race, with some very able men among them. The one tense moment of the Council was occasioned by the expression of a difference of opinion on the part of two Southern brothers, one white and the other black, as to the race situation in the South. Even here, however, the uniform courtesy and deference which marked the proceedings of the Council, prevailed.

The representatives of the Five Years Meeting, appointed by the Executive Committee, were: Mary S. Paige, East Lynn, Mass.; Harriet S. Peelle, Sabina, Ohio; Ross A. Hadley, Richmond, Indiana; Willard O. Trueblood, Indianapolis, Indiana; President David M. Edwards, Oskaloosa, Iowa; Walter C. Woodward, Richmond, Indiana. For two reasons, at least, this delegation was distinctive: It was the only one in which the majority were laymen, and it included the only women members of the Council. Despite the fact that the expression "gentlemen of the Council," was occasionally heard, much courtesy was shown our women Friends, many expressing to them appreciation of their presence, with the prophecy that their number would materially increase in the near future.

Other Friends were in attendance as members of the following commissions: Religious Education—President Robert L. Kelly, Richmond, Indiana and Richard Haworth, Earlham, Iowa; Evangelism—Ellison R. Purdy, Wilmington, Ohio; Church Federations—Morton C. Pearson, Indianapolis, Indiana.

For the next quadrennium, Joseph John Mills, of Pasadena, California, was chosen as Vice President of the Federal Council representing Friends. On the Executive Committee of the Council, President David M. Edwards, representing the ministry, with Willard O. Trueblood as alternate, and Walter C. Woodward, representing the laity, with Harriet Peelle, as alternate, were selected.

In an issue soon will appear a symposium of impressions of the Meetings of the Federal Council by the other Friends in attendance.

WERE I A MATCH

By MEAD A. KELSEY

(The following meditation was prompted by the sight of an unburned match lying on the sidewalk, unfitted for use by the dampness of the night, its ruin presently to be completed by the trampling of passing feet.)

If I were a match I would hate to miss the end for which I was intended, even though that service might mean my own finish. To be dropped upon the sidewalk, or in any place, and have the vital spark within me destroyed before it had ever been kindled into flame would be an intolerable thought; and it would be equally intolerable to think of lying for years in a box, be it ever so nice and in ever so elegant surroundings, and never be of any use. I think that I would get green with envy of my charred little sister that had touched the gas jet into brilliance, or the lamp-wick into flame. Me thinks I should cry, "O let my life go out in flame!"

But again, when I gave my life I would hate to find myself at the end of a cigar or cigarette, or over some old pipe. I know that if there could be any consciousness after that I would forever feel humiliated. I am sure, were I a match, that the cry of my heart would be, "Let me do some good thing!" I would know, of course, that I could not cook a meal, nor could I make the steam in the boiler of a great engine, but I could start the fire in the range that would cook the meal, or the fire in the furnace that would raise the steam, and just to have the consciousness that my little flame had started something worth while in the world would make me happy forever; or if a match did not live in another world I would go to the dumps happy.

And then, if I were a match, I would not like to be a sulphur match,—one of those that choke people with their fumes when they do go off. We know that there are some people like that,—people who when they would do good do it in such a way that those about them can hardly stand it. I am glad for one that they do not have to put sulphur into matches any more, and I am glad, too, that we do not have to have it in our lives.

And now, just one thing more: If I were a match I would not want to be one of those that could be struck on any place that the caprice of a man might choose, or that accident might decree, but I would rather be one that would respond to just one prepared surface. That would insure safety and guard against waste. I think you know what I mean. God has given me my life and then He has prepared Jesus Christ to draw this life into flame in order that I may be a light in the world. This was what Paul yearned for when he cried, "That I may know Him and the power of His resurrection." And he knew Him, and so may we. This is the way of happiness and there is no other.

PLANNING FOR CHRISTMAS

With the advent of the Christmas season of good cheer, plans for decorations and luncheons fill the mind of the hostess. The woods, with their beautiful greenery, offer their treasures for decorative purposes, and trailing pine, laurel and evergreens are found in abundance and may be had for the gathering. The partridge berry and the bitter-sweet give a glow of coloring, while pine cones, holly and mistletoe are always appropriate for this season.

It is an accepted fact that the color scheme for this season should be red and green. Let that, then, be carefully carried out, not only in table decoration but also in the menu. While the dishes can not always be made in the proper colors, yet a touch of holly can be added which is symbolic of the day.

There is no need for elaborate decorations, and the prudent housewife can find numerous ways to beautify her house and table which will be within her means. Let the dishes, also, be simple and easy to prepare.—Ex.

CHRISTMAS RECESSIONAL, 1916

By B. F. CAMPBELL, WEATHERLY, PA.

When your life is filled with joy,
And your heart knows no despair;
When within you peace abides,
Life of faith, and trust, and prayer;

When your eyes have love in them,
And your spirit kind and meek;
When your voice you dare to raise,
Will of God in Christ you seek;

When your mind is free to think,
And your ears are quick to hear;
When your feet are swift to bear,
Messages of love and cheer;

Then to you this Christmas Day
Bright and real and true appears,
For the Christ is born within,— Blessed fact of all the years.
—Exchange.

Self-indulgence is the besetting sin of times; but if you long to be a strong, athletic Christian, you must count the cost and renounce the things of the flesh. It will cost you the pulling up of some old favorite sins by the roots and the cutting loose from some entangling alliances, and some sharp conflicts with the tempter; it will cost you the submitting of your will to the will of Christ; but you gain more than you ever give up.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

WHO'S WHO WITH OUR SECRETARIES

We would like to introduce to readers of the Young Friends page, the leaders of the Young Friends' Movement. These Friends thoroughly believe in the Young People's Movement and through their untiring efforts it is being shaped into an achievement unparalleled in the church.

We would introduce to your first, W. O. Trueblood, Chairman of the Board.

WILLARD O. TRUEBLOOD.

Willard O. Trueblood of Indianapolis is pastor of one of the largest churches among Friends. If any one has ever been pastor of a large city meeting he will understand how busy Mr. Trueblood must be. But he is never too busy to give time to the Young People's work. He is a young people's pastor of not only Indianapolis, but of the whole country. He has always been a leader of young people. On the farm, in high school, college, graduate school, as a professor and finally as a pastor he has remained at the front in young people's work. Is it any wonder that Indianapolis young Friends love him and through him have contributed more liberally to the Young Friends' work than has any other meeting in the country? But not only does he devote time to the Young Friends' work. He is secretary of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, president of the Ministerial Union of Indianapolis, clerk of Western Yearly Meeting and Young Friends Lecturer in many Yearly Meetings. How can he do so much, you ask? That is the puzzle. Guess, if you can. He is our leader. Under his administration we shall succeed. Let's hail him with the chautauqua salute. Everybody together! Thank you!

APPRECIATION FROM CALIFORNIA

My dear Friend: I certainly am enjoying with good appreciation the excellent work of the Young Friends activities. It holds in so large a measure the possibilities of the future of our church. It stands more and more for loyalty to our church as a definite organization. Something that other churches, state officials and voters can find and reckon with. Activity with right ideals and principles count for both church and state. It helps to fill our dual capacity as Christian citizens.

Signed:

An Interested Friend.

THE YOUNG FRIENDS' OFFICE

The office of the Young Friends' Board will locate in Richmond with the other Boards, some time during the year 1917. Before we can do this, we must have in hand some extra funds with which to buy a full office equipment. Here is a chance for your Christian Endeavor Society, Fellowship Group, or Study Class, to make a splendid investment. Would you not like to know that you had a life-long interest in this work, by helping us set up this office? We are paying rent for a typewriter; would you like to buy this for the office, and save this rent?—$55 will do it. Then there are tables, chairs, files, postal scales, waste basket, and ever so many smaller things necessary, that are needed. We will be glad to use your money for any of these things that you may indicate, and mark them so, which will be a real monument to your organization.

If you are interested, send to us for further particulars, and blanks, or send the money with instructions as to where you desire it used. Send all correspondence to the Office Secretary, Dunreith, Indiana, and it will receive prompt attention.

RALLY DAY REPORTS

New England

Bolton, Mass.—"We are a small country meeting, with a majority of young people and children. Offering, $6."

Iowa

Lynnville—"We had a very profitable day. Offering, $4.50."

Minneapolis—Offering, $10.25.

Indiana

Greensboro and Clear Spring—"We had a fine program and our church was packed. We were well pleased with the results of the meeting. Offering, $3.00."

Barber's Mills and Pleasant View—"There was a good attendance at each Meeting and the majority of our young people had some part on the program. The event was a success at each place. Although we have no young people's organization, our young people are doing splendid work in Sabbath School and Church. One class plans to send a box to the Friends Rescue Home at Columbus, Ohio. We hope to be able to send two or more delegates to the conference the coming summer. Offerings, Barber's Mills, $1.02. Pleasant View, $1.20."

Traverse City, Mich.—"We had a profitable meeting, and we as young people are willing to help in this great work at any time. Offering, $1.75."

Chester—Offering, $2.43.

Fairmount and Little Ridge—"We had a very interesting and profitable time, using your program as a basis for the evening's program. Offering in basket collections, both morning and evening, $16.30."

Winchester—"We had a splendid program, given by the Christian Endeavorers. The Young Friends' Ambulance Unit and Present Day Message of Quakerism was presented by John Peacock and Miriam Mendenhall. On the wall was the motto, "The Entire Church at Its Entire Task. Offering, $3.10."

Western

Georgetown—Offering, $4.25. Elwood—Offering, $1.45. West Middleton—Offering, $1.00.

Henderson Chapel—"We partly followed the suggested program and arranged several tableaux showing various phases of Friends history. Offering, $3.18."

Kokomo—"Young Friends' Day was observed at Union St. Church, the program sent out by the Young Friends' Board being used. Offering, (reported last week.) We have thirty-five active members of Christian Endeavor and every member is a contributor for our Foreign Mission Fields this year. Can any other Society do better? We are trying to bear that $60,000 on our minds so as to do our part. Our pastor, Lewis Stout, puts something about the world call into every message."

A TESTIMONY MEETING IN AFRICA

We had a good C. E. meeting with the women and girls yesterday. I will give you the gist of two of the testimonies, which I am sure you will enjoy better than anything I might say. This was from quite a strong Christian, we think. "I am glad to be here today because you know I have been ill for many months and had not the strength to come. But I want to tell you that God stood by me and helped me. When I saw I was getting bad sick I told my husband that when my relatives came and wanted to sacrifice for me he must utterly refuse as I would not have strength to refuse, being so weak. He did refuse, and oh! how they reviled him. They said he just wanted me to die so he could get another wife and also many other things, but he was firm and we trusted in God and now I am well. I want to praise Him today." The other was from a girl about sixteen years old who fell into sin two months ago. "I am still sorrowing because of my sins which you all know about. My heart is rather hard and I don't feel happy as I used to, but you know I have confessed my sin before you and God and am praying to Him to forgive and fill my heart with love again."

While we are having the men's and women's C. E., Howard and Paul have a little service with the smaller boys. They have been doing this for three months, taking turns giving the Bible story. So now since Clara Ford has come back to school, she has a service with the little girls at the same time. Pray for them.

WHAT CHRISTMAS BROUGHT AT GIBARA, CUBA

Christmas, last year, brought a new experience to some of our people and especially to a few of our Cuban young men.

But first notice some of the difficulties we had to meet in preparing our Christmas exercises. For one thing, there was no new literature in Spanish so we had to translate what we used or to rearrange what had been given the year before—a task almost as difficult as translating. Added to this was the difficulty in securing rehearsals. School holds until 4:30 or 5:00 for some of the classes. Little could be done after so late an hour. And even after the parts were assigned, several had to drop out because of sickness or a death in the family. Substitutes were constantly in demand.

At last the obstacles were overcome and the meeting house, on the evening of December 24th, was comfortably filled. Seventy-five children and young people took part in the exercises. It was a delightful scene, the attentive, wondering audience, and the animated, gaily-dressed children, who went through their parts with really surprising skill. Something of the spirit of the occasion and of the impression made was shown by the offering of $28.23, which was willingly contributed.

The best part of it all was Christmas afternoon when several of the children and workers went out to distribute money and flowers to those who were sick or in need. About twenty-three families were visited and a small gift was taken to each of the eleven inmates of the asylum. In several homes, the children repeated their parts in the program for the benefit of those who had not been able to come out to the entertainment. In other homes, a hymn was sung.

Late in the afternoon, after the last of the money had been given out, a few of the young men found a poor family in great need. Somehow they had been entirely overlooked by the other workers. Their destitute condition so appealed to the young men whose hearts had been awakened by the Christmas spirit that they went down into their own almost empty pockets and gave the family a small offering. It was hard to tell which was happier that evening—the poor family or their benefactors who, through what they did in Christ's name, came closer that day to the Master Himself.

THE TRUTH ABOUT MEXICO

Friends have spent many thousands of dollars in Mexico. Baptists, Presbyterians, Disciples of Christ, Methodists, and others expect Friends to carry the Gospel to the people of parts of Tamaulipas and of San Luis Potosi. Our sister denominations propose similarly to work in other parts of the Mexican Republic so that every part may be reached.

Two weeks hence there will appear in The American Friend the first of a series of articles on Mexico. The title will be "Some Facts Friends Should Know About Mexico and Our Missions There."

The Board of Missions invites all Friends to look for these articles and read them. Will you not also bring the articles to the attention of those of your acquaintances who might otherwise fail to see them?

"THE BLACK COMMANDMENTS"

In the December "Atlantic Monthly," there is an article, "The Black Commandments," by Jean Kenyon MacKenzie. The following incident is no more interesting nor suggestive than a score of others to be found in it.

"Is there a person of God in this town?" I asked of a little company in the street of an obscure village. "I am a person of God," said a woman, pressing forward and looking at me with an almost anguished timidity and with a most passionate appeal. Her husband, nearby and leaning on his spear, observed her with affectionate and contemptuous tolerance.

"Not so," said he to me, "she is not a person of God, but she desires to be; she has learned a commandment,"

Mexico Work Illustrated THE SERIES OF MEXICO PICTURES WILL BE READY JANUARY 15TH

There will be twelve pictures and one map, and thirteen descriptions—one for each picture and one to interpret the map.

All will be placed in a stout manilla envelope. The price for each set of pictures will be 25c, or 20c when ten or more are sent to one address.

We suggest that Bible School teachers use one of the pictures each Sunday in their classes as a basis for missionary instruction.

This precious possession had made that timid black woman bold to speak to the white woman in the presence of contemptuous men, and with her conscious ignorance heavy upon her.

The ten commandments, I say, are an emancipation. They are an emancipation from fear, that deep, sleepless fear of the supernatural which is the great darkness of a people without God in the world.

BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD Elementary Department

It is most gratifying to look back over the year, and note the splendid achievements made in all lines of Bible School work. Especially is this true in the Elementary Division. There has been a gain of nineteen schools having a Cradle Roll. Several more have been added to this number since Yearly Meeting. The annual report of our Secretary shows a gain of 260 in the Cradle Roll. Every school should have this Department, as no other, under the careful supervision of a wise and tactful Superintendent, can so bring the home in touch with the church. Mothers especially, and often whole families, have been won to Christ and the church through the influence of the Cradle Roll Superintendent, because of the interest shown in the little ones in the home.

There is a growing interest in Graded Lessons, even though some have failed to appreciate their value and after trying them for a time have gone back to the Uniform lessons. The International Course of Graded lessons is a response to the request from a multitude of Elementary teachers feeling the need of a course of Bible Study adapted to provide for each pupil the truth he needs at his age to quicken his spiritual life and help him know God and live as a child of the Heavenly Father. Hence the object and the purpose of the Graded lessons are to meet the spiritual needs of the pupil, which broadly stated, are these:

1. To know God as he has revealed himself in the Bible, in Nature, in the heart of man, and in Jesus Christ.
2. To exercise toward God the Father and his Son, our Lord and Saviour, trust, obedience, and worship.
3. To know and to do our duty to others.
4. To know and to do our duty to ourselves.

Teachers in the Elementary grades who have carried classes through the first and second years, have seen the child mind open to the thought of God and the child heart respond in love and gratitude to the heavenly Father, whose love and care are emphasized so strongly in the beginners and Primary grades.

To be the Bible School teacher of a young child means to be a vital factor in his life, not only because of the truths taught, but because of what he is to the child. It is therefore not only an opportunity but a rare privilege to be a teacher of young children. For to have this privilege means in many cases to be the first to tell them of God and Christ and Life Eternal, and eventually to lead them to accept Christ as their personal savior.

ANNA H. SWALLUM.

BIBLE SCHOOL NOTES

Much credit is due our Field Secretary for what has been accomplished in the Bible School work of the Yearly Meeting the past year. With his untiring effort and zeal we may well expect a rich harvest of results when another year shall have gone by. A splendid report of his work since Yearly Meeting will be found in this issue.

Earlham reports the purchase of a Bible School library of twenty-five volumes, and a three-section book case in which to keep the books. These books were wisely selected so as to meet the needs of all of the departments of the school. The plan is to loan the books to all who wish to read them. This library is especially adapted to the needs of the boys and girls, who will have free access to its use. Earlham is one of the progressive schools and expects to extend the graded work to more of their classes in the near future.

The Hubbard Bible School, though among the smallest in the Yearly Meeting, has a fully graded Elementary Department. A class of ten Primary pupils was promoted this year, and the first of October began the graded Junior work. We also have a Cradle Roll and small Home Department.

The New Providence Bible School has been greatly interrupted in its work the past year. In the early spring there were two cases of scarlet fever in the neighborhood and later three cases of infantile paralysis. For some time very few children attended any public gathering. At the present time the attendance and interest is about normal. The Christmas program has usually been given by the Primary Department, but this year the young people are going to give the Christmas Pageant, "Bethlehem."

A few weeks ago the Beginners Department held a birthday party in the gymnasium at the school building. Parents and young people were invited and requested to bring a penny for each year that they were years old. The invitation was to attend their own birthday party. A great many responded to the invitation and a very pleasant evening was spent. The teachers served refreshments. All those whose birthdays were in the same month constituted a family and ate together. We use the graded lessons in the Beginners, Primary and Junior grades.

RECENT TRIP THROUGH WINNE- SHIEK QUARTER

Our Field Secretary, Ora W. Carrell, returned a few days ago from a most profitable trip through Winneshie Quarter. He first went by way of Chicago to Valton, Wisconsin. Viola Smith, the Secretary of our Bible School Board, has been supplying the Meeting there as pastor for the past few weeks so the Conferences were arranged for and conducted jointly by her and our Field Secretary. The general plan of the work was a special conference in the afternoon and an inspirational Public meeting at night. The three great lines of Christian activity—Bible School Work, Missions, and C. E. Work, were presented in turn.

The people of Valton were very appreciative and eager to learn of new methods of carrying on their church work. Viola Smith is doing splendid work there and her messages and presence are greatly appreciated. As a result of the work done she writes that the Cradle Roll and Home Departments have been organized, each with their Superintendent and that special Superintendents of Missions and Temperance have also been appointed. Definite plans are now being made to organize a Young Married People's Class. Together with the pastor and workers of the Wesleyan Methodist Sabbath School in the village, a Teacher Training Class has been organized with more than twenty-five persons in all who have given in their names for membership in the Class. God is wonderfully blessing the people of Valton!

Closing his work at Valton, the Field Secretary went by way of La Crosse to Hesper, Iowa, where a similar line of work was carried on. A very profitable Bible School Conference was held on Friday evening, when the various points of our Bible School Standard were presented and discussed. The Secretary remained over Sunday, presenting the other lines of his work and visiting each class in their Bible School. A special Worker's Conference was called to meet the following week at which time definite plans were to be made for extending the work of their School.

From Hesper the Secretary went to Kedron, Minnesota, where a joint Bible School and Missionary Conference was held. A goodly number were present and all seemed greatly interested in the work.

In every Meeting visited the people were most cordial and so appreciative for the visit of a worker of the Yearly Meeting. Removed as they are from the other Meetings of the Yearly Meeting, and even from one another, the people feel themselves apart in many ways, yet none are more loyal than they to the real work of the Yearly Meeting nor more eager to know of what is being done. The Field Secretary feels that this was one of the most profitable trips that he has taken and reports that excellent work is being done in all of the Meetings visited.

Our Field Secretary has recently visited the Bible Schools at Oskaloosa, North "H" Street, Grinnell, Wright and Searsboro. Special Conferences were held at Wright, Highland and Searsboro.

He was called to Des Moines on Nov. 29th, to attend a meeting of the denominational representatives of the state to confer with W. D. Stem, the State Secretary of the S. S. Association, concerning the State-wide Ingathering and Enlisting Campaign which is to be carried on during the coming spring months. Eleven representatives of denominations were present at this meeting.

AT HONEY CREEK, IOWA

On Thanksgiving Day all-day services were held in the Honey Creek Church, which was built in 1855 and has been in use ever since. This was a farewell service as well as a Thanksgiving one, as the old house is soon to give place to the new one which is near completion. Ministers who have served as pastors were invited to be present and also neighboring meetings. Isaac N. Rich, pastor at Marshalltown, gave an impressive message in the forenoon.

A bounteous dinner was served and a social hour enjoyed. The afternoon session was opened with devotional services conducted by Clinton Morris. Elkanah Reece, the oldest member, gave interesting incidents of the pioneer days in which the church was built. He emphasized the thought that the settlement was formed, the church organized, and the house built under the leadership of the Lord, and will prosper only if the members remain true to the gospel truth as our early forefathers did.

Ross G. Reece, a younger member, spoke of the present condition of the church and its future possibilities, likening it to the church in Philadelphia, Rev. 3:7. He spoke of our transient condition and the open door of opportunity set before us. He dwelt upon the importance of the social side along with the spiritual. Another very important and crowning factor of this session was the number who gave testimony to having been saved in the old church. We felt that a very pleasant and profitable day had been spent, and with grateful hearts we sang, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

AT DES MOINES, IOWA

Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held here December 1-3. Several ministers were present and there was a good attendance from the other Monthly Meetings. Ancil E. Ratcliff of Fairmount, Indiana, was present on Friday night and Saturday. On Friday evening he addressed the Brotherhood Meeting and on Saturday afternoon he gave a short talk mainly to the members of the rural churches. Questions were asked and he replied to them in an interesting manner. His work in the Quarterly Meeting was profitable to all.

Charles O. Whitely, superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work, also attended the sessions and all were profited by the excellent sermons he preached on Sunday morning and evening.

Professor David Wright of the State Teachers' College preached at the morning meeting here on December 10th. He is a member of Des Moines meeting and his sermons were appreciated.

BOOK NOTICE

"The Lamb of God," by William P. Pinkham, Huntington Park, California; 231 pages; price $1.25.

The book is a new edition, presented in twenty-two chapters, with appendices from A to L. The book is designed to set forth clearly and helpfully the hope of the Christian and deals with the fundamentals of Christian truth. It is directed largely to the young, and calls for their prayerful consideration of their position in the Church and their relationship to the things of the Spirit. It is evangelic in spirit and in tone. In closing the introduction, the author says: "Looking to Jesus, may the reader of this book find his conceptions of redemption grow more clear, and his faith in Christ as a Saviour forever settled."

Of the original work, Dr. James E. Rhoads said:

"Let me express my strong sense of the ability with which it is written, the evidence it gives of study of the Bible and of reading on Biblical interpretation, and, above all, my high appreciation of what some have imagined impracticable, the harmony it sets forth between the substitutional nature of the atonement and the offices of our blessed Lord as the true light that lighteth every man." Then, after some suggestions, "I do hope thou wilt publish thy book."

CHURCH AT WORK

Muncie, Indiana—Richard R. Newby, pastor of Des Moines, Iowa, helped the pastor of Muncie Meeting in a series of revivals, which began November 27th and closed December 10th. These meetings were well planned. Cottage prayer meetings were held at three different points each night during the week before the meetings commenced. Then the Sabbath before the Evangelists arrived, forty members of the church took lunch in the dining room of the church, after which the pastor instructed the group on making a fellowship, every-membership canvass. These went to the home of every family of Friends and to the homes of attenders. The meetings were well-advertised and the first meeting showed the results of the prayers and the work of the membership.

We hesitate about counting numbers, but are safe in saying that there were many conversions and a large number that consecrated themselves to serve more loyally the Christ. There were also several renewals. Several have made applications to unite with the meeting.

Some of the outstanding features were the men's mass meeting, in which a number of men were converted, two giving up the tobacco habit. Two children's meetings were conducted by the pastor in which the boys and girls felt they were a part of the meeting and pledged themselves to serve the Lord.

Richard Newby's teachings were of great benefit to all the members the church who heard, and the meeting will be richer by far in things spiritual because of his coming. Four shop meetings were held, reaching about five hundred people. These were of great benefit to the working men and women. Many desired that the meetings go on, but this seemed impossible; however, the spirit of evangelism is with us and we plan to have the good work go on.

Spiceland, Indiana—The work of the young people here was reorganized early in the Fall. The work is growing in interest with an average attendance of forty-five or fifty. Special efforts are being made to vary the plan of the meetings so they will not grow monotonous. On the evening of November 26 a special Thanksgiving program was given by the members of the Society who have recently been promoted from the Intermediate Society. Under the efficient leadership of our pastor, Roy Wollam, the Sabbath evening services and also the mid-week prayer meetings are growing both in interest and attendance.

Traverse City, Michigan—Young Friends' day was observed here on November 26th. Tags had been previously distributed and were worn by both young and old, thus creating enthusiasm as well as advertising the occasion. Miss Lawrence, the pastor, preached a most helpful and interesting sermon in the morning, while the evening services were given over entirely to the young people. Devotional services, songs by the "little Friends," five to fifteen-minute talks by a few of the older "young Friends," readings and appropriate music by the choir made this also an effective service.

On November 30th the churches of the city united for their Thanksgiving services, which this year were held in the M. E. church. Miss Lawrence was chosen to deliver the Thanksgiving sermon. With her many other duties, she has also done some excellent organizing in our meeting, including an organization of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, a Young People's Mission Study Class and a Young Ladies' Bible Study Class. Each of these is doing good work and increasing in interest and membership. A Junior C. E. Society has recently been organized, with Gladys Say as superintendent, and this is becoming a source of much helpfulness to the little ones.

A short Christmas program is being prepared by a competent committee, but more emphasis is being placed on the giving, everyone entering joyously into the true spirit of Christmas giving. Our plan this year is to give to the worthy poor principally of food and clothing, co-operating in this with the associated charities and the Salvation Army. We extend to the editor of The American Friend and to the readers of the paper our wish for a merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

Alba, Missouri—Frederick Kludas and wife closed a successful series of meetings here on December 3. Though several were at the altar for pardon or purity, the results of the meetings cannot be told in numbers. The entire church was lifted to a higher plane of spiritual life. All the churches of the town have taken on new life and the revival spirit is moving on.

North Berwick, Maine—The old meeting house at North Berwick was opened for an appointed meeting on December 6 to hear a message upon "Community Life," by Tom A. Sykes of East Lynn, Mass. Wm. Hussey presided and the house was filled with the members of various denominations. A wonderful spirit of harmony prevailed. As a result of the meeting a united evangelistic campaign was started. It is the first effort of the kind for more than forty years.

Boise, Idaho—Boise Valley Quarterly Meeting was held here November 25. Anson Cox brought the message of the morning, admonishing Friends to faithfulness and warning against going to sleep and allowing the enemy to sow the tares. Annis Jones offered her resignation as recording clerk of the Quarterly Meeting. The meeting authorized the establishment of a new Monthly Meeting at Center Point. There was a request also for a Monthly Meeting at Valley Mound, both set off from Greenleaf Monthly Meeting. The Board of Legislation had a short conversation with the governor of our state on the subject of compulsory military training. He expressed himself opposed to war and preparedness, and very kindly offered the Board his help and sympathy.

Star, Idaho—The meeting here is progressing nicely under the pastorate of Ezra G. Pearson. The services are evangelistic in character and seekers are frequently seen at the altar at the regular meetings. Clange H. Barker, who for the past eighteen months has been pastor here, has, with the assistance of his wife, Katherine Barker, been faithful and energetic in giving the gospel messages to the church and community. He is especially strong on the doctrines of the Christian religion, especially along prophetic lines.

Bethel, Indiana—A new Monthly Meeting was established at Bethel on December 6th by White Lick Quarterly Meeting. An interesting revival was held here in November, with Nettie Springer as evangelist. The Friends recently purchased the school house and grounds and rebuilt it into a parsonage, and it is now occupied by M. Addie Kearns, who is our pastor.

Improvement in a soul gets ownership in it, even as it does in land. We may have a property in every one we meet, if only we can find out how to bless him.—Horace Bushnell.

NEWS NOTES

We have received word that Martha P. Hussey, wife of Asahel H. Hussey of Whittier, California, is ill with pneumonia.

Harry Rimmer of Whittier College is bringing very acceptable messages each Sabbath to the Friends Meeting in Los Angeles, Cal.

Charles Woodbury, who was a close friend of Ralph Waldo Emerson, gave an interesting talk about his friend at Haverford College on the evening of December 4th.

The C. E. Society at Iowa Falls, Iowa, has appointed a committee to make an every-family canvass to secure additional subscriptions to The American Friend.

In the student body of Guilford College this year there are students from thirty-two of the one hundred counties of North Carolina and from seven states, Cuba and Canada.

We are in receipt of a souvenir of The Silent Evangel, giving an extended and interesting account of the revival work of Daisy Douglas Barr and party at Lebanon, Indiana.

Phariba W. Stephens, who, with her family, is spending the winter in Los Angeles, California, is devoting much of her time among the various churches in the interest of The Sunday School Times.

Clyde Little of Liberty, Indiana, student at Earlham College, has recently won the Cecil Rhodes scholarship. A similar scholarship has also been won by Felix M. Morley of Baltimore, of the Haverford College class of 1915.

Friends will be glad to know that J. Elwood Cox of High Point, N. C., who has recently undergone a very serious operation in Grace Hospital, Richmond, Va., is rapidly recovering and will soon be able to resume his useful duties.

We have the sad news of the death of our aged friend, Joshua Bailey, of Philadelphia. His work in the causes of peace, temperance and the Indians, is a part of the history of the Society of Friends in this country.

The temperance program rendered at South Fairview (in Walnut Creek Quarterly Meeting) on Sabbath evening, the nineteenth, was profitable and inspiring. There was a liberal offering taken for the furtherance of that department of church work.

Tuberculosis Sunday was observed at New Garden Meeting, North Carolina, on which occasion President

Thomas Newlin preached a gospel

The Funk & Wagnalls Company, 354-360 Fourth Avenue, N. Y. City, announces that the publication of Ida M. Tarbell's book on the "Making Men at Ford's" has been postponed until early Spring. When it appears, the book will be the most intimate analysis of the "Ford idea" that has yet appeared.

The Evangelistic Board of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, of which L. W. McFarland is superintendent, is working in an organized way and finds that it pays. During the year, in meetings where he has worked, there have been three hundred professions. There are two other parties in the field doing good work.

A recent report of the High Point, N. C., Normal and Industrial Institute, of which A. J. Griffin is principal, shows that on October 30th there were ninety boarding students, of which forty-two are boys. The Industrial shops are going regularly. There are forty-one girls in the cooking department and forty-four in the sewing department. It is a most interesting report, copies of which can be secured

WASHINGTON (D. C.) MONTHLY MEETING

A unique auxiliary organization of Washington Monthly Meeting is The Friends Fellowship Union. It fills a place in the meeting entirely different from that of the Christian Endeavor, Sunday school, or the work of any of the committees appointed by the Monthly Meeting. Its functions are social and educational. The work is under the charge of a committee or board of three persons, elected annually by the ballot of those present election night. The ballot is taken without any candidates having been placed in nomination. All present are entitled to vote and to be voted for whether Friends or not.

A meeting is generally held each month from October to May. Usually, heretofore, a literary program of about an hour, consisting of a lecture, papers, readings, etc., with appropriate singing—congregational, choir or solo—has been followed by simply refreshments and a purely social half-hour. Special efforts are made to inform our friends who are not connected with our other church activities of each of these meetings, with the result that they are more largely attended than any other meetings of our church here. The boys and girls especially enjoy them.

Last summer, the committee determined to attempt an innovation. It presented to the Monthly Meeting a plan to provide a course of entertainments consisting in the main of lectures by persons not members of the Monthly Meeting, and suggested to the Monthly Meeting that it appoint a committee to co-operate with it in arranging the programs. Two members were accordingly appointed. Contributing members were given an opportunity to subscribe to an expense fund. The following program was prepared and printed:

1. Nov. 15. The latest Phases of the Prohibition Movement—S. Edgar Nicholson, Editor The American Friend.
2. Dec. 8. The Nalle Jubilee Company.
3. Dec. 29. The Problem of the Races—Elbert Russell, Instructor in Biblical Literature and Archaeology, Johns Hopkins University.
4. Jan. 22. An interpretation of the Life of Today and Our responsibility toward it—L. Oscar Moon, Field Secretary, Baltimore Yearly Meeting.
5. Feb. 21. "An Evening with James Whitcomb Riley," a vocal and literary interpretation of his rhymes—Rev. John T. Huddle, D.D., Pastor of St. Paul's English Lutheran Church, Washington, D. C.
6. March 19. A Trip to the Orient and Australasia, illustrated—William B. Harvey, formerly Superintendent Westtown Boarding School.
7. April 16. An interesting story of the Busy Ant, illustrated—Caswell Grave, Ph. D., of Johns Hopkins University.

Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming in Western Canada is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising.

The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent. May 21. Illustrated Lecture; subject to be announced later—William C. Dennis, L.L. D.

Sometime during the year, if satisfactory date can be arranged, an illustrated talk on "The Great Work of the Red Cross"—Miss Mabel Boardman, Washington, D.C.

The lecture by S. Edgar Nicholson was an exceedingly interesting review of the movements for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the United States. Some of us were surprised to learn that at, or shortly before the beginning of the Civil War in 1861, sixteen states of the Union had state-wide prohibition, and that, but for the war and the need of revenue from its manufacture the entire nation would probably have banished intoxicants within a few years. The lecture was one of hope and encouragement, and coming so soon after the adoption and retention of prohibition by more states than had at any one time previously voted on the question, was one of triumph.

The Nalle Jubilee Company consists of seventeen negro singers. Their rendition of old plantation songs was exquisitely beautiful. The meeting house was filled beyond its seating capacity and the audience evinced appreciation of every one of the dozen or more pieces rendered. Printed cards of invitation to attend our Sunday School were handed to those in attendance as they passed from the building.

I have spoken somewhat in detail of this phase of our work here with the thought that it may be of more than passing interest to Friends.

QUAKERS WILL NOT TRAIN

Views Are Unchanged Under New Conditions, Wood Asserts

James Wood of Mount Kisco, a leader of the Friends and President of the American Bible Society, was asked yesterday at Friends' Meeting whether, in view of Belgian deportations, Quakers might be willing to change their views for the moment concerning war and training for war. He expressed strong condemnation of the deportations, and said: "President Wilson has said that the United States cannot keep out of the next war, and the temper of the times seems to indicate the early passage of a universal war service and war training law. If such law is passed by Congress and Quakers are not exempt from its operation there is no doubt that both Orthodox and Hicksite Friends will refuse to permit their children to be taught military tactics, and refuse themselves to serve as soldiers, or to be drilled for such service. Our Five Year Meeting comes in 1917, and I expect it will take a definite stand, renewing Quaker principles toward war. If war comes before it meets, or if drilling for war comes, Friends will act as individuals.

"Quakers are not strangers to the inside of jails, and the inside of an American jail is a better place for Friends in revolt against such evil than would be the outside of them with compromise of their consciences. We utter no threats, but we will not submit."—N. Y. Times.

SARAH MORRIS HADLEY

Through the shadows that envelope us today, there gleams a light of exquisite ray, directing our eyes above, whither alone the good are borne. The light that cheers is the life and character of Sarah Morris Hadley. She was the daughter of Joel and Ruth Morris, was born near Milton, Wayne County, Indiana, the 23rd of July, 1846, and departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charles Gambold, Coatesville, Ind., at 7:45 a. m., November 20th, 1916; aged 70 years, 4 months and 27 days.

She was the second child in a family of five. Two sisters, one brother and her parents passed away some years ago, leaving one brother, J. Lindley Morris, of Amo, the last of her father's family.

She was a birthright member of the Friends church, and was devoutly interested in all the work of the church. She was a student at Friends academy, Spiceland, Ind., and later at Friends boarding school, Richmond, Ind.

In the Friends church at Thorn-town, Ind., according to the custom of Friends, she was united in marriage to David Hadley (then a young minister of the Gospel), March 30th, 1868.

In her home, she gave herself with pleasure, to the daily devotion of the duties of love, and to her, life was a service of self-forgetfulness, in thought of others.

She was ordained a minister of the Gospel by Mill Creek Monthly Meeting of Friends in 1870, and in her public work rendered valuable service in the communities where she lived. She was pastor of Hadley meeting for a number of years. The present church was built while she resided there. She was also pastor of the Friends church in Danville at two different times, and was held in high esteem by all who knew her. Her public messages were full of scriptural quotations containing exultations and praises to her Heavenly Father.

Her last attendance at public worship was on Sabbath morning a few weeks ago, at Amo Friends church. In her message at that time, she said, "Heaven grows more real to me each day. The bible never meant more to me than in the past few years. I tell you, friends, I am homeward bound, and the journey will not be long."

The work of her husband, as general superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, called him away from home much of the time, but this faithful untiring, little woman, with the aid of the children, carried on the home work, and was ever ready to respond to any need in the community. She conducted many funeral services, performed marriage ceremonies, and devoted herself to the work of home, community and church, counting herself happy to be a co-worker with God, inasmuch as she knew her labor was not in vain in the Lord.

Her Christian fortitude was most beautifully manifested during the past year, and with the strength of an invisible power, she bore the loss of her husband, who was one with her in spirit. She never intruded her grief upon others, but bravely adjusted her life to the changed conditions. Well did she exemplify the words of the Psalmist, "My flesh and my heart faileth, but God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever."

She leaves five children, Mrs. Allen Wilson, Mrs. Charles Gambold, Miss Geraldine Hadley, Morris Hadley, Dr. Murray Hadley and eight grandchildren to mourn the loss of a good mother. "Her children rise up and call her blessed."

She was laid to rest, by the side of her faithful husband, David Hadley, of Danville, Indiana, who departed this life one year and ten months ago.

DEPARTMENT DAY PROGRAM

Such a program as the above title indicates was held by Fairmount Quarterly Meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, on Saturday, November 25th. The day was divided into forty minute periods, each department occupying one period.

Cornelius R. Small presided, turning the meeting over to each department Superintendent in turn.

1. Hiram Harvey, evangelistic superintendent, introduced Charles E. Hiatt, pastor of the First Friends Church at Marion, Indiana, who spoke on "Evangelism that Wins." He spoke from the standpoint of a pastor more than that of the professional evangelist, giving the definition of evangelism as, "The bringing of the gospel of Christ into contact with those who know him not." He emphasized the necessity of personal evangelism, the man-to-man message.

2. Edith Shugart, C. E. superintendent, spoke on "The Scope of C. E. Work and the obligation of the meetings to their young people." She regards C. E. work as being more than just maintaining a C. E. Society.

It means that the young people are to find their field of service in all the activities of the church, in the Sunday School especially. At the beginning of her period she called all the young people in the congregation to the platform and found that most of the meetings of the Quarterly Meeting were represented. At the close of her remarks, Miss Shugart introduced Myrtle Druckemiller, who read a most interesting paper on, "Sabbath School Essentials."

3. Sadie B. Harvey, superintendent of Sabbath School Work, introduced William J. Sayers, pastor of Muncie Friends Meeting, who gave a live address on "The Bible School at Work." He emphasized the necessity of the Bible School teacher seeing things from the boys' standpoint, (or girls'), and of a superintendent who doesn't try to do all the work, but who "superintends."

4. William S. Elliott, superintendent of the Peace Committee, introduced Prof. Allen D. Hole of Earlham College, who spoke on "Fundamentals of Peace." He spoke of Non-Resistance as not being the passive thing its name might at first thought imply but said Friends should be aggressive in their work for Peace. The whole address deserves a wide audience, but space forbids.

5. Home and Foreign Missions were combined, Anna Winslow and Ella Winslow, Superintendents, respectively. In this period a duet was sung by Mary Kelsay and Vivian Thurston, Prof. Edwin Morrison, of Earlham College, voiced the crying need of missions in Indiana Yearly meeting as that of MORE money, in order that the young people who equip and volunteer might be sent out to needy fields.

6. Cornelius R. Small, in a striking object lesson, showed that the protection assured by the American flag was on the bottle of whiskey sitting on the desk, rather than on the bright little boy on the platform. Bennett L. Shugart reviewed the work of the temperance forces.

At noon all sat down to dinner in the basement, followed by a conference by committees at 1 o'clock, the open session of the conference resuming, at 1:30. It was a day brimming full of good things, and should mean more effective work by the Quarterly Meeting for the ensuing year.

It does not take great men to do great things, it only takes consecrated men.—Phillips Brooks.

BIBLE SCHOOL

December 31, 1916

Subject, Review—"Christ's Coming and Coming to Christ."

Golden Text—The Spirit and the bride say, come! And he that heareth, let him say, come! And he that is athirst, let him come; he that will, let him take the water of life freely! Rev. 22:17.

For purposes of review this series of lessons should be divided into three groups. The first one will contain those lessons, having to do with the career of the apostle Paul. The second will contain the three lessons found in the book of Revelation. The third, the special ones. The one in Romans may be discussed in connection with Paul's career very properly, though it has nothing specially to do with the experiences of his last days.

There are seven (or eight) lessons in the first group, all connected with the imprisonment of the apostle. The historical side of this period may be passed in review first, then the great outstanding acts of Paul, such as his speeches, his calmness in the face of danger, his foresight, faithfulness, etc. It might be well to spend some time in estimating the strong and weak points in his character, reviewing this period of his life or his entire career. There is no lack of material for a splendid review lesson this time.

The lessons from Revelation deal with separate themes. First, the glory of the living Christ; the second with the religious situation in certain churches in and about Ephesus; the third, with a vision of the heaven to come. This series contains material of less practical value than the first. Certain types of mind like to dwell upon these themes, and certain classes may find them particularly interesting, especially those containing old people.

Of the remaining lessons, one is the temperance lesson, another is the Christmas story and the third, if not associated with the first group, concerns one of Paul's great messages.

Two aims may be kept in view. The fact side of these lessons, and they have their place. The great moral and spiritual impulse to be derived from a careful study of motives and aims of, for instance, Paul's devotion to the cause which he represented.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 31

Topic—Lessons to Learn, from the past. Eph. 5:15-21. (New Year's Meeting).

Have you had any victory the past year? Then there ought to be steps farther on.

Have you known any defeat? Then you should realize that you need to climb harder and more carefully.

Have you been disappointed in folks?—appreciate the perfect love of Christ.

Have you noticed the meanness and littleness of man?—then you can see the kindness and bigness of the Master more clearly.

Have you learned through your mistakes, what you ought to do, and how it should be done? No Christian should make the same mistake twice.

Every success of the past fits us for a greater success in the future.

Name the lessons learned during the past year.

What mistakes have you learned to avoid?

Has the past brought you warnings? What?

Two Christmas Presents for the Price of One

The best family paper and the best fashion magazine—The Youth's Companion and McCall's Magazine, both for $2.10. Ricks-Hutchens—At the home of the bride's parents at Thorntown, Indiana, November 19, 1916. Ora Ricks of Lewisville, Indiana, and Mabel C. Hutchens. Minister W. J. Cleaver. Their future home will be at Lewisville, Ind.

Men can be to other men as the shadow of a rock in a thirsty land.

DIED

Franklin—Eugene Franklin, adopted son of Della Fistler and Esther E. Baird of the American Friends Mission at Nowgong, Bundelkhand, India, died in France, June 2, 1916.

Hall—Rebecca S. Hall, daughter of Robert and Sarah T. Stanley, was born in Morrow County, Ohio, May 3, 1860, and died at her home at Washington D. C. November 17th, 1916. She married Charles H. Hall in 1882. In 1868 she moved with her parents to Damascus, Ohio, and remained there until 1900 when she moved to Washington D. C. She was a birthright member of Friends and an elder in Damascus Monthly Meeting. At Washington, she joined with the body of Friends there and continued active in the work until failing health made it impossible for to attend meeting. She was instrumental in organizing the Dorcas Society, and remained one of its most active and honored members. She taught in the Bible School for a number of years. Her interest in Philanthropic and missionary work was untiring. It is no exaggeration to say that hundreds of children in the United States and foreign lands, who have never seen her face, have been the recipients of gifts provided at her suggestion and largely by her hands. Burial at Damascus, Ohio.

Hill—William Hill was born in Randolph County, December 18th, 1837, and died at Minneapolis, Minn., November 15, 1916. He spent most of his life in Indiana, moving to Minneapolis, in 1907. He married Elizabeth Shugart in 1870. He was a life long member of the Society of Friends, and was ever loyal to its principles. The golden rule was the standard of his every day conduct, and his sterling integrity impressed itself upon everyone with whom he came in contact, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

Maris—Mary A. Maris, wife of Aaron Maris died at her home in Paoli, Indiana, November 17th, 1916, aged 61 years. She was a faithful member of the Friends church for thirty-eight years and all who knew her respected her as a real Christian. Her loss in the home and in the church will be deeply felt.

Nivitt—Richard R. Nivitt, son of Thomas and Keziah Nevitt, was born in Henry county, Indiana, February 13, 1837, and died at his home in Emporia, Kansas, December 6, 1916. He married Nancy Whitmore of Eagletown, Indiana in 1862. In 1886 he moved with his family to Kansas and in 1891 settled in Lyon county where he has since made his home. He was a life long Friend, and from early life has lived a faithful and earnest Christian, maintaining the integrity of the Gospel with fidelity, zeal and increasing faith to the end. He leaves a widow, three sons, four daughters, twenty-one grand children and four great grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Friends Church in Emporia, conducted by the pastor, George C. Wise, Jr., assisted by E. J. Williams of Gifford, Illinois.

Napier—Beulah A. Napier, only child of R. A. and Jennie Napier, died at her home in Amboy, Indiana, November 14th, 1916, aged 7 years, 5 months and 27 days. Her sickness was of short duration, and her death came unexpectedly. She was bright, cheery, devoted little girl and had early accepted the loving Heavenly Father for her own, and was also active in prayer and praise in the Sabbath school class and the Junior C. E. Society. Funeral services were conducted in the Friend's church at Amboy, in charge of Charles E. Hiatt, of Marion, and at Liberty, Indiana, in charge of Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn.

Smith—Margaret B. Smith, widow of Oliver Smith and mother of R. Esther Smith, died at the home of her son at Long Beach California, November 24th, 1916, after a brief illness. Her 33rd birthday was celebrated in September. Funeral services were held in the Beth-el church, conducted by Andrew F. Mitchell, Wallace E. Gill and others. Interment in Shady Side Cemetery at Long Beach.

THE BIBLE THAT IS MOST LIKELY TO PLEASE EVERYBODY

The Bible-Giving Christmas Plan

This movement has been inaugurated among Christian People to make at least one of their gifts a Bible, in honor of Him for Whom the great festival has been named.

"INTERNATIONAL" CLEARNU TYPE TEACHER'S BIBLE

SELF-PRONOUNCING

While the text of the Bible does not change, new methods of type-making have produced a type that is larger in size, more easily read, and more restful to the eyes, for use in a book which is also more convenient in size and lighter in weight. The type used in this new Bible was moulded especially for the purpose. It is the largest, clearest type to be found in any Bible of like size.

THE MOST MODERN IDEAS IN BIBLE-MAKING. In addition to the large clear type and convenient size, the full contents also commend this Bible. It contains the Authorized Version of the Old and New Testaments, with sixty thousand references in the center column; has the names of the books of the Bible printed on outer edge for quick reference; has all proper names accented and divided into syllables, making pronunciation easy; has the most accurate, most usable aids to Bible study; and has seventeen colored maps.

NEW TYPE OF TEACHERS' AIDS TO BIBLE STUDY

The logical arrangement of the helps is another improvement and a great convenience. All the aids (over 400 pages), including Complete Concordance, Subject Index, Dictionary, etc., etc., are under one Alphabetical Arrangement instead of separate headings as in the old type of Bible. Furthermore, these new helps are illustrated and are the only helps printed from black-face type, which makes them more readable and useful.

HANDSOMELY BOUND IN FLEXIBLE LEATHER

This Bible is printed on thin rag paper especially made for it. Jet black ink is used in the printing to make the type stand forth clearly. Handsome, Flexible Leather Binding, with overlapping covers (like cut), red-under-gold edges, head-band and purple ribbon marker, all combine to make it the finest, most practical of Bibles—the most pleasing of all gifts.

Exact Size, 5½ x 8 inches.
Each Bible packed in a Handsome Decorated Christmas Box.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. Our school is much smaller than usual, though of better quality than the average in some years.

IMPORTANT TO SUBSCRIBERS

Apparently all subscribers to The American Friend have not read the announcements in these columns during recent weeks, to the effect that on and after January 1, 1917, the subscription price will be advanced to $2.00. THIS ADVANCE APPLIES TO ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS WHICH EXPIRE ON JANUARY 1, 1917 AND AFTERWARDS. Sending in the money before January 1 does not avail to secure the paper at the present rate, IF THE EXPIRATION COMES ON JANUARY 1, OR LATER. We send notices of expiration each month, for the guidance of all subscribers. We cannot accept $1.50 in payment for a full year's subscription, whose expiration dates from January 1, and later. All subscriptions which expire before January 1, next, will be renewed at the old rate. Our readers will readily see that a certain time had to be fixed by which the new rate is to be governed. This advance in price is due wholly to the great advance in the cost of blank paper. Will all our subscribers please take note and pass the word on to others?

NEW YEAR'S WISH

Our New Year's wish for you, dear friends,
Is that its days need no amends;
But that each day when it is done,
Shall make another well begun.

Foundations true and rising high,
We nobler grow and braver try
To reach the ideals God has given.
To train and keep our souls for heaven.

—Arthur Simmons.

THE LITTLE NEW YEAR

Oh, I am the little New Year, oh oh!
Here I come tripping over the snow,
Shaking my bells with a merry din;
So open your doors and let me in!

The old year has been a good one, but the new year must be a better one, or else civilization will go backward.

CHRISTMAS

An Acrostic

By ROXIE DIXON WHITE

Christmas is the happiest Day

Heaven ever sends us.

Radiant, joyful, love-crowned time

Is this Day, God lends us.

Shout! ye children, chant your chime

To every land and every clime—

"Merry Christmas"! "Christmas time"!

And ye winds, waft Heaven's refrain

Sweet and clear, o'er land and main.

—Earth's mighty Hope, for Sin and Pain.

Nations! Nations! Crown the Day.

Sing! Peoples, Kings—The Living Way.

Nations, join for aye, prolong

The Glory of the Christmas Song.

Pour forth, O, Heavenly Hosts, again

To all the world—"Good Will to Men,"

"Peace on Earth

Good Will to Men."

Guilford College, N. C.

SPIRITUAL ABUNDANCE

"Oh, there is a wideness in God's mercy like the wideness of the sea!" Who can measure it? Who can measure the all-embracing compassion of Jesus Christ? Who can set limits to the versatile hospitality of the city of God? Since the gates of the city do stand so wide open for all sorts and conditions and races and ages of men, why should any of us refuse longer to enter in. "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come; and whosoever will let him take the water of life freely." "On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates."—Dr. Richards.

GLADDEST CHRISTMAS THOUGHT

My gladdest thought for Christmas-tide
Is that the love of God so wide,
Taking the whole world in its thought
And giving all that Christ has brought,
Can enter, fill and use each heart
That wishes thus to have a part
In ministry of love to bring
The world to God through Christ our King.
—Mary E. Lunn.

A Denomination Finding Itself

There are evidences that the Society of Friends in America is finding itself. The organization of the Five Years Meeting was a positive step in this direction. The months which have elapsed since then have witnessed an awakening to a multitude of opportunities that have come rushing in on the rising tide of human progress. We are constantly finding links of connection with the great body of the church, and while we may not anticipate a large place in the federative activities of Christendom, we may hope that the Quaker leaven will not be without its effectiveness. The stirrings among our Quaker men a year ago marked the beginning of a larger interest and a deeper usefulness on their part in all our Yearly Meetings. The efforts now being made to find a better adjustment of our endeavors within and without the denomination are indicative of strivings toward yet greater things.

But a denomination is not measured alone by the number or the kind of its activities. It may spend itself on missions, on education, on evangelism, and yet never rise above the narrow field of provincialism. It must be more than a workshop. First of all, it must be a power-house. It must be more than a harvest field, for there can be no harvest without seed time and cultivation. It more than a harvest field, for there can be inanimate of itself. Rather must it be a living organism, pulsating with the energies of the Divine life and operating under its direction.

A denomination must have a spirit that is unifying, principles that are distinctive, and activities that are characteristic, but back of all these, and greater than any of them, there must be the consciousness of a positive mission, of which the spirit and principles and activities are merely representative. Without this consciousness, there can be no permanency of life, growth or action. The great task of the Society of Friends in America is to be sure of its mission, to make certain of its calling, and it is in this sense that it is finding itself.

In an age when such mighty stress is being laid upon the superlative value of the Christian life at its best, when there is such a call for the living incarnation of Christian truth, who can doubt that Friends, who have ever stood for the substance of things as against the form, have a positive call to the ranks of Christian communion today, as much as in any other age? Is there not a demand that we witness again to the verities of Christianity as expressed in personality, individual and collective; and is there not a field here in which the competition is not greatly overcrowded?

Obedient to the consciousness of such a mission, Friends cannot fail to find a high place in the religious activities of the coming year. Upon such a foundation they can plan a program of service that will merit and receive attention beyond their own borders, a program that will enlist the best energies of both old and young in every department of the church. We need such a program as this in order to bring into the clearer light the great tasks to which God is calling this branch of his church. It is fortunate that Friends are finding themselves at a time when there is a tremendous groundswell of Christian interest in the world. Shall we not strive with greater earnestness during the coming year, not only to find ourselves, but to find our place in the great co-operative movement of the church as a whole, that we may contribute our full share to the Christianization of the world?

At a time when Germany is opening the door for peace, when President Wilson is making overtures to all belligerents in this direction, and when the English premier appears to have left the peace door ajar, it would seem that there ought to be enough of Christian diplomacy in the world to bring this terrible war to an end.

With the period of European reconstruction before us, with the doors of the Orient, the dark Continent and Latin America wide open to the Gospel message, was there ever such a golden opportunity for the Church of Christ to make a world-wide record for the progress of the kingdom, as during the year about to open?

If it be heaven toward which we journey, it will be holiness in which we delight; for if we cannot now rejoice in having God for our portion, where is our meetness for a world in which God is to be all in all forever and forever?—Henry Melvill.

Christianity and War

By VINCENT D. NICHOLSON

The echoes of what should have been the most important national election in fifty years are just now fading away. It was inevitable that throughout the campaign inter-national questions would press themselves to the fore. For many months we have heard much of "Americanism," of "National Honor," of the "Mexican Problem," of the "German controversy," of "Military Preparedness." It has been a campaign of great disappointment. At a time of world crisis, with an unprecedented opportunity lying at our door to lead the world out of the hideous old into a glorious new, not a party leader has dared to even turn his face toward the dawn of a better day.

On November 7th as a peaceful army of 17,000,000 men and women marched to the polls to decide the problems of our great democracy, we were filled with a deep thanksgiving as we compared our condition with that of those other continents where 25,000,000 men are in arms or training camps. Yet for many the thanksgiving was mingled with a deep regret. It mattered not which party was elected to power; a policy would be elected that meant an opportunity lost, a deliberate step backward, a turning from the only path that leads away and upward from the valley of the shadow of death into which most of the world has been plunged.

The frenzy of misdirected patriotism that has possessed our politicians is but the infringement on American thought of the situation in Europe where every resource of wealth and life and institution is being sacrificed upon the altar of supposed national advantage. The resources of heaven, though not seriously relied upon, are not forgotten and the clergy of each opposing nation are praying for success to the same God and Father of all, not appreciating the hollow mockery of such petition in the name of prayer.

At such a time of devotion to kingdoms and states there is urgent need of reminding men that twenty centuries ago there was founded on this earth a great kingdom in every sense of the word. If extent of boundary is a criterion of greatness we find that the ambitions of its founder were as wide as the whole world of men. If the nature of allegiance is a test of a kingdom's strength we find that the allegiance demanded is all embracing, transcending every other allegiance that men owe.

Strange and significant were the beginnings of this Kingdom. As the knowledge of His Messiahship began to draw upon Jesus, He was faced with a choice of the means of establishing His power. All of history and of current opinion called for reliance upon military strength. Sargon, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander and Caesar had all won world empires by the sword. The Messianic hope itself embodied a similar supremacy of the Jewish race. Yet he deliberately rejected all means of conquest hitherto known to men and staked the future of His kingdom upon the power of the spiritual forces of justice and truth and love.

History has revealed the wisdom of His choice. After the last of the world empires has gone the way of decay and dissolution, while nations have been rising and falling, the Kingdom of Christ has been advancing with irresistible power. All that is prized in modern social life is traceable directly to the Christian ideal of brotherhood. The fruits of this ideal mark the progress of that which we call civilization.

When we scatter the Jack-straw jumble of theological dogma, when we tear away the bands of formal practice, we find revealed at the living center of Christianity the principle of love. Try as we may to express the Christian message in varied form, every form will be but one expression of this controlling way of life.

The word "love" has been so idly used, so bandied about, so abused and sullied, that the one great task of the Christian is to re-interpret it in its relation to the Christian faith. Being a principle of conduct, a way of life, an attitude of being, any didactic definition is inadequate. It is easier to state what it is not. However it may be shortly defined as the will to do good to all men. It involves the quality of service, the spirit of mutual understanding, and of course is limited by no bonds of prejudice or exigency. Not only the essence but the whole content of the Christian religion is found in the living truth that all persons everywhere are children of the same God, and brothers of each other, among all of whom should prevail the same quality of good will.

This is all such an old, old story that the question arises as to why it needs repetition here. It is only an intellectual assent to the principle that is old. Any serious attempt to apply it to social conduct is so startlingly new that those in England who have made the attempt are in prisons, and those in this country are called dreamers, weaklings, traitors and fools.

Before discussing the problem of war in the light of the Christian position it seems necessary to consider what this position is. As the principles of Christianity have been tested in the hot crucible of modern affairs, two theories of discipleship have formed. One proceeds upon the hypothesis that the realization of the Christian ideal in human nature is inherently a long and slow evolutionary process. The church exists merely to stimulate and nourish an inherent tendency to improvement which the world possesses. In the due course of time the world will arrive in the city of God. Meanwhile a great deal of evil exists that must be recognized and we must not try to travel too fast. The church must conform somewhat to things as they are, all the while contemplating the beautiful ideal that lies ahead, but not driving the world too fast nor insisting upon principles that are generally unpopular. The exigencies of the moment must determine the extent of application of Christian precept. This is a fair statement of the position of the bulk of the Christian church. Apart from rank hypocrisy it is the only explanation of a religion which calls Christ's way of life the truth of God and yet treats it as utterly impracticable.

It is the chief purpose of this article to take issue with this conception of Christianity. However plausible and attractive it may be, considered from an a priori viewpoint, it is not the Christianity actually presented in the gospel. The Kingdom of Heaven is likened unto leaven. Leaven does its work by changing the nature of that which it touches.

So the world is improved in morals, not by the easy evolutionary processes that operate in nature, but by the conversion of individual men to entirely new principles of life. The disciples of the Kingdom are called the salt of the earth and the light of the world. Both salt and light accomplish their saving and beneficent work only by reason of characteristics essentially different from that which they affect. So Christians serve their Kingdom only as they accept without compromise the standard of the Christian way of life in all its distinctive savour and undimmed brightness. Both in letter and spirit the gospel is filled with the truth that its principles are intended, as rapidly as they are understood, for immediate application. Any other interpretation may be a religion but certainly is not the religion we profess. If we do not actually believe in it, in sheer intellectual honesty, we should cease the profession.

The fact that those who hold this conception of discipleship may fall far short of its realization in nowise weakens the validity of the position. The acceptance of this doctrine as a way of life is not limited to those who are saints, but only to those who want to be saints—here and now. The fundamental difference between the two theories is that one involves a desire and effort to be a saint now when saintship is unpopular, and the other a desire that some far off generation may with harmonious unanimity, slide gently into the saintly condition.

It is one thing for the church to frankly and practically face the tremendous problems involved in discovering what the Christian ideal of love implies and then realize it in present life. It is another thing—a stultifying, deadening thing—for the church to adopt any less a standard than that now and here is the accepted time and place for a complete application of this ideal. When the church attempts to make neat adjustments of the so-called ultimate ideal to supposed exigencies of the moment, the resultant is a man-made gospel, shorn of its redemptive power, as helpless to redeem the world as the attempt of a man to lift himself by his bootstraps.

The living meaning of the position contended for is illustrated by the well-known story of the Dukhobor who was arrested for his refusal to enlist in the army. Upon hearing the man's explanation of the basis of his conviction, the officer said: "Those principles are all very well, but will only work in the Kingdom of Heaven and that hasn't arrived yet." The Dukhobor replied, "it may not have arrived for you, but it has arrived for me."

Nothing seems clearer than that for all who have accepted the Christian way of life, the Kingdom of God has arrived. We may be unable to control, or largely affect, conditions about us. We may find ourselves widely at variance with a world most of which has not accepted the principle of love. Yet at every point where a choice of conduct must be made, the decision can be governed by that principle.

It seems to be the divine plan that the evil of the world is to be consumed by the touch of such conviction. We hear smooth talk about next steps, and recognizing human nature as it is, but history reveals no such philosophy of progress. At the center of every marked advance since the dawn of civilization we see the burning flame of a single figure or a group that dared to live in the present as they wanted the future to be. In the slow progress which the world has made we see only an indictment of the prevailing philosophy of conformity and compromise that has made the progress so slow.

The doctrine of compromise, proper in many fields of thought and activity, has no application when moral issues are at stake. This doctrine presupposes a concession that either of two opposing contentions may be erroneous or inexpedient, and is perfectly proper in any dealing where the issue is solely between man and man. But when the issue is between man and God a different situation is presented. Such a position immediately destroys the whole substance of moral standard and religious faith. Although our interpretation of morality and religion is progressive, yet it is of the very essence of morality and religion that at any given time the accepted standards be of binding force and receive unwavering obedience.

Having accepted the doctrine that Christianity involves an immediate application of its principles, the church is faced with the problem of correctly ascertaining what these principles imply. This article is concerned only with the implication in international relations. Until the outbreak of the present war it seemed that the church had thought this problem through. Christians freely called themselves followers of the Prince of Peace and it seemed to be universally believed that the war spirit was the exact antithesis of the Christ spirit. But Europe now presents the spectacle of millions of Christian laymen killing one another, and clergymen freely using, on behalf of the slaughter, the power of their high calling to enthuse and inspire. In this country the temper of the great majority of Christian bodies and leaders indicates that, were we faced with a similar emergency, they would follow in the footsteps of the Church in Europe in giving official sanction to the war. Thus there seems urgent need for a re-examination of the relation of Christianity and war.

The popular pastime of quoting proof texts from Christ's sayings is superficial and of small value. At no time was He dealing specifically with the inter-national problem and thus the basis of the Christian position can be found in no specific pronouncements of Christ.

Equally inconclusive is the fact that Christ did not employ the use of arms in the furtherance of His cause. Although the growth of His Kingdom shows the power of the spiritual forces upon which He relied, yet His failure to use armies furnishes no adequate basis for the Christian attitude toward war. To attach over-much significance to such a negative circumstance would be to condemn the writing of religious books or the building of church organizations since Christ did neither.

The answer to the problem can be found only in the spirit of the gospel as we find that gospel revealed in the Bible and enriched by the cumulative interpretation of two thousand years. Christianity is not primarily a code of rules, but an attitude of soul. This attitude of soul, or way of life, is revealed in the personality of Christ and the answer to every problem of Christian practice can be had only by an understanding of that personality. It is in the light of such an understanding—acquired by the means of knowledge peculiar to the realm of the spirit—that all war of every kind is seen to be not only wasteful and futile but eternally wrong.

The limits of such an article allow of only a few suggestions in demonstrating this utter immorality of war. The first tendency of the mind and soul is to recoil and shudder at the incalculable cost of it all. The unspeakable slaughter of men, the grief of heart-broken women, the theft of the heritage of generations to come; the mountainous debts; the loss to science and letters and art; the ruthless destruction of the creative work of centuries! What conceivable place can all of this have in a religion of good tidings to all men?

The answer comes that a nation has moral and spiritual possessions that are worth even such a cost. If war actually resulted (as is far from the truth) in achieving such noble ends, and if the only cost were a material one, it is easily reconciled with the sacrificing spirit of the personality of Christ. However it is in the inherent nature of every war to entail moral and spiritual losses so fundamental and so vast as to conclude the question.

The following is but one illustration from among many of this truth. The basis of the Christian religion is its insistence upon the incalculable worth and dignity of human personality. Christ came to call men to a recognition of the majesty of their possibility as Sons of God. It is impossible, in the very nature of things, to engage in the processes of killing men indefinitely without destroying the sense of the value of personality! The foment of hate which is developed—at home if not in the trenches—would seem to settle the matter for all who believe in a gospel of love. However if there is anything worse than thoroughly hating another it is thoroughly despising him. It is the logic of every war that each nation considers upon a net valuation of the personalities of their opponents, that they are less than worthless and should be destroyed. Christianity cannot be served by using a means which is a denial of its essential basis. One is reminded of the story of the steamship that caught fire, and in a frantic effort to get to shore and save the passengers the fuel ran out. The furniture was first used, then the wood-work, and finally the passengers themselves were thrown by the crew into the furnaces. Upon similar analysis it can be shown that nearly every fundamental moral obligation is broken down by war.

In attempting to evade the foregoing conclusions, there is a popular tendency to classify wars. There are good and bad wars, or defensive and aggressive. Such is the kind of loose thinking that befuddles the real issues. In the first place it might be said that there is not, nor can there be, any exact standard of defensive war. Each nation in Europe claims to be fighting such a war, and practically every modern war can be brought within this righteous fold, by an application of the sound military axiom that an early aggression is the best method of defense when supposed danger threatens. In the second place care has been taken in the foregoing analysis to refer only to the losses that are necessarily incident to any kind of war.

The apologist for war gains no strength to his cause by a justification of the use of force, with certain analogies,—as that of the police. Force is utterly colorless in itself. It takes on the color of the spirit in which it is used, and the ends which it actually (and not ostensibly) achieves. Real police force, as we know it, is the expression of right principles for good ends. If a war could be imagined in which the spirit behind the armies was one of love, and where the net results were moral and righteous it would be compatible with Christian precept. But no such war—defensive or otherwise—has ever yet appeared in history.

A type of the purest sophistry are attempted analogies drawn from such questions as to what one should do if a burglar entered the house or a man assaulted one's mother. What one should do in such a case is so essentially a personal matter, presenting very simple issues and effecting a very limited number of people, that it presents absolutely no analogy to international war-fare. The difference, if it be one of degree, is so vast as to become a difference of kind. The warring of nations presents a vast range of social implication, wholly absent in the attempted analogue. The streams of influence affect millions wholly unconnected with the controversy and social toxins are developed that permeate the whole social order with their poison even to succeeding generations. Numerous illustrations of the soundness of this analysis suggest themselves, such for instance, as the law of criminal conspiracy, where that which is lawful for one person may become unlawful if done by three or more.

Space does not allow of discussion here of the mis-named doctrine of non-resistance as an international policy. It can be demonstrated not only that armed resistance in the name of moral chievement is philosophically futile, but that so-called non-resistance as a practical policy of national safety offers more hope of ultimate success. Belgium and Luxemburg were both invaded. Belgium resisted and lies desolate; Luxemburg fared far better. Brussels did not resist and is standing; Louvain resisted and is sacked to the ground. Several cities of France were asked how many soldiers they needed to resist the German invasion. The reply come back, "Send not a single soldier and we will be perfectly safe." In early Pennsylvania the colony was wholly unarmed and never suffered an Indian massacre while this policy continued, although awful massacres were occurring to the North and South. If it is suggested that Belgium is desolate because she was weak, it must be remembered that so we might be too weak even with the greatest conceivable preparation. Furthermore it is such preparation that is the most efficient cause of war, but that is a thesis in itself. In either policy we are taking a material risk. Far better to take it along the line of truth and righteousness.

However in a proper analysis it is not a question of seeming failure or success as a matter of expediency. There are two ways of approach to a question for the purpose of determining conduct. In one, expediency controls; in the other, righteousness. One has to do with results; the other with principles. Both methods of approach are valid and it is merely a question of which is safer and better adapted to a discovery of truth. In a given case it is just as easy to ascertain what seems to be right as what seems to be expedient, and vastly safer. Having caught the vision of a principle, we should follow it unflinchingly, leaving the results to Him who gave the vision.

The opportunity for the Society of Friends in this troubled hour is unprecedented. English Friends have written their testimony in living letters of pure white across the lurid page of present events, pointing to a better and more honorable way. The writer is deeply concerned that American Friends do not fail before the test. Amidst the label of voices advising as to the reconstruction of the civilization that has broken down the church should rise to its rightful place as inspired leader. The Society of Friends is almost the only body that, through two hundred and fifty years of testimony in word and practice, has thought this problem through. Our position is grounded in a great conviction as to the nature and worth of human personality. Just as man and God are meant for each other in an intimate unity of purpose and life, so man and man are meant to work out together an atmosphere of love and fellowship in which divine possibilities can be realized. In such a conception, neither war nor anything connected therewith, can have any conceivable place.

It may be said that such a position is impossible. Impossible for what? For human nature alone,—yes. But if the moral liability of the human soul is measured by what is possible to human nature, then there is no meaning in the mission of Christ.

We will be called queer and impracticable but it happens that such have moulded the destiny of the race. We may be accused of a holier—than—thou attitude, but such a term has no application to those who, faced with the alternative of easy agreement with friends or loyalty to the revealed truth of God, dare to choose the latter. Some seem content to walk with crowds in the stifling air of the lower plains. Some would seek, at least, to walk with God in the lonesome paths of the heights of truth.

"Dreamers of dreams

We take the taunt with gladness;

Knowing that God, beyond the years you see,

Hath wrought the dreams that count with you for madness,

Into the substance of the life to be."

PEACE DEPARTMENT

NOTE:—The following communication was furnished before the announcement of peace proposals by Germany. It shows something of the strong feeling which exists for peace, and indicates also something of the nature of the efforts which have been put forth for at least the past year to find some way in which the serious consideration of the conditions necessary for peace might be brought about.—Allen D. Hole.

Mr. Charles P. Trevelyan, the famous writer and statesman of Great Britain, has sent to his country by hand-messenger the following remarkable open letter for publication which has been given to the American Neutral Conference Committee, whose object is to urge our government to mediate through a conference of neutral nations and to support the President in any effort for peace.

Mr. Charles P. Trevelyan is one of the leaders of the international movement in England. He is in the House of Commons and when the war broke out he resigned from the government with Lord Morley and Mr. John Burns. He is one of the founders of the Union of Democratic Control and has spoken constantly, in spite of unpopularity, in favor of a negotiated peace. He has deprecated the cult of hatred during the war, has resisted conscription and has defended the freedom of speech and writing in Great Britain.

He made a speech in the House of Commons calling attention to President Wilson's readiness to help in a League of Peace, which was listened to with great interest and evoked from Mr. Lloyd George a half apology for his repudiation of American mediation.

Mr. Trevelyan's open letter is as follows:

In the week when Europe was rushing down into war, before I believed that my own country would become involved in it, I spoke at a dinner of the Mayflower Club in London. I said that, if the catastrophe did come to Europe, the Mayflower would become a name of even greater meaning to the world. For the one hope for the preservation of our western civilization would be the United States. And now as the war months lengthen into years I know my prophecy to be true. The relative strength of America grows as the vitality of Europe is ebbing away. It is not the loss of money and of credit. It is not only the waste and desolation of provinces during the war and the economic catastrophes and political upheavals which will everywhere follow in its wake. It is not only the millions of dead and maimed among the young men. But it is the complete collapse of the old national standards. Three years ago no Englishmen would have believed that even the stress of a great war would make it impossible to know the truth about the failure or success of military or diplomatic efforts of the government; that news would be officially suppressed and garbled; that newspapers would print just what Government censors told them and no more. Nor would anyone here have believed three years ago that nearly two thousand Englishmen would have been imprisoned for conscientious refusal of military service, some of them condemned to death, and only respited at the last moment, and many bullied and tortured by the military. These things and many others are the price of a war like this. After the war tyranny and militarism may possibly be burnt up in the wrath of instinctive popular reaction in Germany and Great Britain. But in Germany they will cling with fierce tenacity to their old strongholds and in Britain to their new found opportunity. It is in this struggle that the profound effect of America may be felt with its unbroken tradition of liberty, its existing democratic success, its faith in peace. If in these things it remains faithful, it will not only secure its own immense destiny, but remain a beacon to the old nations in the hour of their agony and despair.

But there is practical and immediate help which America can be giving to the world, beyond the ultimate force of its example. It is that about which I chiefly wish to write. Americans must by this time be chary of believing the press of the belligerent countries. But there is nothing about which less truth is told than about the real feelings of the belligerent peoples. The newspapers only represent what they would like them to be and the more imaginative section of the ruling class still think they are. But that picture bears not the slightest relation to the truth. Probably the people of Great Britain are the least weary of the war. We started the richest of the warring nations. So we are still. Owing to the prodigious credit there is a fictitious prosperity created by high wages which prevents the positive want which in Germany and Austria accentuates the other catastrophes of war. Until the battle begun on the Somme the idea of the wholesale slaughter of the British youth had not entered into the ordinary calculations of Englishmen. But even so, the war weariness is rapidly becoming universal in Great Britain. It is not that a movement for peace at any price either has existed or has begun to exist. Those who like myself and Messrs. Snowden, Ponsonby, and Ramsay MacDonald have for months been pressing in the House of Commons and out of it for an early effort at negotiations, have no more desire than the wildest war-monger that the war should end before Germany is ready to evacuate France and Belgium and by acts acknowledge the abandonment of all designs at aggression or aggrandizement. Meetings such as we hold to discuss what line a reasonable peace should follow are now attended by increasing multitudes of attentive people. In the great industrial centres—Yorkshire, Wales and Glasgow—there is never any disturbance. There is simply a clearly increasing desire for the Government to negotiate a peace if it can. And there is nothing which has given such a stimulus to this feeling as the interview of Mr. Lloyd George.

For the first time a responsible British statesman openly avowed his belief in a prolonged war of attrition. Coming immediately after the gravity of the British losses on the Somme had begun to give the British public some notion of what a war of attrition meant to them, many moderate supporters of the war have begun to think seriously whether it is not time for the Government to formulate its real objective and see how nearly the Germans are prepared to meet them.

If I were asked to briefly define the attitude of the mass of my countrymen I should say, that they are heartily sick of the war; that they are not aware of the weariness of the Germans and the willingness of the German Government to negotiate and that consequently they regard peace as hopeless and therefore are not yet prepared to advocate it. But if once it were brought to the consciousness of ordinary Englishmen that Germany were ready for a reasonable peace, to abjure her conquests and above all to evacuate and help to compensate Belgium, a rapid and radical change would appear in popular opinion. At the moment it is clear that the belligerent Governments will not have mediation. But what I have said suggests that there is another possible function for neutral Governments besides trying behind the diplomatic scenes to bring the proud Governments together. Those governments all eventually watch and fear public opinion. The art of forming, deluding, changing and enraging public opinion has been cultivated during the war by the authorities of every belligerent country as a principal department of their activity. The hatreds of the peoples have been cultivated by the exaggeration of every wrong act and the suppression of every decent act of the enemy. For in the last resort the continuance of the war depends on hate. If however, some voice so loud that it reverberated across the seas, so important that the censorship could not exclude it, spoke not to the Governments but to the Peoples, a change would begin to come. Suppose that to the British people, for instance, an American President were to be able to say in quite simple and direct language that Germany was ready to give up Belgium and France if the British Government would negotiate. First would come a roar of indignation from the reactionary British press. The Government circles would shudder at the lack of diplomatic reserve. There might be no open response at once. But from the day of the utterance public opinion would begin to form on the irrefutable knowledge that a peace could be obtained satisfactorily on the question which was most vital to the British people. This indeed asks the American President to risk his possible value as a backstair diplomat. But American presidents are apt to believe that the commonsense of common men can make better judgments on vast issues than even well meaning rulers. They apply that faith in their own political crises. Perhaps they might help our poor European world by trusting the soul of our common folk.

It is possible that it might be said in objection to my view that President Wilson has already tried and failed to obtain response from European opinion. In May he announced the willingness of America to abandon the old policy of isolation and to co-operate in ensuring the peace of the world. It is true that this great historic utterance was treated with strange neglect by the belligerent Governments. Its meaning was distorted by the European press. It seemed to be seed falling on hard ground. Only those of us who in these dark days had our eyes on the international picture are once grateful yet for that pronouncement which at once gave us hope. We know that the better desires of our own British statesmen had presented international co-operation as the hope of the world at the end of the war. Mr. Asquith and Lord Grey of Falloden had mentioned it. It had been left to us to preach it incessantly in these war days. No member of the Government or of those busy only with the war ever spoke of it again. But to us all it was a great beacon of hope that the American Government had officially declared itself for the creation of an international system and announced its willingness to co-operate. We regretted that there was no immediate recognition of this policy by the British Government. But they are laboring in heavy waters. And while half the cabinet is talking about continuing the war by economic means as soon as the military operations cease, it is hard for the more rational half of the Cabinet to talk about the League to Enforce Peace. But Mr. Lloyd George's declaration in his interview against the mediation of America or any other neutral nation was so direct a rejection (perhaps unintended) of the American offer that discussion began. Mr. Lloyd George was forced by myself in the House of Commons to give a tardy recognition of the value of the President's offer. And a few days later Lord Grey made a franker and more hearty acknowledgement of the possibilities opening out after the war, as a result of the new policy.

Great Britain is now aware of the hope offered to the world by the President's speech and by the acceptance of the policy by both parties in the Presidential struggle. But our people do not yet fully see its bearing on the conclusion of the war.

What is it that we seek, what does saner opinion seek in France, Germany and elsewhere? It is security for which the nations are crying. They fear to sheath their swords if they do not see security looming in the near distance. But what offers security except this very League of the Nations which European statesmen will only think of as an expedient to be considered after the war is over. My countrymen do not yet see—but they will if you are persistent—that your approval of the League of Peace amounts to American co-operation in the objects for which they profess to be fighting—a secure civilization. Sooner or later your espousal of that plan will affect the course of the war. It will shorten it. They do not yet see that your plan ought to be the first of the terms of peace. Is it altogether impossible that, as the war drags on wearily for the next few months, the newly elected President should be insisting more and more on the value of the new American policy until it becomes the plain hope of Salvation for Europe? It needs to be repeated. For in these days the essence of a democratic appeal is that it should be incessant until it is fully understood. If this message is heard in loud and ever louder tones across the Atlantic it will end by being the policy of the world. It will take the place of the fury of war denunciation, of the threats of annihilation and of the ravings of revenge, of which we are all so weary here.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

A NEW YEAR'S SOCIAL

At a New Year's Social, divide the company into twelve groups according to birth months, then have each group get together and give some stunt for the evening's entertainment. For instance: July might march in with all kinds of noise, bells, horns, etc. April can give some April Fool stunt. December could sing Christmas carols, etc. The members of each group can show their originality in many ways, and a whole evening's entertainment will thus be furnished.

(If you would like to know "what to serve, or what games to play," or other suggestions for Socials, send to the Young Friends Board, for "The Jolly Book," 15 cents, or "Social Plans," 75c.)

THE COLLEGE MEN'S CAMPAIGN

Most interesting situations are coming to light in our canvass of the colleges for young Friends. We find these young people in the most out-of-the-way places sometimes. Our effort is to so keep in touch with them that they shall be saved to the church. When the lists have been arranged according to those in the limits of a Yearly Meeting the proper officers will be notified to get in touch with these Friends. Any young Friends who are away at school will be followed up by the Young Friends Board, if pastors or parents will send us their names and addresses.

RALLY DAY REPORTS

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Dayton—"We gave a dialogue at the Sunday School hour, a modification of the one put out by the Board of Young Friends Activities. The leader announced that the Bible School class had undertaken to raise $30 for the Young Friends Movement, and that our class had pledged $12 (only six members). Pledge cards were passed. The Ladies' Aid gave $10, the S. S. voted $3 and when the baskets were passed we had $30. Pledges were afterward taken, which make a total of $30.03. At the close of the meeting one young man, a stranger, said there was more life in that meeting than he had seen anywhere."

New Castle—Offering, $6.17.

East Main St., Richmond—"We presented the claims of the Board of Young Friends Activities at the morning meeting, followed by a powerful sermon, and took a special offering using a special envelope, and received $25 in cash and $8.22 in pledges."

Whitewater, Richmond—Offering, $1.58.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Poplar Ridge, near Carmel—"Three of our young people read papers on 'Origin and Purpose of the Young Friends Movement,' 'Power of Habit,' 'Missions.' Chester Reagan gave the address. We had a good meeting. We have a number of young people but no C. E. Our offering was $3.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING

Glens Falls—Offering, $4.65.

Clinton Corners—(See following article). Offering, $15.55.

Croton Valley, near Ossining—Offering, $25.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING

Woonsocket, R. I.—Offering, $1.35.

NOTICE

New York Yearly Meeting has adopted a significant program of goals for the coming year which will be printed and distributed soon. The continuation committee of the Yorktown Heights Conference is undertaking a series of similar conferences in the southern Quarters of the Yearly Meeting. Great interest is manifest.

NOTES

Thomas E. Jones spent Christmas holidays in a special series of meetings at Sedley, Va.

CHRISTMAS RALLIES

Every Meeting should hold a young Peoples Rally or week end Conference for the Young People during Christmas Holidays. Use the young people who have returned home for vacation. They will want to sit in their old seats again and will want to help the Meeting they love. Hold some socials too. These are always in place for Young People. Secure a gospel team from one of the colleges and hold a ten days' or one week's meeting. This will help our College Friends and will give a new view to the local young people.

HINTS FOR A HOLIDAY SOCIAL

(Hints for a social to be given during holidays for the College or High School students who cannot get home.)

"Make them the guests of honor and put them into a formal reception line. Call out the names of the states, those from a particular State will gather into a group in one part of the room to get acquainted with each other. Leader calls out every one whose name begins with "A" and on down the alphabet. Then let each one declare his name and home.

"Decorate with college emblems. Arrange for the oldest college graduate to tell about the games and customs of his college days. Follow this up by a speech from some college president or professor, who will describe the purpose of the college. Let some college graduate or student read a paper on the advantages of a college education. Ask the pastor or Christian layman to answer the question, "Why a Denominational college?" Invite the Glee Club to sing. Be sure to invite all the High School Students. We as Christian young people need to encourage attendance at the denominational school."

If you want further hints, or plans for other special socials, what to serve, what games to play, send to us, for "Social Plans for Young People" price 75 cents. Or "The California Jolly Book," price 15 cents, from which the above "hints" are taken. Young Friends' Board, Dunreith, Ind.

REPORT OF YOUNG FRIENDS' DAY AS OBSERVED BY Y. P. S. C. E. OF CLINTON CORNERS, N. Y.

Clinton Corners, N. Y.—Young Friends Day was observed here on November 26th by our Christian Endeavor Society, at the usual meeting hour, 7:30 on Sunday evening. Thirty-four members of our society were present and marched from a class room into the main auditorium of our church building singing "Onward Christian Soldiers," and carrying banners bearing the words: For Christ and the Church, The Entire Church at Its Entire Task, Friends Christian Endeavorers.

The banners together with our pledge and efficiency chart were placed in a conspicuous place in the front of the room. The following program was rendered under the leadership of our president, Henry G. Burkowske:

1. Song, The Son of God Goes Forth to War.
2. Prayer, by our pastor, Rev. Herbert L. Huffman.
3. Responsive Reading, Ps. 111, led by Leland Boice.
4. Young Peoples' Chorus, by young people of church choir.
5. Leader's Statement of Origin, Purpose and Work of Young Friends' Movement.
6. Song by Young Men of our Society.
7. Reading of most interesting portions of last year's report, by our

- corresponding secretary, Mary E. Bedell.
8. Recitation, Be Trustful, Soul—Gladys Birdsall.
 9. Dialogue, The Young Friends' Movement.
Studios Friend—Harrie J. Lovelace.
Johnnie Endeavor—Oakley Hall.
Modern Young Friend—Walter Bedell.
After a period of silence following this dialogue, the entire audience, led by Johnnie Endeavor, joined in singing, Jesus Saviour Pilot Me.
 10. Presentation and Adoption of Program for Coming Year's Work of Our Society, led by Harry Halllock.
Adoption of Motto, "The Entire Church at its Entire Task."
Clara E. Drum—Adoption of Efficiency Campaign.
(Our temperature is now 98 degrees.)
Day Burhans—Undertaking Our Share in the Millions—Thousands Campaign.
Florence Bedell—Undertaking Our Share in Special Denominational Campaign.
Walter Bedell—Securing Subscriptions to The American Friend.
Margaret Fossler—Cedar Lake Conference.
Harry Lovelace—Sending a Delegate to N. Y. Yearly Meeting.
 11. Hymn, Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken.
 12. "Personal Appeals for Support of Young Friend's Work."—Herbert L. Huffman.
 13. Offering.
 14. Public signing of C. E. pledge by new members.
 15. Announcements.
 16. Song, Blest Be the Tie That Binds.
 17. C. E. Benediction.

Our plate offering was $5.55. At our C. E. business meeting and social held Dec. 8 we voted to contribute $10 in addition to the above mentioned offering. Our society is being canvassed for enrollment in Young Friends' Movement. The report of this will come soon. Our audience consisted of approximately 80 interested listeners.

TO THE YOUNG FRIENDS OF NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING

Dear Friends:

During these two years of what is called the worst war in the history of the world, our attention has been brought to the sufferings of the human race, especially to the people of those nations whose homes were in the war-wasted country. I say "were" because from the few authentic reports that we have received from the belligerent countries not many "homes" remain.

To us, therefore, who have peace and happiness, is allotted the task of trying to help our stricken brothers and sisters.

We cannot all be foreign missionaries, and even if it were possible it would not be best, but can we not do some home missionary work for the sufferers?

Why can we not deny ourselves a few earthly pleasures in order to give a few of those things that are absolute necessities. A little time, thought and money from each of us young Friends would help as many young folks in more needy circumstances. We might do much to help if we only stopped to think once in awhile.

In a few of our meetings we have organized Mission Bands of the young folks. Of course we have the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, but that is usually for the older women. What we need is a Junior Missionary Society in each meeting, not merely in one or two, but in every meeting in which there are some young people. Please do not hold back because "there are not enough young folks in the meeting." It doesn't take many, and the work of one band may be combined with the work of another meeting, if by doing so the results will be more effectual.

Mission study classes have been organized in a few meetings. On an average we all know far too little about mission work, and therefore it would help us to do more effectual work if we were to know just where to direct our energies. We all know from actual experience that energy mispent is an equal amount of energy wasted. We certainly can not afford to waste any, life is far too short.

Some of our missionary work in foreign lands has had to be postponed for the present, but soon we shall need to redouble our efforts to make up for the great waste going on now.

But in whatever we undertake let us remember our Heavenly Guide. If we only ask Him, He will show us the way. Your sincere friend,

RACHEL MOSTROM,
Supt. Junior Mission Work of

EARLHAM COLLEGE NOTES

It is announced that the Board of Trustees has granted a leave of absence for the second semester beginning January 31, 1917, to Dr. Joseph Herschel Coffin, head of the department of Philosophy. During the second half of the year Dr. Coffin will substitute as head of the department of Philosophy at Mt. Holyoke College. The college authorities have appointed as the substitute instructor at Earlham, Mr. Henry Bentson, of New York City. Mr. Bentson is a graduate student in Columbia University, where he has finished all required work in residence for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

Ethel L. Henderson Johnson, 1909, wife of William Johnson, 1910, was buried in Earlham cemetery Saturday morning, Dec. 16th. Since graduation, William Johnson has been a member of the faculty of Pacific College, Oregon, and at the time of the death of his wife, they were residing in California. The funeral services occurred at the home of Mrs. Johnson's mother, in West Richmond and were conducted by President Kelly.

The Congregational Calendar for 1917, distributed among the members of the Congregational Church throughout the entire country, contains among others, the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Roderick Scott, of Foochow, China, who have an appointment as missionaries under the American Board of the Congregational Church.

"Religious Education," the official organ of the Religious Education Association, has recently published two articles by President Robert L. Kelly, one on the topic, "The Educational Aspects of School Credits for extramural Bible study," and the other answering the question, "Are Our Liberties in Jeopardy?"

EDUCATIONAL COUNCIL

Editor The American Friend:

Please announce the annual meeting of the Council of Church Boards of Education, at the Hotel LaSalle, Chicago, at 9:30 a. m., Jan. 10, 1917; also the meeting of the Association of American Colleges at the same place, Jan. 11-13.

During the same time there will be in session the Association of Church Workers in State Universities, the M. E. Educational Association, the Presbyterian College Union and the United Presbyterian Educational Association.

Friends engaged in educational work will do well to be in Chicago at this time.

Very sincerely yours,
ROBERT L. KELLY.

The nearer we come to the Lord, and the more intimate our fellowship, the easier it always is to pour out our hearts in fervent supplication.

Friends Arch Street Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Friends and others of quiet taste will find comfortable accommodations here, when stopping in Philadelphia. Single rooms 75c per day. Double room, with private bath $2.50. Meals at moderate prices.

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

THE OUTLOOK

We have asked for $60,000 for the current expenses of our Foreign Missionary work before Ninth Month 30, 1917.

The reasons for requesting this increase in missionary offerings were fully explained in The American Friend for Eleventh Month 2d and 9th.

Everyone realized that it would take heroic effort but we firmly believed God was leading us to undertake to bring our gifts up to this amount.

Nearly two months have passed since we sent out the call for increased missionary gifts and Friends very properly are asking, "What progress is being made? Is the church as a whole going to respond with the larger missionary offering this year?"

Briefly, we wish to say there is every reason for encouragement—offerings are increasing and individual gifts are larger and more numerous than a year ago; a few Friends have sent in gifts of $100, one has promised $500 and another has given $2,500 for investment, while many have given smaller amounts.

Next week, however, we propose to print on this page statements showing in greater detail just what is taking place in the various Yearly Meetings and what is being done toward raising the $60,000 so urgently needed before the end of Ninth Month.

On behalf of the nearly sixty missionaries now working on the foreign field under this Board, we wish to express to all who are contributing toward the support of the work abroad and to all who are working to increase missionary interest and giving, the deep appreciation which they all feel for your help, however rendered, and for your prayers.

These missionaries would, we feel sure, wish us for them to say to all of you, "A Joyous New Year;" and we want also to say it on our own behalf.

The American Friends Board of Foreign Missions

PLANS WHICH ARE WORKING SUCCESSFULLY

There was a certain meeting where for a time missions received little attention. But things have changed lately and that meeting now is doing more at home and is doing much more for the work abroad. These are some of the steps taken in bringing missions to their rightful place:

1. There were two persons who undertook to promote missionary interest in that meeting.
2. The Monthly Meeting appointed a Missionary Committee.
3. A Women's Missionary Society was formed.
4. The Missionary Committee arranged for a meeting with a strong missionary address.
5. Members of the meeting and congregation were asked to give to missions on the weekly basis, which most of them agreed to do.
6. The Missionary Committee of the Society started a reading circle.
7. Systematic missionary instruction is, we are told, shortly to be introduced into the Bible School.

ANOTHER CONVERSION AT HAPPY GROVE

Near the close of an extraordinarily interesting report just received by the Board of Missions appears the statement that one of the girls in the Happy Grove School, in Jamaica, has recently been converted. We hope in an early issue to have room to insert the entire report. This girl, as the report states, was born in Guatemala. Her mother, a woman of Spanish descent, died when the girl was small. The father is a Jamaican.

MORE THAN A DESCRIPTION OF MEXICO

A series of significant articles on Mexico is to appear in The American Friend beginning next week. They are much more than a description of places or events. They seek to show the significance of present day movements in Mexico and to reveal the particular service which Friends may render at this time. The writer, R. Solomon Tice, one of the missionaries of the American Friends Board, has spent ten years in Mexico and writes, therefore, from personal observation and experience. The articles bear the title "Some Facts Friends Should Know About Mexico and Our Missions There." The Board of Missions earnestly hopes these articles may receive wide and careful reading.

INDIAN DEPARTMENT

ASSOCIATED EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The present Indian missions of Friends in Oklahoma are the culmination of more than a century of splendid missionary effort by Friends for the Indians east and west.

The Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs will print occasionally in these columns some account of the work and the workers of other years, in the hope that Friends of the rising generation may feel called to continue the efforts so nobly put forth in the past.

John D. Lang, a resident of Maine prise in the latter state. These missions had been broken up by the removal of the respective Indian tribes west of the Mississippi river.

In 1842, under the joint auspices of New York and New England Yearly Meetings, John D. Lang, accompanied by Samuel Taylor, Jr., also a minister of New England Yearly Meeting, made a journey of about four months' duration among several of the Indian tribes west of the Mississippi.

They first visited the Winnebago Indians in north-eastern Iowa and then and a minister of New England Yearly Meeting, was one of the most prominent Friends of the 19th century in the Indian work.

For many years he was an active member of the Indian Committee of his Yearly Meeting that had especial care of the Penobscot and Passamaquoddy Indians of Maine. In 1842 he made a journey to the Indians in the west that aroused an interest among New York and New England Friends for the Western Indians that is active to this day.

Friends of New York Yearly Meeting had maintained a work among the Indians of that state early in the century, and Friends of Baltimore and Ohio had engaged in a similar enter-gradually worked southward to the present state of Oklahoma. They visited the Winnebagoes, Sacs and Foxes, Shawnese, Kickapoos, Delawares, Kansas, Pottawatomies, Osages, Senecas, Cherokees, Creeks and Choctaws, and came somewhat into touch with various other tribes.

During the journey the hearts of the traveling Friends were occasionally uplifted by incidents tending to assure them that the earlier work of Friends had not been in vain. They met a Stockbridge woman who as a girl was educated in a Friends School on Long Island. Her ease and grace of bearing and the splendid condition of her family and household affairs testified to the benefits of her early training.

The tradition of William Penn's kindness to the Indians and of the Great Treaty at Shackamaxon was still alive among the Delaware Indians. One of the principal men of the Munsees (a division of the Delaware tribe) spoke feelingly, even tearfully, of the long time kindness of Friends to the Indians: "Brothers, your fathers, William Penn and others of your old men, and our old men the Munsees, lived in peace like brothers, and made the treaty under the elm tree, and the Quakers and the Munsees have always been friends, and my heart is glad you still think about your poor Indian brethren and come and see them; for it makes poor Indians' heart glad when they see their Quaker brothers."

The visit to the Friends' mission among the Shawnese in Kansas was the most important part of the journey as far as direct and permanent results were concerned. The traveling Friends found twenty-three boys and fourteen girls in the school. They seemed to be well cared for and well trained. They were proficient in their various lines of study and could answer readily the questions put to them with regard to the Scriptures. The Friends held councils with the chiefs and head men of the Shawnese at which the usual assurances of friendship and goodwill were interchanged.

The report of John D. Lang and Samuel Taylor, Jr., to New York and New England Yearly Meetings contained many practical suggestions on the Indian policy of the United States government and these suggestions were embodied in a joint memorial forwarded by those yearly meetings to the government.

The part of the report that described the work of the Friends mission among the Shawnese was also productive of results and induced the two Yearly Meetings to give to the mission substantial aid in a financial way during the succeeding years.

At a later time the efforts of John D. Lang for the Indians were recognized by President Grant, who appointed him in 1870 as a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners. He made several important journeys among the Indians, including one in his seventy-fifth year, that took him across the plains to the Pacific coast.

After his death the Board of Indian Commissioners passed the following resolution in his memory:

"The Board has sustained a serious loss in the death of one of its oldest, most respected, and most useful members, Mr. John D. Lang, who died on the 24th day of last May, at the ripe age of eighty years.

"His deep interest in the cause of Indian civilization extending over a period of more than half a century, his stanch friendship for that race, his known integrity, strong good sense, and superior business qualifications recommend him for service on this Board, to which he was appointed by President Grant in 1870. He was regular in his attendance upon the meetings of the Board, often at great personal sacrifice, took an active part in its deliberations, laboring faithfully and unselfishly, even when the infirmities of age were creeping upon him, for the elevation of the Indian race, and cheerfully responded to any call for service in their behalf."

Such were the efforts of an honored member of our Society to extend the Kingdom of God among the sons of the forest. Are there not young Friends today who are ready to take up and carry forward the great work of John D. Lang and others of his generation?

—Special Committee.

The Friends' Indian Missions in Oklahoma are managed by the Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs, a Board of the Five Years Meeting. Address, Edward M. Wistar, Chairman, Provident Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE NEBRASKA PAGE

AT PLAINVIEW, NEBRASKA

Two features of special interest during the month of November were Rally Day Sunday for the Bible School and for the Y. P. S. C. E., and the observance of Young Friends Day. On the former occasion the following subjects were most helpfully discussed by our young people as well as by older members: The Need of a Teacher's Training Class; How to Promote Lesson Study Among the Scholars; Evangelism in the Sunday School; The Opening and Closing of the Bible School—How to Make it Most Effective; The Home Department and Cradle Roll; Equipment for the Primary Rooms; What Constitutes an Ideal Junior Endeavor; What the Junior Means to the Child; An Endeavorer's Responsibility; How to Lead a C. E. Prayer Meeting; Endeavor Extension Work.

Prof. W. R. Lewis, Field Secretary of Nebraska Yearly Meeting, by his presence and helpful discussions, gave added impetus to these conference hours and his inspirational messages both morning and evening were very heartily received.

The latter feature was the observance of Young Friends Day, which was entered into enthusiastically. The suggested program sent out by the Young Friends Board was used with some variations and the results were gratifying. An offering was also taken for the Young Friends Work. The six mottoes conspicuously posted in the church throughout the day made everyone in attendance at each service realize that "The Young Friends are the Future Church" and that "Front Line Quakers in Young People's Work" ever stand "For Christ and the Church."

AT POMONA PARK, GRAND JUNCTION, COLORADO

We observed Armenian and Syrian Relief Day and collections in all the services, including the Bible School were devoted to this cause.

We did not observe Young People's Day at the time appointed by the Board as nearly all our young men and women are away attending college, Normal School or teaching. We hope to have a meeting devoted to this interest during the holiday vacation, when they will be at home.

The C. E. Society has sent three boxes of apples to Clyde Roberts, missionary in Mexico.

The Union Thanksgiving service was held in our church. The pastor of the M. E. church preached an excellent and appropriate sermon. The music was good, furnished by our church.

The attendance at meeting and Bible School has been increased during a contest conducted by the latter. Some families never before attending are now members and regular in attendance. This leads us to see the value of united work and personal invitation. There were twenty new members added to the regular school, thirty-five to the Home Department and three to the Cradle Roll.

The deepening spiritual interest felt before the contest commenced is still apparent and we are praying for a real revival.

There must be moments of solitary communion, if there are to be hours of strenuous service and a life of continual consecration.

DR. CLARK'S MONTHLY LETTER Christian Endeavor Headquarters

December, 1916.

Dear Friends:

My mail has been so crowded with good things this past month that I cannot begin to give them to you in this letter, but must ask you to consult The Christian Endeavor World from week to week for news from many Field Secretaries, and others as to what the different states propose to do for our nation-wide evangelistic campaign during Christian Endeavor Week. Put in a nutshell, the letters tell me that the writers are all wide-awake to the importance of the Week and to its vast opportunities. Is this true of your state, your city, your society?

News From Far Countries.

1. Of a fine state convention in New South Wales, Australia, where, according to The Sydney Telegraph, the Juniors who crowded the great and beautiful auditorium of the City Hall were "as thick as blackberries in January." Think of blackberries in January! A simile good only in the Antipodes.

2. War effects even the Junior meetings, for the streets of many British cities are so darkened lest the Zepelins find a target, that some Junior meetings have been moved to early afternoon, but the plucky Juniors do not give them up.

3. Monastir, once Turkish, then Servian, then Bulgarian, now Servian again, is the home of four Christian Endeavor societies,—that is, unless the guns that have made this devoted city a howling waste have also destroyed the American Mission and its work. Mrs. Clark and I, a few years ago, visited these societies and greatly admired the devotion of missionaries and converts alike.

4. A new society in the great Presbyterian church in Pyeng Yang, Korea, is likely to be the mother of many others. This church has a mid-week prayer meeting with a thousand in attendance.

5. A wonderful Christian Endeavor convention in the Mukti Mission of India was largely entertained by the beloved Pandita Ramabai, who herself prepared and served the food for 200 native delegates from a distance.

6. Japan has gained more than half the new societies aimed for in the "Double Our Number" Campaign, started eight months ago.

Faithfully your friend,

FRANCIS E. CLARK.

DEDICATION OF THE ALLEN JAY MEMORIAL CHURCH

The following is taken from the brief historical sketch found on the last page of the souvenir program: "From time to time for almost a hundred years, Friends' minds have seen, with an eye of faith, a meeting-house on the west side of Whitewater River (Richmond, Ind.). Sometimes it was as a home for the Indiana Yearly Meeting; sometimes as a church home on the Earlham campus; again, as a great institutional center of Friends in America; and ever, as a holy temple of Jehovah." Allen Jay crystalized in his own thought and purpose the vague aspirations of the preceding generations, and under his leadership definite steps were taken for the establishment of a meeting and later the erection of a meeting-house in West Richmond. The building which looks to Allen Jay as its most earnest advocate was formally opened as a memorial to him on Sunday, December 17th, 1916. As a memorial it is the testimony, not of one or a few, but of more than two hundred loving friends from the local community and from among Friends in this country and even in the old world, who have given liberally to erect this building, dedicated to the glory of God and the spread of His Kingdom.

The church is built on what was formerly the property of Naomi Harrison Jay. It was therefore doubly fitting that, she as the widow of Allen Jay and the former owner of the property, should be present at the dedication services and leave with the membership of West Richmond Monthly Meeting a message fraught with early associations and tender memories, together with hope and faith in the future.

The church is conveniently located within two blocks of Earlham College, and in the heart of a residential district of Richmond where already dwell many Friends and into which new families are constantly moving. It is made of dark brown rough-surfaced brick with sandstone trimmings. The interior woodwork is birch with mahogany finish. The stained glass windows are in artistically blended tones of yellow and green. The basement, which will become the present home of the Bible School and prayer meeting, is equipped with every facility to foster the social life of the meeting. The following gifts were announced during the dedication services: Memorial windows for Charles Albert and Mary

H. Tebbetts presented by Charles E. Tebbetts; for Mary Ann Jenkins presented by Amasa Jenkins; for Eli and Mahalah Jay presented by Abram Pearson; for Amelia Test presented by her brothers and sisters; the religious library for Allen Jay numbering about 400 volumes was presented by Edwin and Eva Jay and Isaac Jay; the pulpit was presented by the grandchildren of Allen Jay, Allen Jay, Jr., Willard Jay and Esther Jay; and a large pulpit Bible by Charles M. and Caroline Woodman.

The dedicatory sermon was preached in the morning by the pastor, Charles M. Woodman, from the subject, "The Real Satisfaction of the House of God." In the afternoon the services turned more toward the opportunities of the church in the community. Words of greeting were spoken for the Ministerial Association of the City by J. J. Rae, D.D.; for the Friends Churches of the City by Francis Anscombe; for the Y. M. C. A. by the Secretary, E. M. Learner; and for the College by Pres. Robert L. Kelly. The sermon of the afternoon was preached by Alexander C. Purdy of Earlham College. Special music for the dedication was provided by a chorus of twenty voices assisted by Miss Mildred Barrett and Mr. Hugh R. Foss. The offerings for the day amounted to $4,100.

In the morning the Bible School filed into the new apartments for its closing exercises led by the Bible School orchestra. A brief address appropriate to the occasion was given by Prof. Arthur Charles of Earlham College.

PRESERVING INDIANA'S CENTEN- NIAL HISTORY

Indiana and Western Yearly meetings, upon the recommendation of their joint committee, which reported to the sessions of 1916, suggested and urged that October 8th, 1916, be designated as the day on which all Friends Meetings in Indiana should hold appropriate exercises, reviewing the part the church had taken in the development, institutions and progress of Indiana during the past century. It was also urged by the committee that papers, sketches and historical material, dealing with the beginnings of local meetings and what the Quakers have contributed toward the making of Indiana, should be carefully prepared with a view to their preservation.

We do not know how general this observance may have been over the state, but all Friends and local meetings are requested to have all articles or papers or programs used at these Centennial celebrations, if not printed, carefully and plainly written or typewritten, duly authenticated, signed and dated, with as much information as possible and the source from which it came, to be forwarded to the Custodian of the respective Yearly meetings for future use. Addresses, papers, etc., based largely upon the experiences and personal knowledge of the authors, should not be lost, but will constitute a most valuable storehouse for future investigations of interest to the church at large in Indiana.

CHARLES M. REAGAN,
Custodian of Western Yearly Meeting.

INDIAN REPORT FOR OCTOBER

It is with thankful hearts that we come with our reports for Tenth Month. Our health in some ways is very much improved, for which we are very grateful to our Heavenly Father, who knows our every need. The first week in the month we enjoyed a trip to Kansas Yearly Meeting, and though for the first time in our lives were not able to attend all the sessions, we felt it was good to be there. Our Indian report came up Thursday morning, and after reading the report as usual we called on our Missionaries, who were present from four Missions, to give short talks of the work from the field. This was very satisfactory to the listening audience, as they brought out the various phases of the work. On our way to Yearly Meeting we stopped off at Chilocco and gave a talk to the 525 interesting young people in that Institution. We also had a meeting for a few minutes of those under the influence of our various Missions, 42 in all present, and we felt that we had a very profitable meeting with them.

Lina B. Lunt has accepted a call to the Mexican Mission work in Wichita, and left for that city on the twenty-seventh. Auntie Kirk has again taken up her abode at Kickapoo, and will be a companion for Elizabeth Test. Austin Hatcher remained at Wichita for a few days after Yearly Meeting closed and had his eyes treated. We are glad to learn that they are greatly improved.

CLARK AND ELMA T. BROWN, Superintendents.

CHURCH AT WORK

Carthage, Ind.—Milo S. Hinckle, pastor at East Main St., Richmond, Indiana, held a two weeks' meeting here beginning on November 16th. His sermons were clear and forceful, delivered in the Spirit and with power. He strongly emphasized the importance of living the Christian life. His hearers were made to feel their need of a higher plane of living. Not only the church but the community was highly favored, for his time was fully occupied, holding children's meetings, men's meetings and talks were given in the public schools. He also preached the Union Thanksgiving sermon before a large and appreciative audience. He was ably assisted in the revival services by the pastor, Harry R. Hole, and his wife. Mr. Hole followed up the meetings by preaching on Sabbath evening on the "History of Baptism in its Spiritual Application as Friends Believe."

New Castle, Ind.—The Friends here fittingly observed Young Friends' Day at the morning service on November 26th. At the close of the Bible school the Endeavorers and the Junior class marched to their places in the audience room to "Onward Christian Soldiers." The classes were led by the primary department, bearing a banner on which was inscribed "A little child shall lead them." The program was in charge of the C. E. Society, assisted by the pastor, Parvin Bond. A service of song was followed by scripture reading and prayer. Perry Wilson, president of the C. E. Society, gave a brief but comprehensive talk on the origin and work of the Young Friends' Movement, that was well calculated to arouse interest and secure support. Every Endeavorer presented different phases of work that the society expects to carry out this coming year. Special music and other exercises made the services helpful to all. A collection resulted in a liberal offering for the work.

Richmond, Indiana, Whitewater—The Young Friends gave their program here on December 10th. The work was presented to a large audience on Sunday evening. It is the aim of our society to enlist the young in active church work and to do community service. There have been several additions to the meeting through the revival meeting here, with Homer

C. Phillips, evangelist, and Lloyd L. Oatley directing the music. The plain gospel was preached in love attended by the convicting power of the Spirit. About seventy-five persons sought definite blessings at an altar of prayer. The church rejoices in the quickening in spiritual life and interest. Some have acknowledged a call to definite public service.

Knowles, Oklahoma—J. N. Walker held a fifteen days' revival meeting here which started in at Gate quarterly meeting held here. There was good unity and help from the other churches. Definite results were ten conversions, eighteen sanctified and thirty-six renewed. Thank God for evangelists who can hew to the line so that souls may locate themselves and be established.

Agra, Kansas—The revival meeting here, which was being conducted under the leadership of Evangelist Lamm of Fremont, Nebraska, came to a close on the evening of December 13th. The country has not been so deeply stirred with religious conviction for many years. Night after night great crowds gathered to listen to the powerful and convincing messages of the Evangelist. There were many conversions, several of them the most influential men of the community. It seemed that on the final evening not another person could have found place in the room, and long after the sermon the people remained to sing and testify to the saving grace of God. No one could hear this Evangelist ten nights in succession without finding himself profoundly impressed for good. He returned to his home for a vacation before beginning a meeting at Logan, Iowa.

Rose Hill, Kansas—Wichita Quarterly Meeting was held here December 1st and 2nd. Each day was filled with good things. The subject, "What do I expect of my pastoral committee" was discussed on Friday. In the evening a temperance address was given by Dr. Mitchner of Wichita. On Saturday morning J. Arthur Wollam, of Wichita, preached from Hebrews 4:9. This service was followed by lunch and a business meeting. A foreign missionary meeting was held in the evening, the subject for consideration being Cuba. On Sabbath there was a large Bible school at 10:00 and at 11:00 the sermon was preached by Calvin R. Choate. The Christian Endeavor meeting at 6:00 was conducted by John Hammond, a large delegation of young people from Wichita being present. Victor and Elsie R. Marvin, pastors of the Orient Mission at Wichita, had charge of the meeting for worship at 7:30 o'clock. The remark was frequently made that we had one of the best quarterly meetings for a long time.

Rose Hill Monthly Meeting was held on December 9th and was an occasion of blessing. More than the usual amount of business claimed our attention, but a spirit of unity prevailed.

South Fairview, Kansas—A series of meetings commenced at South Fairview two and one-half miles from Glen Elder, Kas., on November 26th and continued two weeks, conducted by the pastors, Cyrus H. and Amy B. Hawkins. The attendance was above the average and was especially large on the Sabbath mornings and evenings. The interest was very good. The old time gospel of repentance toward God and faith in Jesus' blood to save from sin continues to interest the honest heart. While there were not as many definitely blessed as we desired, the church was much revived and took on new strength, much of which we trust will be lasting. Prayer and testimony were heard from those whose voices were seldom heard in public. May the Lord continue to add his blessings. Our hearts were encouraged by the cheering words of our Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, Luther Dillon, and other Friends from Walnut Creek and North Branch, who strengthened our hands by their visits during the meetings.

Spring Valley, Ohio—The meeting at Spring Valley, Ohio, is prospering under the ministry of W. E. McClure, a student from the Xenia Theological Seminary. A new and deeper interest is being awakened in all departments of the church.

Carmel, Indiana—Carmel Quarterly Meeting was held here December 8, 9 and 10. Three conferences were held on the 8th, Bible school in the forenoon, missionary in the afternoon and temperance at night. The programs were carried out by the four Monthly Meetings belonging to the Quarterly Meeting. On Saturday, Albert J. Brown of Indianapolis, preached the Quarterly Meeting sermon and at night gave an address on Evangelism. Both services on Sabbath were in charge of Charles Sweet from Muncie, Indiana. Gertrude Reinier, the pastor, ably assisted in all the services. The whole three days were occasions of great blessings from the Lord. Special music at all the services.

Sugar Plain Church, Thorntown, Ind.—Charles Lescault and wife were here in October and conducted a very helpful series of meetings for two and one-half weeks. The church greatly appreciates the spiritual uplift. Everyone seemed to enjoy these faithful messengers. A centennial celebration was observed November 19th by an address in the forenoon by Nathan Picket of Bloomington, Ind., subject, "What Friends have contributed to the making of the state." An historical program was given in the evening by the local church. Young Friends day was observed. The churches of the town joined in a union Thanksgiving service in our church Thursday at 7:30 in the evening. The address was given by the pastor of the M. E. church. After this we spent a social hour in the basement, which was very pleasant and helpful. Light refreshments were served.

THE Y. W. C. A.

Winter Conferences which undertake to bring to the city Young Women's Christian Association members something of the inspiration found in the well known Summer Conferences at Silver Bay, Lake Geneva, Seabeck, et cetera, are being held in Bangor, Buffalo, Denver, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Portland and a dozen other cities at this time. They mark the Tenth Anniversary of the organization of the National Board of The Young Women's Christian Associations in 1906, and consist of classes in Christian Fundamentals, Personal and Social Evangelism, Bible and Mission Study and Talks to Girls on the Abundant Life in Christ Jesus. These are held at the particular hours convenient for employed young women, older school girls and women at home. National secretaries, local pastors and Association leaders make up the staff for these five day Conferences which begin on a Tuesday evening with community fellowship and close on the following Sunday afternoon with an appeal for world fellowship.

THE AMERICAN SCHOOL PEACE LEAGUE IN INDIANA

At the recent meeting of the Indiana State Teachers' Association, R. L. Kelly was continued as chairman of the Indiana branch of the American School Peace League. During the year this branch has been instrumental in placing in the hands of every city and town superintendent of schools in Indiana a supply of the pamphlet, Problems About War, with a view of having them placed in the hands of every teacher of arithmetic in the State.

The branch also was instrumental in securing as lecturers on peace to the 11,000 teachers in attendance David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford Jr. University, and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of New York.

DUPLEX ENVELOPES AVAILABLE

A limited quantity of Duplex Envelopes may still be obtained from the office of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions at the reduced prices quoted here in the issue of Eleventh Month 30th. These envelopes are dated for use throughout the year 1917. They are printed in two colors and have prayer topics on the back. Any meeting not yet supplied will be able to effect a saving by ordering from the Board of Missions. Inquiries should be sent to the assistant secretary at the address given at the head of this page.

Subject—"Jesus the Life and Light of Men."

Lesson—John 1:1-18.

Golden Text—In him was life; and the life was the light of men. John 1:4.

For the next six months we are to study a series of lessons selected from the Gospel of John. In view of this extended study it would be very profitable for the student to review the entire Gospel in its relations to the other Gospels, as to authorship, sources, purpose, points of similarity and difference, etc. Some may wish to purchase an "up-to-date" commentary for this purpose; if so The American Friend office will be able to give satisfactory assistance in selecting such a work.

The first five verses of John's Gospel definitely fix the relation of Jesus of Nazareth to the Eternal God. The author's interpretation of his origin and character are clearly revealed regardless of our doubts of the current use and interpretation of the term LOGOS. Whatever that word meant, this Gospel gives it a definite and very significant turn. He, Jesus, was the Logos, and the Logos was Jesus. In the beginning was Jesus, and Jesus was with God, and Jesus was God, etc. This introduction is strikingly different from those found in the so-called Synoptic Gospels. We cannot discuss the reasons here; these must be gotten from some good introduction or commentary.

Verses 6-8 turn aside from the higher thought for a moment to show John's relation to Jesus, the Logos-Light. He was from God also but only a man, a messenger sent by God to prepare the way for the "Light of men."

Verse 9 is difficult to translate, and is therefore of uncertain meaning. The margin of the American Revised Version reveals this, but one thing is clear from it and the subsequent verses, Jesus was the true light, a light for all men, that he came into the world in which He had been the active creating force and yet that world which He had made, the people whom He had created, did not know Him when He came to them. A further fact is stated, there were a few who sufficiently recognized Him to accept Him and to them He gave the right to become children of God. The author also states a further doctrinal point, that those who become children of God are born into that state, not by the natural method but by a new birth, which is of God. This fact excludes the idea of salvation by virtue of having been born into any favored human race or family. Belief in His name is the key to the entrance leading to this new birth. Just what the author understood by the term "believe" is differently interpreted. Its most natural meaning would include accepting Jesus as the Messiah and an effort to follow Him in all that He wished the individual to do.

The Gospel now enters upon a claim which has been one of the mysteries to the modern mind; the claim that the Logos-God assumed the form of human flesh and lived with men—tabernacled or tented with men. To the ancients this was a very acceptable possibility, often the natural conclusion when a man manifested unusual powers. Paul and Barnabas were gods, so said the people of Lystra. Kings and emperors were frequently worshiped as gods. The gods often assumed human form and walked on earth for a time. The idea that a man could have a god for a father was far from new. It was a very plausible explanation for the unusual powers manifested by Jesus; but, of course, meant less to them, far less, than it means to us.

To the Jew, salvation had been by law. Jesus was to save men by virtue of grace and truth. The new salvation was not by works, but by faith in the light which had come.

Topic—Are You Evading Moral Issues? Matt. 12:22-30.

(Consecration Meeting)

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide, In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side."

—Lowell.

In Lincoln's day, slave holding was the moral issue.

What are the moral issues of today?

THE INDIANA CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION CONVENTION

The convention of The Indiana Christian Association at North Manchester, November 14th and 15th was a marked advance in some respects over previous meetings of the Association. Six different denominations were represented and the attendance ranged from 80 at the day sessions to 400 and 650 respectively at the two evening sessions. The addresses were of an especially high order. Dr. Fitzwater of the Moody Bible Institute in his address on "The Lodge all Sufficient" pointed out that the church was an organism rather than organization, although organization was used to promote its ends. This representation gave us, irrespective of our several church connections, a sense of our oneness in Christ. "One is your Master even Christ and all ye are brethren." This is something infinitely above and beyond anything that is offered by any organization of the world.

President Hartzler of Goshen College caught the attention of his audience when he said, "If a system is fundamentally right and only incidentally wrong, there is hope that it may be corrected, but if it is fundamentally wrong and only incidentally right the case with it is hopeless." And this he proceeded to show was the difference between the Church and the Lodge. The church displayed some incidental virtues but was fundamentally wrong. The conclusion was that we should give our strength to the one and shun the other.

J. M. Coleman of Bloomington, Indiana, president of the Association, gave an able address on "Secrecy and the Labor Union" in which he showed clearly that secrecy is a handicap rather than a help to organized labor.

Character in Reading.

The Youth's Companion does more than entertain: it affords the reader a mental and moral tonic. Its stories are not only well told, contributed by the best writers of stories, but they maintain the standards, reflect the ideals of the best homes. They do not throw a false glamour over the tawdry things of life. Rather do they depict the courageous, the healthful, the simple—the true life of the greater number with their adventures, their conflicts of temperament, their failures and successes. In 1917 The Companion will print 12 serials and story groups besides fully 250 single stories and sketches, all for $2.00. The Forecast for 1917, which we will send on request, tells all about the great features of the coming volume.

By special arrangement new subscribers for The Youth's Companion can have also McCall's Magazine for 1917—both publications for $2.10.

Our two-at-one-price offer includes:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues of 1917.
2. All the remaining issues of 1916.
3. The Companion Home Calendar for 1917.
4. McCall's Magazine—12 fashion numbers of 1917.
5. One 15-cent McCall Dress Pattern your choice from your first number of the magazine—if you send a 2-cent stamp with your selection.

CORRESPONDENCE

Eaton County, Mich.,

November 7, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

We were very much interested in an article in your paper some time ago from a young Friend near Wilmington, Ohio, in regard to a grange that was organized and held in a Friends' meeting house. This young Friend evidently feels that it has been a help, but he fails to state whether or not it has been a help spiritually, and since he does not give his address we would like to ask through the columns of your paper a few questions, viz., Do the three meetings in your township now have a larger attendance than from fifteen to fifty? If so, is the grange responsible? Does the church in which the grange is held have a larger attendance on First day than either of the other two meetings named? Have you had a revival in your church since the grange was organized?

We ask these questions because we are interested. We once had something similar under our own observation, and instead of the church increasing spiritually and in attendance there was a marked decrease. A man was placed at the head of this organization who was not a Christian, and frequently through the meeting this man would respond with an "Amen" which, to us, was sacrilegious.

They had in this meeting also what they called "prayer," but it was a mere printed form they had to go by. Sometimes it was read and other times committed to memory and repeated, and as all will agree, this, too, was sacrilegious. These people tried to hold a revival, but in vain; the people were more interested in their organization, and as soon as dismissed would gather in little groups and talk about the same. If you have something better, we would like to hear from you again through this paper; if not, we think the older Friends are right, for it will take all the religion out of the church, for such has been the fate elsewhere.

AN INTERESTED FRIEND.

MARRIED

Moon-Hoadley—At the home of the bride's parents, near Caldwell, Idaho, December 6, 1916, S. Ray Moon and Eva Hoadley. The groom is the son of Silas and Anna Moon, formerly missionaries in Alaska. Minister, Ezra Pearson. They will live at Greenleaf, Idaho.

BORN

Hunnicut—To Frank and Laura Hunnicutt of Wilmington, Ohio, November 14, 1916, a daughter, Susanna.

DIED

Davis—Sally B. Davis, died at the home of her nephew near Manilla, Indiana, January 7, 1916, in the 88th year of her age. She was a cheerful Christian and a life long Friend.

Beeson—Stephen Kersey Beeson, son of David and Hannah Beeson, was born in Parke county, Indiana, March 5, 1844, and died at Marshall, Indiana, November 27, 1916. Funeral services were held in the church in Marshall by Lindley M. Reagan, of Bridgport, Indiana, formerly pastor at Marshall. Interment at Old Poplar Grove cemetery.

Negus—Emily Jones Negus was born August 18, 1839, in Damascus, Ohio. She was converted when a child but reclaimed in 1869, and sanctified in 1870. She was a brithright Friend and was always active in this service throughout her life. For three years, she was a teacher among the colored people of Jackson, Miss. She was always deeply interested in mission work. She became a member of the Iowa Holiness Association in 1903, and found much fellowship and joy therefrom. She married Jason Negus in 1900 in her Ohio home. Since that time she has resided in Iowa, a part of it being spent in Springdale, the last eight years of which was lived in their home in West Branch, where, on the morning of November 26, 1916, she passed to her reward at the age of 75 years, two months and eight days.

THE BIBLE THAT IS MOST LIKELY TO PLEASE EVERYBODY

The Bible-Giving
Christmas
Plan

This movement has been inaugurated among Christian People to make at least one of their gifts a Bible, in honor of Him for Whom the great festival has been named.

"INTERNATIONAL" CLEAR NUTYPE TEACHER'S BIBLE

SELF-PRONOUNCING

While the text of the Bible does not change, new methods of type-making have produced a type that is larger in size, more easily read, and more restful to the eyes, for use in a book which is also more convenient in size and lighter in weight. The type used in this new Bible was moulded especially for the purpose. It is the largest, clearest type to be found in any Bible of like size.

THE MOST MODERN IDEAS IN BIBLE-MAKING. In addition to the large clear type and convenient size, the full contents also commend this Bible. It contains the Authorized Version of the Old and New Testaments, with sixty thousand references in the center column; has the names of the books of the Bible printed on outer edge for quick reference; has all proper names accented and divided into syllables, making pronunciation easy; has the most accurate, most usable aids to Bible study; and has seventeen colored maps.

NEW TYPE OF TEACHER'S AIDS TO BIBLE STUDY

The logical arrangement of the helps is another improvement and a great convenience. All the aids (over 400 pages), including Complete Concordance, Subject Index, Dictionary, etc., etc., are under one Alphabetical Arrangement instead of separate headings as in the old type of Bible. Furthermore, these new helps are illustrated and are the only helps printed from black-face type, which makes them more readable and useful.

HANDSOMELY BOUND IN FLEXIBLE LEATHER

This Bible is printed on thin rag paper especially made for it. Jet black ink is used in the printing to make the type stand forth clearly. Handsome, Flexible Leather Binding, with overlapping covers (like cut), red-under-gold edges, head-band and purple ribbon marker, all combine to make it the finest, most practical of Bibles—the most pleasing of all gifts.

Exact Size, 5½ x 8 inches.
Each Bible packed in a Handsome Decorated Christmas Box.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL.

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. Our school is much smaller than usual, though of better quality than the average in some years.
